The lessee of an inn covenanted to use and keep it open as an inn during the term, and not to do any act whereby the licences might become forfeited. The lessee having threatened to do certain acts, inconsistent with the first branch of the covenant, the lessor obtained an ex parte injunction restraining him from discontinuing to use and keep open the premises as an inn, and from doing any act whereby the licences might become forfeited, or be refused. But the injunction was afterwards dissolved, the court having no jurisdiction to restrain a person from discontinuing to use premises as an inn, which was the same in effect as ordering him to keep an inn; and no intention having been shown on the part of the defendant to violate the negative part of the covenant. Hooper v. Brodrick, 11 Sim. 47; 9 L. J., Ch. 321.

11. As to Building.

a. By Lessee.

Not to erect Buildings — Hoardings.]—The erection of wooden hoardings for the purpose of advertisement fastened to the demised premises constitutes a breach of a covenant not to "erect or make any other building, or erection, on any part of the demised premises." Pocock v. Gilham, 1 Cab. & E. 104.

—— Erection of Trellis-work Screen.]—The erection of a wooden trellis-work screen which is substantial, and intended to be permanent, is a breach of a lessee's covenant not to erect or build on the demised premises or any part thereof any other building whatsoever except a stable or coach-house. Wood v. Cooper, 63 L. J., Ch. 845; [1894] 3 Ch. 671; 8 R. 517; 71 L. T. 222; 43 W. R. 201.

A screen of this kind interfered with the access of light to a neighbouring house let by the lessor to another tenant, and irrespective of such interference it was held to be a breach of a covenant not to do anything which might be an annoyance to any tenant of the lessor, on the ground that a reasonable person, having regard to the ordinary use of such house for pleasurable enjoyment, would be annoyed by it. Tod-Heatley v. Benham (40 Ch. D. 80) applied. Ib.

To Erect Buildings—Whether Running with the Land.]—See ante, col. 1098.

To Build within Specified Period.]—A builder agreed to take some land on a building lease, and to erect houses within a specified period, the landowner making him an advance; there was a clause of forfeiture, in default of their being completed within the time:—Relief against a forfeiture was refused to the builder, it appearing that the landowner had fully performed his part of the contract. Croft v. Goldsmid, 24 Beav. 312.

A. having a leasehold estate, on which he had covenanted to erect buildings within a certain time, bequeathed it and also his personal estate (subject as to the latter, to the payment of his debts), to trustees for B. for life, with several limitations over. A. died before the time expired, leaving the covenant unperformed in part:—Held, that his general personal estate was liable to the performance of the covenant. Marshall v. Holloway, 5 Sim. 196.

To New Build.]—Where a man in a building lease covenants to new build the brick messuages on the premises, rebuilding some and repairing others is not a sufficient performance of the covenant; for the lessee must rebuild the whole; neither is the pulling down and rebuilding the fore and back fronts a rebuilding within the covenant; upon such a covenant the lessors are entitled to a specific performance. Sed secus of a covenant to repair. In this case, however, the court, instead of decreeing a specific performance, left it to a jury to ascertain the damages sustained, and directed an issue accordingly. London City v. Nash, 3 Atk. 512; 1 Ves. 12.

To build Houses of Particular Style.]—Injunction to restrain the breach of a covenant that buildings shall be erected upon a general plan refused, the covenantee having acquiesced in a partial deviation from the plan and not having made immediate application to the court. Roper v. Williams, Turn. & R. 18; 23 R. R. 169.

A landlord who relaxes in favour of some of his tenants, a covenant entered into for the benefit of all, is not entitled to an injunction to restrain the other tenants from infringing that covenant. Ib.

Equity will execute a covenant that lessee's erection shall correspond with adjoining houses. Franklyn v. Tuton, 5 Madd. 469.

By an indenture, a messuage and outbuildings in the city of London were demised by the plaintiff to the defendants, for the purpose of being pulled down and new buildings erected on the site. The lease contained a covenant that the defendants would, within four years, "rebuild on the site of the messuage in a substantial, workmanlike manner, a new house and premises, suitable for merchants' and dealers' counting-houses, and sale-rooms":—Held, first, that the covenant did not involve any obligation to erect the new house in the same manner and in the same style and shape, and with the same elevation as the old building. Low v. Innes, 4 De G. J. & S. 286; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1037; 11 L. T. 217.

Held, secondly, that even if it did, the implication would have been rebutted in the case before the court, inasmuch as the covenant stipulated that the new house and premises should be suitable for a purpose to which the old building was not applied. Ib.

The lease contained an agreement that such of the windows and lights in the new house and premises as occupied the site of ancient lights were to be considered as and should have all the rights of ancient lights:—Held, that this was merely an agreement between the parties amounting to an engagement by the lessees that, so far as they were concerned, and so far as they were owners of the adjoining property, the lights of the windows of the new house which should occupy the site of ancient lights should have the character of ancient lights; and that the extent of the covenant must be limited to such rights and such estate and interest as the landlords themselves might possess in the adjoining land. Ib.

The lease also contained a provision that certain entrances from the demised messuage and the yard in its rear into an adjoining court and gateway, and the right of carriage-way in respect of the messuage through such court, should be preserved:—Held, that the covenant must be construed with reference to the right of way, and the user of the right of way which had existed as far back as could be traced by evidence in respect of the demised premises. Ib.

Land let for specified Purpose—Erections inconsistent therewith—Injunction.]—An agreement between A. and B. provided that "Whereas the said A. is minded to provide a suitable residence and holding for the Roman Catholic officiating clergyman at and upon A.'s estate at L., and for that purpose to grant and let unto B. in trust for that purpose" certain lands at L. at a yearly rent, "to hold for and during such time and at all times hereafter, as there shall be and remain stationed at and upon the said hereby granted and demised lands and premises an officiating Roman Catholic clergyman at the chapel of L. duly appointed," &c. A clergyman in occupation of the land under this agreement placed upon it twenty movable huts which were occupied by tenants who had been evicted from their holdings upon A.'s estate:—Held, that the agreement was to grant and let for the specified purpose only; that the erection and maintenance of the huts constituted a user for a purpose other than that specified, and was a breach of the agreement which could be restrained by injunction. Kehoe v. Lansdowne (Marquis), 62 L. J., P. C. 97; [1893] A. C. 451; 1 R. 294; 57 J. P. 708—H. L. (Ir.)

Specified Number of Houses of specified Value.]—A lessee of land covenanted to build thereon two houses, with the approbation and under the inspection of the lessor's surveyor, and to expend in such building 400*l.* With the surveyor's approbation he built five houses on the land, no two of which were worth so much as 400*l.*, though all together were worth much more:—Held, that the covenant was substantially performed, and that there was no objection, on the ground of the deviation from its terms, under the circumstances, to the lessor's title. Hume v. Bentley, 21 L. J., Ch. 760; 16 Jur. 1109.

To make Area—Implied Obligation to keep open.]—An owner of a manor demised lands, part of the manor, for a long term, with a covenant to build houses thereon, and to make an area round such houses. The houses were built and an area made, according to the terms of the lease. The lessee subsequently subdemised one of the houses, by an instrument which did not recite, or refer to, the original lease, or contain any covenant respecting the area, but did contain a covenant to do suit and service at the courts of the manor. The sublessee, more than twenty years before the commencement of the suit, built over a portion of the area, and subsequently assigned his sub-lease to the defendant:—Held, that the covenant to make an area imposed a continuing obligation to keep the area open. Herbert v. Maclean, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 84.

Held, also, that the covenant to do service in the manor courts was sufficient to have put the sub-lessee and his assignee on inquiry, and that the assignee was bound to carry out the terms of the original lease. Ib.

To build Wall.]—Agreement for a lease, with a covenant that the lessee should build a wall round the land. A lease was executed by the lessor, but not by the lessee, which did not contain the covenant to build:—Held, after the death of the lessee, that a suit could not be maintained against his administrator having assets for a specific performance of the original agreement. Blosse v. Prendergast, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 373.

Liability of Mortgagee of Building Lease.]—Mortgagee of a building lease, where the lessee died insolvent, was decreed to build on the ground, and not to quit the lease, though content to lose his money. Anon., 2 Freem. 253.

Scots Law—Restrictions in Feu Contract—Enforcement by Feuars of Adjoining Plots.]—It is settled by a series of decisions in the law of Scotland that where it appears that the restrictions in a feu contract are entered into for the benefit of other feus, either already existing, or to be created by the superior thereafter, the restrictions may be enforced by each co-feuar as far as his interest is concerned. But the fact of several feuars of neighbouring plots of building land in the same street holding from a common superior does not, by itself, entitle one of those feuars to claim the benefit of restrictions contained in the feu contract of another, unless some mutuality and community of rights and obligations is otherwise established between them, which can only be done by express stipulations in their respective contracts with the superior, or by reasonable implication from reference in both contracts to a common plan or scheme of building, or by mutual agreement between the feuars themselves. Hislop v. Leckie, 6 App. Cas. 560—H. L. (Sc.)

A.'s author was a party to a feu contract of a piece of land upon which a house was already built, and he was taken bound not to build any other buildings on the said piece of land except offices. The adjoining pieces of land were feued off, some being taken not to build and others having that right. It was not indicated in A.'s feu that the restrictions were imposed for the benefit of the co-feuars, beyond the facts that the feus were all given out nearly at the same time; that some of the conditions inserted in the feus are similar to each other; and that the houses being built in a square, produce a considerable degree of uniformity. B. and C., proprietors of a neighbouring feu, sought to prevent A. building a carriage show-room on the ground intervening between his house and the street of the square, and raised an interdict with the "consent and concurrence" of the superior; there was no condescendence or pleas in law for the superior:—Held (1), that the restrictive conditions as to building in A.'s feu contract were not in any sense jus quæsitum tertio; and (2), that the superior was not a party complainant in the action for own separate interest; and therefore B. and C. being strangers to A.'s contract, A. ought to have been assoilsied from the action. Ib.

b. By Lessor or on Severance of Land.

Not to build on Adjoining Land.]—Injunction granted to restrain the commissioners of woods from building on part of the site of Carlton Palace, in violation of one of the terms of an agreement entered into by them with the plaintiffs for a building lease of an adjoining part of the site. Rankin v. Huskisson, 4 Sim. 13.

An act of parliament empowered the commissioners of woods and forests to make certain new streets according to a particular plan therein referred to, and to lease and enter into agreement for leasing the grounds in the lines of the new streets. Under this power leases were granted of two plots of ground upon which the lessees erected two particular houses in the line of one of the new streets. Each of the leases described the plot of ground which it demised, as being "on the north side of a new street then forming there, called," &c., "and as fronting towards the south on the said new street." The plan referred to in the act of parliament exhibited an open space in front of the sites of these houses, but that plan was not mentioned in either of the leases. The intended streets were completed, and the space in front of the houses was left open. The commissioners of woods and forests, and the paving committee of the parish, afterwards gave permission to certain persons to erect an equestrian statue in the open space, and those persons proceeded to place it upon a part of that open space, but without interfering with the line of the carriage way of the new street in which the houses stood. The lessees of the houses thereupon filed a bill to restrain the erection of the statue, alleging, that upon the treaty for the leases, the lessees were shewn the plan of the intended new street, and parts adjacent, by which it appeared that the space in question was to be quite open and free from all obstructions, and that it was upon the treaty represented and stated, that opposite the two houses a free passage would be left of certain dimensions, which would be contracted by the erection of the statue: they also alleged that the proposed erection would diminish the value of their property, and be a public and a private nuisance:—Held, that these circumstances did not entitle the lessees to an injunction to restrain the erection of the statue. Squire v. Campbell, 1 Myl. & C. 459; 6 L. J., Ch. 41.

Demise of a plot of ground, particularly described in the map drawn in the margin of the lease, with a covenant by the lessee to build and keep in repair, and a covenant by the lessor that the lessee should enjoy vistas through the adjoining trees as on the map, on which two points were marked A. and B., with a note that between those points a vista was to be maintained, the trees in it not to exceed a height of fourteen feet. A hedge and a space of five feet on other lands of the lessor adjacent to the boundary of the demised lands were marked on the map, with a note: "This hedge to be maintained by the grantor;" which note was not signed or incorporated by a reference in the lease. The lessor subsequently demised the adjacent land to C., who cut down the hedge and erected a wall between it and the boundary. The lessee filed an injunction to restrain C. from destroying the hedge, and from erecting the wall or any building inconsistent with the hedge being maintained for the benefit and advantage of the lands demised:—Held, that the court would not decree the specific performance of such a covenant, as being too vague, and in the nature of a covenant to repair. Armstrong v. Courtenay, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 138.

The defendant held two plots of building land, B. and C., under a lease which contained a covenant to build the houses not less than thirty feet apart, the effect of which was to secure to the houses on plot B. a sea view over plot C. H. having entered into a treaty with the defendant for an underlease of B., made inquiries of the defendant as to what could be built on the land in front. The defendant replied that he could not build on C. closer than thirty feet, as his lease did not allow it. H., after having inspected the original lease, took an underlease of B., containing a covenant by the defendant that he, his executors, administrators and assigns, would observe the lessee's covenants in the original lease. The defendant afterwards surrendered his lease to the ground landlord, took a new lease not containing the old restrictions, and commenced building on C. in a way which would obstruct the sea view from the houses on B. belonging to the plaintiff, who was the assignee of H.:—Held, that the rights of H. under the defendant's covenant to observe the covenants in the original lease, were not affected by the defendant's surrender of that lease, and that the plaintiff was on that ground entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant from building in contravention of those covenants. Piggott v. Stratton, 1 De G. F. & J. 33; 29 L. J., Ch. 1; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 129; 1 L. T. 111; 8 W. R. 13. Affirming 1 Johns. 341.

Held, also, that even if, by reason of the surrender, the covenant was gone, the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction on equitable grounds, for that what the defendant had said to H. amounted to a representation that the defendant could not, during the term of his lease, build otherwise than in a particular way, which representation he was bound to make good. Ib.

The building lease contained a covenant by lessor to perform all the covenants contained in the original lease:—Held, that this was limited in its operations to the period during which the original lease was subsisting unsurrendered. Ib.

Erecting Wall instead of Houses.]—Land was sold, subject to a covenant entered into with a neighbouring landowner, that "no buildings, except dwelling-houses" to front a certain road, should be built thereon. The purchaser threw the land into his garden, and inclosed it by erecting thereon, along the side of the road, a wall 8 ft. 6 in. high for the greater part, but carried up in one part to the height of 11 ft. 6 in., for the purpose of forming the back of vineries and a greenhouse. In a suit for an injunction to restrain the wall from continuing:—Held, that the boundary garden wall 8 ft. 6 in. high was no breach of covenant, but the raising it for the purpose of the vineries was; but no substantial injury being caused, the court awarded damages instead of granting an injunction in respect of the breach. Bowes v. Law, 39 L. J., Ch. 483; L. R. 9 Eq. 636; 22 L. T. 267; 18 W. R. 640.

Erecting Stable instead of Houses.]—A covenant to the effect that private houses only, of a certain minimum value, are to be built on certain plots of land, is not broken by the erection on one of them of a stable with a bedroom over it, of such dimensions and in such a position that it would still be possible to build a house of the stipulated value upon the plot. Russell v. Baber, 18 W. R. 1021.

Covenant to erect Mill—Pleading.]—A., who was lessee of a farm, covenanted with B., his lessor, to convey and carry all such materials as should at any time during the continuance of the term, be required in erecting a certain thrashing mill, which mill B. covenanted with A. to erect during the continuance of the term for the use of A. and the occupier of an adjoining farm. B. pleaded first, that within a reasonable time from the date of the deed, and during the continuance of the term, he began to provide the necessary materials for erecting the mill; and whilst it was in progress, A. desired him not to erect it until he should be requested by A.; and lastly, a plea of leave and licence during the term. Upon special demurrer it was held that both these pleas were insufficient. Cordwent v. Hunt, 8 Taunt. 596; 2 Moore, 660; 20 R. R. 578.

12. As to Timber and Trees.

Who has Property in.]—The general property in trees, or that which is likely to become timber, is in the landlord; and the general property in bushes or trees, not timber, is in the tenant; and the landlord cannot maintain trespass against a stranger for cutting bushes and thorns growing in a hedge, although cut improperly, if afterwards assented to by the tenant. Berriman v. Peacock, 2 M. & Scott, 524; 9 Bing. 384; 2 L. J., C. P. 23.

The landlord of a tenant from year to year, although there is no reservation of the timber on the premises, may support an action against a third person for carrying it away after it has been cut down. Ward v. Andrews, 2 Chit. 636.

A farmer who raises young fruit trees on the demised lands for filling up the lessee's orchards is not entitled to sell them. Wyndham v. Way, 4 Taunt. 316; 13 R. R. 607.

Otherwise of a nurseryman by trade. Ib.

Where a tenant from year to year is a nurseryman and market gardener, and plants trees for carrying on his business in both these trades, he may, at the determination of his tenancy, remove the young trees planted in the way of his business as a nurseryman, which were planted there for sale, but not those which he uses as a market gardener. Wardall v. Usher, 3 Scott (N.R.) 508; 10 L. J., C. P. 316; 5 Jur. 802.

And should any of the growing trees planted with the former object be left in the ground, so as to become fruit-bearing trees, it is then a question for the jury, in what character they were at the time of their asportation; whether they were saleable in the course of the business of the outgoing tenant as a nurseryman, or whether they belonged to the landlord, and the taking of them away constituted a trespass. Ib.

Where no custom is alleged of a tenant's power to cut down timber, it must be taken according to the common law, by which he has no power over it. Edwards v. Heather, Sel. Ch. Ca. 3.

Covenant not to cut, remove, or destroy.]—A covenant in an indenture of lease for twenty-one years from Michaelmas, that the tenant should not during the term cut down any of the coppice of less than ten years' growth, or at any unseasonable time of the year, but the landlord agreeing to pay to the tenant at the end of the term the value "of all such growth of coppice as should be then standing and growing," was held, according to its grammatical construction (uncontrolled by any other part of the instrument shewing a different intent), to bind the landlord, to whom the words of the covenant were to be attributed, to pay the tenant for the value of all the coppice of less than ten years' growth left standing on the demised premises at the end of the term, though no special consideration appeared on the face of the deed for the landlord's agreeing to make a compensation to the tenant for the value of such part of the coppice as the tenant was not entitled to cut. Love v. Pares, 13 East, 80.

A covenant in a lease to deliver up at the end of the term all the trees standing in an orchard at the time of the demise, "reasonable use and wear only excepted," is not broken by removing trees decayed and past bearing from a part of the orchard which was too crowded. Doe d. Jones v. Crouch, 2 Camp. 449.

A covenant not to remove or grub up trees is broken by removing trees from one part of the premises to another; and so it is by taking away the trees, even if the lessee plants a greater quantity than he takes away, unless those taken away were dead. Doe d. Wetherell v. Bird, 6 Car. & P. 195.

A lease was granted of a farm and tenement, and the quarries of paving and tile-stone in and upon the premises, with liberty and power to open and work the quarries, subject to a rent, excepting the quarries, and to the payment of a royalty for the stone obtained. Out of this demise was reserved and excepted "all timber trees likely to become timber, saplings, and all other wood and underwood which then were, or which should at any time thereafter be standing, growing, and being on the premises, and all mines or minerals which should thereafter be opened and found;" and the lease contained a covenant not "to commit any waste, spoil, or destruction, by cutting down, lopping, or topping any timber trees, or trees likely to become timber, saplings, or any other wood or underwood," and a power of re-entry for non-payment of rent, or if the lessee should commit any waste, spoil, or destruction by any of the ways or means aforesaid, and should not perform and keep the covenants contained in the lease. Assignees of the term having cut down and grubbed up saplings, wood and underwood for the necessary purposes of working a quarry on the premises:—Held, that the effect of the covenant was that the tenant should not so cut any of the trees excepted, so that such cutting should amount to the excess of the right which it was intended that he should exercise, and therefore that cutting them in a manner necessary to a reasonable exercise of the power to get the stone was no breach of the covenant. Doe d. Rogers v. Price, 8 C. B. 894; 19 L. J., C. P. 121.

Licence to cut — Lessor having Option to purchase.]—Under a liberty in a lease for the lessee to cut down and dispose of all timber and coppice, where there was also a proviso to give notice, in writing, to the lessor of the lessee's intention that the former might have the option of purchasing, a lessee gave a bonâ fide notice, and the lessor disclaimed any intention of purchasing:—Held, that the lessee might afterwards proceed to cut down the whole, without giving a fresh notice, at such seasons as suited his convenience even though the lessor had in the meantime parted with his interest to another. Goodtitle d. Luxmore v. Saville, 16 East, 87; 14 R. R. 305.

To pay for Trees planted by Tenant.]—A covenant by the lessor to pay for all trees planted by the lessee does not run with the land. Grey v. Cuthbertson, 2 Chit. 482; 1 Selw. N. P. 498; 4 Dougl. 351.

Covenant by Lessor to provide Timber for Repairs.]—Covenant to deliver timbers (growing on the premises) sufficient for the repairs thereof; averment, that there was timber growing on the premises sufficient for the repairs, but defendant had not delivered it. Plea, that there was not timber growing on the premises sufficient and proper for the repairs. Semble, that the covenant meant that the timber should be sufficient in quality as well as quantity, and that the plea was good (not having been demurred to) without stating that there was not timber sufficient for any part of the repairs. Snell v. Snell, 7 D. & R. 249; 4 B. & C. 741; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 44.

A lessor devised land by deed, excepting all timber, timber trees, and other trees, bushes and thorns, other than such bushes and thorns as should be necessary for the repair of the fences; the lessee covenanted to keep the fences in repair during the term, finding all materials, except that the lessor should find rough wood for such repairs, if growing upon the premises; and the lessor covenanted, during the term, to provide the lessee sufficient rough timber stakes and bushes, if growing on the premises, for doing such repairs:—Held, that the provision as to bushes and thorns necessary for repairs was not an exception out of the exception; but that all trees, bushes and thorns were excepted out of the demise, whether part of the fences or not, or whether necessary for repairs or not; and that on the trial of an action against wrongdoers, for cutting some of the bushes and thorns, a direction by the judge, that, if they were cut by them, the landlord was entitled to a verdict, was right, without previously putting any question to the jury whether the bushes, &c., were part of the fence, or were necessary for repairs. Jenney v. Brook, 6 Q. B. 323; 1 New Sess. Cas. 323; 13 L. J., Q. B. 376; 8 Jur. 782—Ex. Ch.

Tree delivered as House-bote.]—The bailiff of a manor assigned to a servant in April, pursuant to the terms of a lease, a tree for house-bote; the bailiff was discharged in July, and the tenant cut down the tree in October:—Held, a sufficient delivery, and that the tenant was entitled to fell the tree in October. Courtenay v. Fisher, 4 Bing. 3; 5 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 4; 29 R. R. 487.

Cutting—When Waste.]—It is not waste in a lessee to cut down trees and timber, unless they are planted for the ornament or shelter of the house, or perform some important function, such as supporting a bank or the like, and provided also, that he cuts them so as not to destroy the germinative or reproductive power of the stools. Trees, even of the kinds that may become timber by attaining a growth of twenty years, may, if under that age, be cut by a lessee, provided they are cut seasonably, that is, according to what has been done either with the same trees, if springing from old stools, or other trees in the same place or the same neighbourhood, on former occasions. Dunn v. Bryan, 7 Ir. R., Eq. 143.

The principle that the cutting of saplings or young timber unfit to be felled is, under certain circumstances, equitable waste, does not apply to cases between landlord and tenant when the cutting of them is seasonable. Ib.

The mere cutting of a hedge in such a manner as that it will grow again is not waste; but grubbing up the thorns of which it is composed, or allowing the germins to be destroyed by the cattle, or cutting them so unseasonably or improperly as that they will not grow again and replace what has been cut, is waste. Ib.

Exception of Trees.]—If trees are excepted out of a demise, waste cannot be committed by cutting them down; and, therefore, ejectment cannot be brought as for waste committed in or upon the demised premises. Goodright d. Peters v. Vivian, 8 East, 190.

By an exception of "all trees, woods, coppice wood, grounds, of what kind or growth soever," apple trees are not excepted. Wyndham v. Way, 4 Taunt. 316; 13 R. R. 607.

An exception in a lease of lands in Dorsetshire of "all timber trees and other trees, but not the annual fruit thereof," does not include apple trees. Bullen v. Dening, 8 D. & R. 657; 5 B. & C. 842; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 314.

Where trees are excepted in a lease, the land on which they grow is necessarily excepted also; consequently, if the tenant cuts down the trees, the landlord may maintain trespass for breaking and entering his close and cutting down the trees. Rolls v. Rock, 2 Selw. N. P. 1287.

A demise "reserving all wood and underwood, timber and timber trees, standing, growing, or being on the demised premises, or at any time thereafter to stand or grow thereon, with full and free liberty of ingress and egress to take and carry away the same," secures to the owner of the inheritance the benefit of such trees as were upon the premises at the time of the demise. Galway v. Baker, West, 467; 7 Cl. & F. 379.

By a lease of a tenement, described as containing nineteen acres, save and except all timber trees, woods, underwoods, &c., six acres of the soil which, at the time of the lease, were covered with growing woods, are not excepted, but pass to the lessee. Legh v. Heald, 1 B. & Ad. 622; 9 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 98.

A parol demise of land reserved to the landlord "all the hedges, trees, thorn-bushes, fences with lop and top":—Held, that such reservation operated as a licence to enter the land for the purpose of cutting and carrying away the trees. Hewitt v. Isham, 7 Ex. 77; 21 L. J., Ex. 35.

Remedies for Injuries.]—If a lessor, during the term, cuts down trees growing upon the demised premises, which are fit only for firewood, and the lessee takes them away, trespass will not lie against the lessee, at the suit either of the lessor or his vendee. Chapman v. Patch, 8 D. & R. 651. S. C., nom. Channon v. Patch, 5 B. & C. 897; 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 316.

A lessor during the term cut down some oak pollards growing upon the demised premises, which were unfit for timber:—Held, that as a tenant for life or years would have been entitled to them if they had been blown down, and was entitled to the usufruct of them during the term, the lessee could not, by wrongfully severing them, acquire any right to them, and consequently that he or his vendee could not maintain trespass against the tenant for taking them. Ib.

A tenant for a term of years cannot maintain trespass de bonis asportatis for timber cut down on the demised premises. Evans v. Evans, 2 Camp. 491 ; 11 R. R. 777.

In an action of waste for cutting timber, the defendant cannot give in evidence, even in mitigation of damages, that the timber was cut for the purpose of necessary repairs, or that, turning out to be unfit for that purpose, it was exchanged by the lessor's consent for other timber, which was applied to the repairs. Simmons v. Norton, 7 Bing. 640 ; 5 M. & P. 645 ; 9 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 185.

—— Action by Executor.]—An executor is entitled to sue a lessee of his testator on a covenant not to fell, stub up, lop, or top timber trees, excepted out of the demise, such breach having been committed in the lifetime of the testator. Raymond v. Fitch, 2 C. M. & R. 588 ; 5 Tyr. 985 ; 5 L. J., Ex. 45.

—— Injunction against Landlord — Consent to Tenant's Plan of Improvement.]—Injunction to restrain the landlord from cutting ornamental trees on a lawn during the term, upon his conduct amounting to a consent to the tenant's plan of improvement, laying out the lawn, &c. Sending a surveyor to mark out trees is a sufficient ground for an injunction. Jackson v. Cator, 5 Ves. 688.

16. Other Covenants.

a. Express.

That Trains should stop at Station.]—In a lease by a railway company of their refreshment-rooms at Swindon, the company covenanted with the lessee that all trains carrying passengers, not being goods trains, or trains to be sent express, or for special purposes, and except trains not under the control of the company, which should pass the Swindon station either up or down, should, save in case of emergency or unusual delay arising from accidents, stop there for refreshment of passengers for a reasonable period of about ten minutes, and that as far as the company could influence the same, trains not under their control should be induced to stop for the like purpose. The postmaster-general, having in the exercise of his power required that trains carrying mails should not stop at Swindon more than five minutes :—Held, first, that those trains were not as regards stopping under the control of the company ; and secondly, that the company was not by their covenant prohibited from carrying passengers by such trains. Phillips v. G. W. Ry., 41 L. J., Ch. 614 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 409 ; 26 L. T. 157 ; 20 W. R. 562.

To leave Stock.]—Decree against lessee of alum works to prevent a breach of covenant, to leave stock of a certain amount at the expiration of lease. Ward v. Buckingham (Duke), cited 10 Ves. 161.

To raise China Clay and make Merchantable.]—A lease of china clay granted to the lessees licence to "dig, work, and search for china clay," . . . and "to raise and . . . wash, cleanse, prepare, and make merchantable and fit for sale, and to dispose of the same and to exercise the powers" granted by the lease, subject to the rent and royalties thereby reserved ; and the lessees covenanted to work for china clay in the most proper and effective manner, and with a reasonable number of able-bodied men kept employed on the works at all reasonable and usual working time so that the china clay might be raised and made merchantable as speedily as possible. There was a proviso for forfeiture and re-entry on failure in the performance of the covenants. For some months no fresh clay was got, but only the old stock was worked. Jessel, M.R., having refused to restrain the lessors from having possession, on the ground of forfeiture for breach of covenant : —Held, on appeal, that the refusal was right. Kinsman v. Jackson, 42 L. T. 558 ; 28 W. R. 601 —C. A.

To get Clay.]—A covenant in a lease binding the lessee to "get the demised clay to the fullest practicable extent consistent with the means of sale of bricks and tiles to be made therefrom," does not bind the lessee to go on working at a loss, even though a means of sale (at an unremunerative rate) might have been found for bricks made out of the demised clay. Newton v. Nock, 43 L. T. 197.

Fences—Enforcing Performance by Mandatory Injunction.]—Where the lessee of a brickfield, contrary to the covenants in his lease, caused the fall of one of the fences bounding the field by excavating the clay from under it :—Held, that a mandatory injunction in a negative form should be granted to compel the restoration of the fence to its former condition. Ib.

To make Road—Power to alter Roadway for particular Purpose.]—A lease contained a covenant by the lessors to make a road, and power was reserved to the lessors to alter the roadway for a particular purpose, provided they made another. Grantees of the lessors proposing to alter the roadway :—Held, that though the particular purpose specified in the covenant might not be their real motive, yet if they chose for its sake to do the particular act mentioned in the covenant, the lessee had no right to prevent their altering the roadway accordingly. Butt v. Imperial Gas-light Co., 15 W. R. 92.

Power to take land for a particular purpose under a covenant is distinguishable from the same power under an act of parliament. Ib.

By Lessor to make Street within One Year—Breach, whether continuing.]—Lands described as bounded by a proposed new street were demised in 1872 to a lessee, whose interest became vested in the plaintiff in 1888. By the lease the lessor covenanted to make the new street within one year from the date thereof. The lessor died in 1878. The trustees of his will and his executor assigned his interest in the lease to the defendants. The street not having been constructed, the plaintiff sued the defendants in 1892 for breach of the covenant to make the street within one year :—Held, that the covenant was broken once for all when the year had elapsed, and long before the plaintiff's title accrued, and that therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Morris v. Kennedy, [1896] 2 Ir. R. 247—C. A.

Covenant in Lease of Chapel that no one should officiate but Regular Clergyman.]—The plaintiffs were the owners of a proprietary chapel, and in 1801 granted a lease of the chapel to one B., containing a covenant by the lessee not to "permit or suffer any clergyman or person to officiate in the said chapel, or perform public divine service therein, but such as shall be a regular clergyman of the Church of England." The lease was afterwards assigned to the defendants G. and F., who allowed D. to preach and perform divine service in the chapel. D. was a clergyman of the Church of England who had been inhibited by the bishop from performing divine service within the diocese in which the chapel was situated. The vicar of the parish had not consented to the performance by D. of service within the chapel:—Held, that "regular clergyman" meant a person who could officiate in the chapel without being guilty of irregularity, and that, as it was irregular of D. to pray and preach in defiance of the inhibition and without the vicar's consent, D. was not a regular clergyman, and must be restrained by injunction from continuing to officiate. Foundling Hospital v. Garrett, 47 L. T. 230—C. A.

To use Opera House only for Operas, and improve for that purpose—Non-user, whether a Breach.]—A lease of the Opera House contained a covenant by the lessee, that he would not convert the same to any other use than for performing operas, but would use his utmost endeavours to improve the same for that use and purpose:—Held, that the covenant was not broken by the lessee not opening the theatre for two seasons, and that it ought to be limited to keeping the house itself properly decorated and improved, with scenery and all appointments necessary to an opera house, and not that a lessee should be bound, at a loss, to keep it open for theatrical performances. Croft v. Lumley, 6 H. L. Cas. 672; 27 L. J., Q. B. 321; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 903; 6 W. R. 523.

To employ Particular Person to draw Assignments and Underleases—Assignment of Underlease.]—A lease granted by the warden and commonalty of the Mercers' Company contained a covenant that on the assignment of the lease or the grant of any underlease thereunder, the clerk to the company should be employed or a fine of 5*l.* be paid. The purchaser from an under-lessee of his underlease raised the objection that the assignment should be prepared by the clerk to the Mercers' Company or the penalty paid:—Held, that the objection was untenable as the covenant did not apply to the assignment of an underlease. Collett v. Young, 33 W. R. 543. Cp. Haywood v. Silber, 30 Ch. D. 404; 54 L. T. 108; 34 W. R. 114—C. A.

To employ Porter to perform certain Duties—Specific Performance.]—The defendants demised to the plaintiff a residential flat, the lease containing a covenant by the lessors to appoint a resident porter who should act as the servant of the tenants, and be constantly in attendance, either by himself or, in his temporary absence, by some trustworthy assistant. The defendants appointed as porter a man who spent a large part of his time elsewhere in performing other duties, and did not provide an efficient assistant:—Held, that this was not a contract of which the court would decree specific performance, and that the plaintiff must be left to his remedy in damages. Ryan v. Mutual Tontine Westminster Chambers Association, 62 L. J., Ch. 252; [1893] 1 Ch. 116; 2 R. 156; 67 L. T. 820; 41 W. R. 146—C. A.

To pay for Damage done in working Mines—Enforcement — Parties.] — Lease of lands is granted, reserving mines, &c., and a power of working them, lessor paying for damages done, which mines were leased to B. On bill for performance of covenants against representatives of lessor, B. need not be party. Green v. Poole, 5 Bro. P. C. 504.

Covenant violating Restrictions of Prior Settlement.]—Equity will not decree specific execution of a covenant in a lease violating the restrictions of a prior settlement, of which the lessee had notice. Crafford v. Oliver, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 315.

Licence to take Ice from Canal.]—A canal company, in consideration of the lessee's expenditure on certain ice-houses on the banks of the canal, granted a lease thereof, with licence to take ice from a part of the canal:—Held, that the licence was not exclusive, but that it was a grant of sufficient ice to enable the lessee to fill the ice-houses; and that, so long as the lessee was able and willing to take this quantity of ice, the lessors could not derogate from their grant by subsequent licences which would interfere with it. Newby v. Harrison, 1 John. & H. 393; 4 L. T. 397; 9 W. R. 849. Affirmed, 4 L. T. 424.

To keep Trespassers off Plantation.] — A dwelling-house, with grounds and ornamental water, were demised, together with the control of a plantation (which was on the opposite side of the ornamental water, and belonged to the lessor, but was not demised to the lessee), for the purpose of preventing trespassers thereon, but so as not to interfere with the persons employed by the lessor, his heirs or assigns. The lease referred to a plan on which the plantation was represented:—Held, that on the construction of the lease, as explained by the plan, the lessor was not at liberty, during the term, to destroy the plantation; and an injunction was granted to restrain him from so doing. Nicholson v. Rose, 4 De G. & J. 10.

Impossibility of Performance.]—The defendants agreed to let certain gardens and music-hall to the plaintiffs on four specified days to come, for the purpose of giving a series of concerts, at and for a specified rent for each of the days. The defendants were to provide a band of music and certain entertainments, and to issue advertisements of the entertainments. The plaintiffs were to pay 100*l.* in the evening of each of the days, to receive and take all the money paid by persons entering the gardens, and to provide the necessary artistes for the entertainments. After the agreement was entered into, and before the day arrived for the first concert, the music-hall was accidentally destroyed by fire:—Held, that as the existence of the hall was necessary for the performance of the contract, the defendants were excused from liability in respect of its non-performance, and that no action would lie against them. Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826; 32 L. J., Q. B. 164; 8 L. T. 356; 11 W. R. 726.

Effect of Notice to Treat.]—A lessee is not freed from his covenants by a notice to treat, served by a railway company until the actual assignment of his interest. Mills v. East London Union, 42 L. J., C. P. 46; L. R. 8 C. P. 79; 27 L. T. 557; 21 W. R. 142.

Contract of Indemnity—Sub-Tenant—Covenants in Original Lease.]—The contract of a sub-tenant to perform the covenants of the head lease is a contract of indemnity. The plaintiff let certain premises to the defendant by a lease, which contained a covenant to repair. The defendant underlet the premises to H., by an agreement made "subject in all respects to the terms of the existing lease and the covenants and stipulations contained therein." The plaintiff sued the defendant for breaches of the covenant to repair; and notice of the plaintiff's claim was given by the defendant to H., who was subsequently made a third party under Ord. XVI. r. 18. The two cases were tried separately by an official referee, who reported that 54*l*. 2*s*. 6*d*. was due in each case as damages for non-repair. Judgment was given for the plaintiff for that sum against the defendant, who, in his pleadings, claimed from the third party the amount of the judgment and the costs of defending that action:—Held (per Brett, L.J., and Cotton, L.J.), that the defendant could recover these costs from the third party as damages, since the agreement between them amounted to an implied contract to indemnify him against such costs. Hornby v. Cardwell, 51 L. J., Q. B. 89; 8 Q. B. D. 329; 45 L. T. 781; 30 W. R. 263—C. A.

Insertion of Pursuant to Agreement.]—See ante, D. 7 (cols. 791 et seq.).

b. Implied.

That Property fit for Purpose for which it is Let.]—On a demise of land, or the vesture of land (as the eatage of a field), for a specific term at a certain rent, there is no implied obligation on the part of the lessor that it shall be fit for the purpose for which it is taken. Sutton v. Temple, 12 M. & W. 52; 13 L. J., Ex. 17.

Therefore, where A. agreed in writing to take the eatage of twenty-four acres of land from B. for seven months, at a rent of 40*l*., and stocked the land with beasts, several of which died a few days afterwards from the effects of a poisonous substance which had accidentally been spread over the field without B.'s knowledge:—Held, that A. was not entitled, therefore, to throw up the land, but continued liable for the whole rent. Ib.

There is no contract, still less a condition, whereby a lease would be void, implied by law on a demise of ascertained real property only, that it is fit for the purpose for which it was let. Hart v. Windsor, 12 M. & W. 68; 13 L. J., Ex. 129; 8 Jur. 150.

Where an intended lessor of a particular house knows that the house is in a ruinous state, and dangerous to occupy, and that its condition is unknown to the intended lessee, and that the intended lessee takes it for the purpose of residing in it, he is not bound to disclose the state of the house to the intended lessee, unless he knows that the intended lessee is influenced by his belief of the soundness of the house in agreeing to take it, or unless the conduct of the lessor amounts to a deceit practised upon the lessee. Keates v. Cadogan (Earl), 10 C. B. 591; 20 L. J., C. P. 76; 15 Jur. 428.

Not to use Adjoining Property so as to Injure Tenant's Goods.]—A landlord who lets part of his property for the purpose of a particular trade, is not to be taken as having entered into an implied contract precluding him from a reasonable and ordinary use of the remainder, on the ground that such use injures a particular class of his tenant's goods, it not having been known to him at the letting, and not being a matter of common knowledge that that particular class of goods was liable to be so injured, nor is such user by the landlord a breach of his covenant for quiet enjoyment. Robinson v. Kilvert, 58 L. J., Ch. 392; 41 Ch. D. 88; 61 L. T. 60; 37 W. R. 545—C. A.

To procure Land.]—A lease of a colliery contained an implied covenant on the part of the lessor to procure land by compulsory powers, in order to enable the lessees to make a railway to a neighbouring canal, without which they had no access to any available market. The lessor did not procure the land, but brought an action against the lessees for rent. The lessees, acting under the advice of their solicitor, paid the rent, and subsequently proceeded to arbitration under a clause in the agreement, and an award was made in their favour. The lessor having commenced a second action for rent, the lessees applied to the Court of Chancery for an injunction to restrain the action; for specific performance of the agreement to provide the land; for a declaration that the award was binding, and for a rectification of the lease if necessary:—Held, that the colliery being valueless without the land, and the provision of the latter being the basis of the agreement, the documents did not carry out the intention; that the whole matter was a failure, and the parties, as far as possible, must be put back in their original positions. Acraman v. Price, 24 L. T. 487; 19 W. R. 364.

That no Weeds grow on Farm.]—There is no implied warranty on the part of a lessor who lets land for agricultural purposes, that no noxious plants are growing on the demised premises. Erskine v. Adeane, 42 L. J., Ch. 835; L. R. 8 Ch. 756; 29 L. T. 234; 21 W. R. 802.

Letting Furnished Apartments.]—In an agreement to let a furnished house there is an implied condition that the house shall be fit for occupation at the time at which the tenancy is to begin, and if the condition is not fulfilled the lessee is entitled thereupon to rescind the contract. Wilson v. Finch Hatton, 46 L. J., Ex. 489; 2 Ex. D. 336; 36 L. T. 473; 25 W. R. 537.

The defendant agreed to rent the plaintiff's furnished house for three months from the 7th of May, but having at the beginning of the intended tenancy discovered that the house was unfit for habitation, owing to defective drainage, he refused to occupy it. The plaintiff repaired the drains, and on the 26th of May tendered the house in a wholesome condition to the defendant, who refused to occupy or to pay any rent. The plaintiff having sued for the rent and for use and occupation:—Held, that the state of the house at the beginning of the intended tenancy entitled the defendant to rescind the contract, and that he was not liable for the rent or for use and occupation. Ib. See further, post, cols. 1281 et seq.

To burn Lime.]—Where a lessee covenanted that he would, at all times and seasons of burning lime, supply the lessor and his tenants with lime at a stipulated price, for the improvement of their lands and repair of their houses:—Held, that this was also an implied covenant that he would burn lime at all such seasons; and that it was not a good defence to plead that there was no lime burned on the premises out of which the lessor could be supplied. Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Gould, 2 B. & Ald. 487; 21 R. R. 367.

Licence to Remove Fixtures.]—An underlease of a nursery ground contained an express covenant by the under-lessee to deliver up all landlord's fixtures thereon at the end of the term:—Held, that a representation and covenant by the grantors of the underlease that the under-lessee should be at liberty without hindrance from any one, to remove trade fixtures during the term, and that the grantors had not entered into covenants inconsistent with such right, could not be implied. Porter v. Drew, 49 L. J., C. P. 482; 5 C. P. D. 143; 42 L. T. 151; 28 W. R. 672; 44 J. P. 267.

To raise Certain Amount of Coal or Clay in each Year.]—A declaratiom alleged, that the plaintiff, being lessee of a coal-mine, underlet his interest in the same to the defendant, who covenanted to raise and work 13,000 tons of coal in each year, and pay at the rate of 8*d.* per ton royalty for the same, or pay that amount, namely, 433*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, as fixed rent, whether the coals should be wrought or not, and also 9*d.* for each ton over and above that quantity, to whatsoever extent the same might be wrought. Breach, that he had not raised 13,000 tons in each year, and paid at the rate of 8*d.* per ton for the same, or paid 433*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, as fixed rent. The defendant pleaded that, by the fair and proper working and getting of the coal claimed, the same was, before and at the commencement of the half-year, greatly exhausted, and a small portion only, being less than a fourth part of such 13,000 tons, was left, and remaining to be worked and raised:—Held, that this was an absolute covenant by the defendant, that he would raise 13,000 tons of coal yearly; or, if not, that he would pay the fixed rent; and that there was no implied condition that there existed coals to the amount of 13,000 tons yearly capable of being worked. Bute (Marquis) v. Thompson, 13 M. & W. 487; 14 L. J., Ex. 95. S. P., Mellers v. Devonshire (Duke), 16 Beav. 252; 22 L. J., Ch. 310; 1 W. R. 44.

A. demised to B. certain pits of clay on his land for twelve years, B. to pay 2*s.* 6*d.* per ton for all clay raised half-yearly. B. covenanted to raise not less than 1,000 tons, nor more than 2,000 tons yearly:—Held, that this was not an absolute covenant by B. that he would raise 1,000 tons of clay yearly, or, if not, that he would pay the rent, and that there was an implied condition that there existed clay to the amount of 1,000 tons yearly, capable of being raised. Clifford v. Watts, 40 L. J., C. P. 36; L. R. 5 C. P. 577; 22 L. T. 717; 18 W. R. 925.

Not to seek Reversionary Lease.]—The reservation of a reversion by the intermediate landlord does not create an implied contract between him and the sub-lessee, that the latter shall not seek to obtain for his own benefit a reversionary lease of the premises from the head landlord. Maunsell v. O'Brien, 1 Jones, 176.

To pay Fine over and above Rent.]—A covenant by a lessee, his heirs and assigns, to pay a fine of 40*l.* upon the expiration of a term of sixty-one years, does not amount to a reservation obligatory upon the tenant in possession, to pay the fine over and above the rent reserved. Inchiquin v. Burnell, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 376.

N. OTHER RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF LANDLORD AND TENANT.

1. Tenant's Power to Dispute Title.

Principle.]—A tenant may not deny his landlord's title, because, if that title is bad, the tenant's first duty is to give up possession which he received from the landlord, and not to defend an action against him. Agar v. Young, Car. & M. 78.

Who Estopped—Assignee.]—An assignee of a lease by indenture is estopped by the deed which estops his assignor. Taylor v. Needham, 2 Taunt. 278; 11 R. R. 572.

An assignee of a void lease, who has, on coming into possession, had notice that the lease was held under a particular person, to whom the former tenant has paid rent, is estopped from disputing the title of that person in replevin. Johnson v. Mason, 1 Esp. 89.

A., gaining possession under an assignment of a lease for years, and paying rent under it, shall not be allowed to change the nature of such possession, and to set up a title to the fee by accepting a conveyance of the fee from persons claiming adversely to those under whom the lease is held, although the right be in such persons; nor will the act of A., and those under whom he derives, treating such interest as freehold for several years, conveying and settling it as such, give a title different from that under which the possession was originally gained. Saunders v Annesley (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 73.

Tenants, by agreement among themselves, doing anything to embarrass the tenure, landlord has a right to the assistance of equity. Ib., 108.

—— Lessee.]—Ejectment for two stamping-mills on the demise of H. The mills had been let to a mining company by H. from year to year, and notice to quit had been given by him to the company. On the day of the demise in the declaration H. was a partner in the company, and the defendant who was another partner, defended on behalf of the company. At the trial, it was ruled that the defendant was estopped from disputing the title of H., although H. had admitted, in an answer in chancery which was in evidence, that he had no legal title:—Held, that the defendant was estopped from disputing H.'s title, notwithstanding H. was a partner with him in the company. Francis v. Doe d. Harvey, 4 M. & W. 331; 1 H. & H. 362.

A lessee, after executing a lease, cannot dispute the title of either of his lessors. Wood v. Day, 1 Moore, 389; 7 Taunt. 646.

But he may shew that his landlord's title has expired. Neave v. Moss, 1 Bing. 360; 8 Moore, 389; 2 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 25.

Where A. claimed to hold lands under B. as a security for a debt:—Held, that he could not defend an ejectment by the assignees of B. after his bankruptcy, on the ground that the grant under which B. derived his title from the crown was void. Doe d. Biddle v. Abrahams, 1 Stark. 305.

Upon non est factum pleaded, the lessee in possession cannot controvert the title of his lessor to demise. Friend v. Eastabrook, 2 W. Bl. 1152.

A tenant covenanted in a lease to deliver up at the expiration of his term certain fixtures on the premises. The term expired on the 1st April. On the 10th the landlord demanded possession. On the 13th the tenant received notice from a mortgagee that he was entitled to possession, and that he demanded payment of the rent, and on the same day the tenant bought the mortgagee's interest. The landlord having afterwards brought an action for breach of the covenant, in not delivering up the fixtures:—Held, that the tenant was not estopped from denying the landlord's title to the fixtures. Watson v. Lane, 11 Ex. 769; 25 L. J., Ex. 101; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 119; 4 W. R. 293.

R., who had possession, but no title, let lands by parol to the defendant for a term of two years, within which period R. by deed assigned the lands to the plaintiff, who, before the expiration of the two years, demanded possession from the defendant and brought an ejectment against him:—Held, that the defendant was estopped from denying the title of R., under whom the plaintiff derived his title, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Ward v. Ryan, Ir. R. 10 C. L. 17—Ex. Ch.

Where a person entitled as coparcener to a portion of the rents and profits of land makes a lease of the whole, under which the tenant enters and pays rent as for the whole until lessor's death, the tenant is estopped from denying that the heir, and privy in blood to the lessor is entitled to the whole of the land. Weeks v. Birch, 69 L. T. 759.

Upon an information to set aside a lease for ninety-nine years of charity lands, the defendants, the lessees, set up a title adverse to the lease; upon the merits it was held that there was no ground for the defence; but the court was of opinion that if the merits had been otherwise, the defendants were estopped, and could not dispute the title, while they retained the possession. Att.-Gen. v. Hotham, 3 Russ. 415. Affirming Turn. & R. 209; 24 R. R. 21.

Semble, the lessees ought not to have been permitted to enter into evidence, upon the principle that the plea of nil habuit in tenementis could not have been pleaded at law. A mere husbandry lease of charity land for ninety-nine years at a uniform rent cannot be supported. Ib.

The act of a tenant disclaiming his landlord's title, and admitting title in a third person, shall not affect his landlord's title, if the landlord have no knowledge of, or does not acquiesce in, such act. Horenden v. Annesley (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 624.

But if the landlord, having notice of such act of disclaimer, does not proceed for the forfeiture, but acquiesces, the Statute of Limitations will run against him, as in ordinary cases. Ib.

Lessee cannot dispute the title of his landlord. White v. Foljambe, 11 Ves. 344. S. P., Wilson v. Townshend (Lord), 2 Ves. J. 696; 3 R. R. 31.

Evidence of the existence of a tenancy is conclusive in favour of the landlord's title; and after such evidence to the satisfaction of a jury, the tenant cannot be allowed to prove even a title in himself to the premises in question, during any part of the time covered by the tenancy. Doe d. Humphrieys v. Hawkes, 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 216.

A tenant, though threatened with suits at law on a title adverse to his landlord's, cannot make them interplead, semble. Smith v. Target, 2 Anstr. 529.

A tenant cannot file an interpleading bill against his landlord. Where one claimant seeks a certain rent from the tenant in possession, and the other unliquidated damages for use and occupation, he cannot make them interplead. Johnson v. Atkinson, 3 Anstr. 798.

Tenant cannot file a bill of interpleader against his landlord on notice of ejectment by a stranger, under a title adverse to that of the landlord. On suspicion of collusion an inquiry into the circumstances was directed, and, the report confirming the fraud, the bill was dismissed with costs to the landlord, as between attorney and client, to be paid by the plaintiff and his solicitor, the latter to shew cause why he should not be struck off the roll. Dungey v. Angove, 2 Ves. J. 303; 2 R. R. 217.

A. B. leases to C. D. the T. ferry and all the rights of shore thereunto appertaining, with a covenant by A. D. not to erect any building upon the ferry or landing place without the consent in writing of A. B. C. D., upon obtaining verbal permission from A. B., commenced building a bridge upon the foreshore; and subsequently, in January, 1852, executes a deed tendered to him by A. B.'s solicitor, acknowledging, in consideration of permission to complete the bridge, the right to insist upon its removal, and agreeing to pay C. D. the yearly rent of 20*l.* for the concession, and 500*l.* on failure to remove the bridge after notice. C. D. subsequently discovers that the title to the foreshore upon which the bridge is built is claimed by the Crown—a circumstance in the knowledge of A. B. in January, 1852—obtains a lease of the soil from the Crown, but continues to pay rent to both A. B. and the Crown. Upon notice from A. B. to remove the bridge, and action brought for the 500*l.* penalty accruing from non-compliance, C. D. files a bill against A. B. to set aside the deed of January, 1852, for an account of the rent paid, and in restraint of the action:—Held, upon demurrer, that C. D. being in possession either under the original lease or the deed of 1852 could not set aside that contract without also giving up possession; and that in order to retain possession, he could not set up the adverse title of the Crown. The bill containing no offer to restore the property to A. B., demurrer allowed. Willoughby v. Chamberlaine, 5 W. R. 328.

To an action of debt for rent, a plea admitted the demise by the plaintiff and stated that afterwards the plaintiff petitioned the Court of Insolvent Debtors, and that an assignee was appointed to whom the premises were assigned; and that the plaintiff having been permitted to remain in possession and authorised by the assignee to demise, afterwards the assignee gave notice to the defendant to pay the rent to him, whereby he became liable to pay to the assignee:—Held, bad, for as on the plea it was admitted that the demise by the plaintiff still existed, and as there was no direct allegation that the demise was made by the plaintiff as agent to the assignee, the defendant was not at liberty to set up the title of the assignee against the claim of the plaintiff under the demise. Partington v. Woodcock, 4 L. J., K. B. 239.

Party in possession under the title of A., taking a conveyance, though for valuable consideration, from one who claims a title adverse to that of A., is guilty of covin, which would avoid the transaction at law. Underwood v. Courtown (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 64.

A. B. having been in possession of a dwelling-house from 1822, without paying any rent for the same, by his will, dated in 1837, devised the same upon trust for sale for the benefit of his wife for life, and afterwards for his children. A. B. died in 1837, and his widow took out letters of administration with the will annexed, and entered into possession of the house, a portion of which she let in 1850 to C. D., the eldest son of A. B., as a weekly tenant. The widow died in 1852, and thereupon C. D. claimed the house as occupant, contending that A. B. had not at his death a devisable interest in it:—Held, that it must be taken that the widow had been in possession under the will, and that C. D. was her tenant, and therefore that C. D. could not claim as occupant. Hawkshee v. Hawkshee, 23 L. J., Ch. 521.

Where a lease, renewable for ever, had expired by the dropping of the lives, so that, in fact, only a tenancy from year to year existed, but the owner in fee of the lands, the tenants, and their sub-tenants, had all been acting for years on the terms of the lease, which was at length duly renewed:—Held, that no one of them could subsequently set up in equity claims adverse to the several characters they bore under such lease and the sub-lease. Archbold v. Scully, 9 H. L. Cas. 360.

An owner in fee of land, prior to mortgaging it for a term of years, put A. into possession. A. occupied for twenty-five years without payment of rent or written acknowledgment of the mortgagor's title. A. then conveyed in fee to the plaintiff, and after attorning to him as his tenant gave up possession for a sum of money to B., the representative of the mortgagor, and to C., the executor of the mortgagee (whose mortgage had been kept alive by payment of interest). B. and C. afterwards joined in a conveyance of the premises to the defendants:—Held, in ejectment, that the defendants were not estopped from setting up their title to the premises. Ford v. Ager, 2 H. & C. 279; 32 L. J., Ex. 269; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 804; 8 L. T. 546; 11 W. R. 1073.

—— Under-lessee.]—If B., claiming under A., lets lands for a year to C. and dies, and A. afterwards brings an ejectment against C., C. cannot dispute the title of A. Barwick d. Richmond Corporation v. Thompson, 7 Term Rep. 488; 4 R. R. 499. And see Bryan d. Child v. Winwood, 1 Taunt. 208; 9 R. R. 751.

Where a tenant occupied apartments in a house belonging to a wife, and paid rent to the husband, who subsequently granted a lease of the whole house to the plaintiff:—Held, that having occupied with notice of the lease, he could not impeach its validity, nor controvert the plaintiff's title. Rennie v. Robinson, 1 Bing. 147; 7 Moore, 539; 1 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 30; 25 R. R. 604.

—— Parties to an Arbitration.]—Where the lessor of the plaintiff and the defendant in ejectment have before referred their right to the land to an arbitrator, who has awarded in favour of the lessor; the award concludes the defendant from disputing the lessor's title in an ejectment. Doe d. Morris v. Rosser, 3 East, 15.

—— Tenant by Attornment.]—A tenant who attorns to a party from whom he did not receive the possession, is not estopped from shewing want of title in such party. Cornish v. Searell, 1 M. & Ry. 703; 8 B. & C. 471; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 254.

Where the avowants proved an attornment made by the plaintiff after ejectment brought against him seven years before the commencement of the replevin suit, during which period it did not appear that the rent had been demanded; and the plaintiff offered to prove a feoffment to himself by the person under whom the avowants claimed; and certain letters written by such persons, containing expressions adverse to the avowants' claim, were rejected, on the ground that the plaintiff could not be permitted to dispute his tenancy after an attornment:—a new trial was granted. Gravenor v. Woodhouse, 7 Moore, 289; 1 Bing. 38; 25 R. R. 582.

—— Lessor.]—In ejectment, a person defending as landlord is bound by the same estoppel as the tenant in possession. Doe d. Manvers v. Mizen, 2 M. & Rob. 56.

A lessor in an ejectment brought to recover a cellar is not estopped by his deed from going into evidence to shew that the cellar was not intended to be demised. Doe d. Freeland v. Burt, 1 Term Rep. 701; 1 R. R. 367.

On Payment of Rent.]—Payment of rent is primâ facie evidence of the title of the landlord. Doe d. Clun v. Clarke, Peake's Add. Cas. 239.

A tenant who has paid rent cannot set up the title of a third person, in bar of an ejectment by his lessor. Doe d. Bristowe v. Pegge, 1 Term Rep. 760, n.; 4 Dougl. 309.

The plaintiff had been let into possession of premises, as tenant for a year, by N., six months' notice to be given on either side, and had paid rent to him. Before the end of the year the defendant went to the plaintiff and claimed title, and desired that the rent in future should be paid to himself. The plaintiff, in order to be satisfied of the truth, went with the defendant to N., who admitted the defendant's title, and that the plaintiff must consider him landlord:—Held, that the plaintiff, who assented and subsequently paid rent to the defendant, could not contest his title. Hall v. Butler, 2 P. & D. 374; 10 A. & E. 204; 8 L. J., Q. B. 239. See Jew v. Wood, 1 Cr. & Ph. 185; 5 Jur. 954.

P., N., and the plaintiff, occupied successively premises, under a lease that had been granted in 1809, by parties having no right to make a lease. The defendant in 1827 became possessed of the fee. In 1829 and 1831 respectively, the defendant distrained on P. and on N. for arrears of rent, which they paid:—Held, that these payments amounted to such an acquiescence by P. and N. in the title of the defendant, that they, and those deriving possession from or under them, were estopped from disputing it; and this although the defendant himself produced the lease of 1809, and failed to shew that it had been assigned to him. Cooper v. Blandy, 4 M. & Scott, 562; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 45; 3 L. J., C. P. 274.

G. demised premises to D., who entered and paid him rent. During the term, a third party, T., disputed G.'s title, and they agreed to be bound by the opinion of a barrister, who decided in T.'s favour. G. thereupon delivered up the title deeds, and permitted T.'s attorney to tell D., the tenant, that he must, in future, pay the rent to T. as his lord. D. then paid rent accordingly, but G. afterwards distrained upon him for the same rent:—Held, that G.'s claim of title as landlord to D. had expired; that his conduct amounted to an admission of that fact, and that D. was not estopped from alleging it; and, per Lord Denman, C.J., that G. was estopped from setting up his relation of landlord against the defendant, having himself induced D. to pay rent to another person. Downs v. Cooper, 2 Q. B. 256; 1 G. & D. 573; 11 L. J., Q. B. 2; 6 Jur. 622.

Land was vested in trustees to apply the rents to the repair of a parish church. Those trustees in 1818 demised to S. for ten years, and again in 1828 for ten years more, which lease expired in 1838. During the lease S. assigned to the plaintiff, and after the expiration of it the plaintiff continued in possession under the trustees, paying rent to them. The trustees afterwards, and after the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, came into operation, viz. in 1842, assigned by deed to new trustees, two of whom were the churchwardens of the parish at the time that a distress for rent was made:—Held, that the payment of rent to the old trustees was evidence of a new taking under them as tenant from year to year, which precluded the plaintiff from contesting the title of the old trustees, and that the new trustees, who claimed under them by deed of assignment, had a good title by estoppel. Gouldsworth v. Knights, 11 M. & W. 337; 12 L. J., Ex. 282.

—— Assignee of Reversion—Jus tertii.]—Where a person claiming to be assignee of the reversion receives rent from the tenant by fraud or misrepresentation, such payment is no evidence of title; but where there is no fraud or misrepresentation such payment is primâ facie evidence of title and the tenant can only defeat that title by shewing that he paid the rent in ignorance of the true state of the title, and that some third person is the real assignee of the reversion and entitled to maintain ejectment. Hence, in an action for rent by the alleged assignee of the reversion, where rent had been paid by the tenant to the agent of the alleged assignee, it was held to be no defence for the tenant merely to shew that the alleged assignee had no title to the reversion. Carlton v. Bowcock, 51 L. T. 659.

Other Acknowledgment of Title.]—The defendant, in March, 1832, took premises from F. and B., "agents for the trustees of the joint estates of T. and S. B." Upon the trial of an action for use and occupation by the plaintiffs, "as trustees of the joint estate of T. and S. B." against the defendant, it appeared by the plaintiffs' own evidence that in 1831 they were trustees for the estate of S. B. only:—Held, that the defendant was estopped from taking advantage of this discrepancy, having, in 1832, taken the premises of the plaintiffs as trustees of the joint estate. Fleming v. Gooding, 4 M. & Scott, 455; 10 Bing. 549; 3 L. J., C. P. 214.

If one party takes an interest in land under another, although that interest is wrongfully acquired, he cannot afterwards dispute the title of the person under whom he took that interest. Doe d. Johnson v. Baytup, 4 N. & M. 837; 3 A. & E. 188; 1 H. & W. 270; 4 L. J., K. B. 263.

A. having, without title, entered upon land, and built a cottage, afterwards accepted a lease (by indenture) from B.; C., claiming the land as his own, paid to A. 20*l.* to give up the possession to him:—Held (in ejectment by B. against C.), that A. estopped himself from controverting the title of B., and that C. was bound by the estoppel, as having come in under and received the possession from B. Doe d. Bullen v. Mills, 4 N. & M. 25; 2 A. & E. 17; 1 M. & Rob. 385; 4 L. J., K. B. 10. See Doe d. Rutzen v. Lewis, 6 N. & M. 764; 5 A. & E. 277; 2 H. & W. 162.

In replevin, the landlord's title, under which the tenant has gained possession of the premises, cannot be disputed, although the tenant is prepared with evidence to shew that the premises have been fraudulently conveyed to the landlord, and that the actual title is vested in another person. Parry v. House, Holt, N. P. 489.

Previously to 1812, a person built a house on a piece of waste ground, and, before he acquired a title to it, gave up possession to the tenant of the adjoining land, who held it under a lease granted in 1812. The latter let the premises to the defendant:—Held, in ejectment by the landlord of the adjoining land against the defendant, that the latter was estopped from denying the title of the tenant, and the tenant from disputing that of the landlord. Doe d. Wheble v. Fuller, 1 Tyr. & G. 17.

On Mistake or Misrepresentation.]—Where a tenant, by mistake or misrepresentation, pays rent to a person not entitled to demand it, he is not precluded by such payment from giving evidence, on a plea of non tenuit, in replevin against the supposed landlord, to shew that the latter is not entitled to the rent. Rogers v. Pitcher, 1 Marsh. 541; 6 Taunt. 202.

An acknowledgment of title by a tenant, in one who claims as heir-at-law of the person under whom the tenant had previously held, will not preclude the latter from calling in question the title of the claimant, under a plea of non tenuit, if it appears that the acknowledgment proceeded from a misrepresentation or misapprehension of the nature of the title set up. Gregory v. Doidge, 11 Moore, 394; 3 Bing. 474; 4 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 159.

Payment of rent to, or even an express agreement with, one who claims to be landlord, does not preclude the tenant from afterwards shewing that the party claiming had no title, and that the payment or other acknowledgment was induced by misrepresentation or made under mistake, the tenant not having been originally let into possession by the claimant. Claridge v. M'Kenzie, 4 Scott (N.R.) 796; 4 Man. & G. 143; 11 L. J., C. P. 72.

A. demised a house and lands to B., and afterwards, being embarrassed, assigned the premises and all his personal estate to C. A. told B. that he had assigned the premises, and requested him to give C. an acknowledgment, whereupon B. gave C. a shilling, and subsequently agreed with C. to give up possession to him of the house and lands respectively, at the usual times, reserving an allowance for his improvements. Afterwards, and while the premises were still in B.'s occupation, A. became bankrupt, and C. brought ejectment. The assignees under A.'s commission defended as landlords, and contended that the assignment to C. was invalid, A. having become bankrupt when he made it:—Held, that the acknowledgments above mentioned did not estop B., or the assignees as representing him, from contesting C.'s title on the above ground, such acknowledgments having been made in consequence of A.'s representations, in which he suppressed the facts rendering the assignment invalid. Doe d. Plevin v. Brown, 2 N. & P. 592; 7 A. & E. 447; W. W. & D. 677; 8 L. J., Q. B. 49.

A landlord of premises dying, the tenant, whose term had not expired, paid rent to the devisee, and signed an agreement for a further period of occupation, on being told that the premises were devised to him:—Held, that, in ejectment against the tenant by the devisee, he could not offer evidence that the devise was void by reason of incapacity in the testator, no ground being shewn for imputing fraud to the devisee in the communication made by him to the tenant. Doe d. Marlow v. Wiggins, 4 Q. B. 367; 3 G. & D. 504; 12 L. J., Q. B. 177; 7 Jur. 529.

Title or Interest, Limited or Defective.]—A lessee for years, who covenants to deliver up possession of the premises, at the expiration of the term, to his lessor, his heirs and assigns, is not estopped by such covenant from shewing, after the death of the lessor or the determination of the lease, that the lessor was only tenant for life of the premises demised. Doe d. Strode v. Seaton, 2 C. M. & R. 728; 1 Tyr. & G. 19; 1 Gale, 303; 5 L. J., Ex. 73.

The interest of a tenant for life and a reversioner are the same, and therefore a lessee who has paid rent to the first cannot set up title in another person as an answer to an action by the latter after the death of the former. Doe d. Colemere v. Whitroe, D. & R., N. P. C. 1; 25 R. R. 769.

If a lessor, who has only an equitable title, grants a lease, he has, as against his lessee, a good title by estoppel. Doe d. Marriott v. Edwards, 6 Car. & P. 208; 3 N. & M. 193; 5 B. & Ad. 1065.

A., having mortgaged to B., demised to C., reserving a power of re-entry, and afterwards mortgaged to D. all his interest. C. may set up the title of D. as an answer to an ejectment brought by A. under the clause for re-entry. Ib.

W., a lessee of premises for a term of seventy-five years, mortgaged the lease to T., and joined with him in an indenture, by which, after reciting the mortgage, the premises were demised to J. for twenty-one years. The mortgage was assigned to S., and by indenture, to which S. and W. were parties, after reciting the lease to J., that lease was assigned to M. This assignment contained a covenant by M. and W., that M. would not demise or assign the premises without the licence and consent of W., with a proviso for re-entry if he did. M. paid rent to W., and afterwards assigned the premises to K. without the licence or consent of W. In ejectment by S. and W.:—Held, first, that M. was not estopped from shewing that W. was not the legal owner of the reversion, but mortgagor only, and that W., having a mere equitable interest, could not recover. Saunders v. Merryweather, 3 H. & C. 902; 35 L. J., Ex. 115; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 655; 13 W. R. 814.

Held, secondly, that S. could not recover, because no right of re-entry was reserved to him. Ib.

In an action for use and occupation, under the issue of non assumpsit, the defendant may give in evidence that the plaintiff had mortgaged the premises before the defendant came into occupation, and that the mortgagee had given notice to the defendant not to pay to the plaintiff any rent becoming due after such notice. Waddilove v. Barnett, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 538; 2 Scott, 763; 4 D. P. C. 347; 1 Hodges, 395; 5 L. J., C. P. 145.

Obedience to the mortgagee's notice as to rent due before the notice must be specially pleaded. Ib.

A lease, granted under a power contained in a settlement, recited the title of the lessor, and shewed that he had only an equitable interest; a right of re-entry for a breach of covenants in the lease was reserved to the lessor and his assigns:—Held, that the lessee was not estopped from disputing the title of the lessor so disclosed in the lease. Greenaway v. Hart, 14 C. B. 940; 2 C. L. R. 370; 23 L. J., C. P. 115; 18 Jur. 449; 2 W. R. 702.

By a will, a power was given to a tenant for life to demise for twenty-one years, and to executors to mortgage in fee or for years. In 1812, after the testator's death, the tenant for life made a grant for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live; in 1814, he demised, under his power, for twenty-one years; in 1828, the executors mortgaged for 1,000 years, under their power. To an action by the mortgagee for rent arising under the lease for twenty-one years:—Held, that the lessee could not set up as a defence the interest of the grantee for ninety-nine years. Bringloe v. Goodson, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 726; 6 Scott, 502; 1 Arn. 322.

If A. is put into possession of a cottage by parish officers, and the lord of the manor prevails on A. to give up possession of the cottage to him, and the lord of the manor puts B. into possession, and the parish officers bring an ejectment against B., B. cannot set up a title in the lord of the manor, as, under these circumstances, neither the lord of the manor nor B. can set up any title which A. could not set up; and if the cottage really belonged to the lord of the manor, he must bring an ejectment for it. Doe d. Haden v. Burton, 9 Car. & P. 254.

Where an occupier of a house paid rent to churchwardens, and the latter afterwards demised the house by lease for a term to A., with notice to the tenant that he must consider A. as his landlord:—Held, that the tenant might impeach the lease, and shew that the lessee had no title derived from the churchwardens. Phillips v. Pearce, 8 D. & R. 43; 5 B. & C. 433; 29 R. R. 284.

In defence to an ejectment it may be shewn that the parties under whom the plaintiffs claim had no title when they conveyed to him, although the defendant himself claims by a conveyance from the same parties, if the latter conveyance was subsequent to that which the defendant seeks to impeach. Doe d. Oliver v. Powell, 1 A. & E. 531; 3 N. & M. 616.

Although the lessee when sued in covenant by the lessor cannot dispute the lessor's title, yet, when sued by the assignee of the lessor, he may deny that the lessor had such a title as could pass the right of action to the assignee. Seymour v. Franco, 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 18; 31 R. R. 347.

Expiration of Lessor's Title—Expiration or Surrender of Term.]—In ejectment by landlord against tenant, whose lease is expired, the latter is not barred from shewing that his landlord's title is expired. England d. Syburn v. Slade, 4 Term Rep. 682; 2 R. R. 498. S. P., Doe d. Jackson v. Ramsbottom, 3 M. & S. 516.

Payment of rent by a tenant to his landlord after the title of the latter has expired, and after the tenant has received notice of an adverse claim, does not amount to an acknowledgment of title in the landlord or to a virtual attornment; unless, at the time of such payment, the tenant heard the precise nature of the adverse claim, or how the landlord's title had expired. Fenner v. Duplock, 9 Moore, 32; 2 Bing. 10; 2 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 102.

T. held premises under a lease from B., and paid rent to B., and to his personal representative after his death. On the expiration of the lease, T. surrendered the premises to the defendant:—Held, that the defendant could not dispute the title under which T. came in. Doe d. Manton v. Austin, 2 M. & Scott, 107; 1 L. J., C. P. 152.

A tenant may shew that his landlord's title is at an end, in an ejectment against him by the latter; but where such action was brought by the reversioner whose interest was the same as that of the tenant for life, and the tenant had paid rent to the reversioner:—Held, that he could not shew that the reversionary interest was at an end; but that he might shew some prior title in the person under whom he claimed to hold. Doe d. Colemere v. Whitroe, D. & R., N. P. C. 1; 25 R. R. 769.

A defendant in ejectment, who has paid rent to the lessor of the plaintiff, may shew that his landlord pending the term, sold his interest in the premises. Doe d. Lowden v. Watson, 2 Stark. 230.

The defendant, after being let into possession of premises by P., and paying rent to him, paid one quarter's rent to the plaintiff, to whom P. had agreed to demise the premises for a long term. In an action by the plaintiff for the succeeding quarter's rent:—Held, that the defendant might shew that the agreement between P. and the plaintiff was put an end to, and that the rent had been paid to P. Brook v. Briggs, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 572; 2 Scott, 803; 5 L. J., C. P. 143.

In an action for rent, the tenant may shew that the title of his landland has expired during the tenancy, though he continues to occupy the premises, and has not been evicted. Mountney v. Collier, 1 El. & Bl. 630; 22 L. J., Q. B. 124; 17 Jur. 503; 1 W. R. 179.

Where, in an action by a landlord against his tenant for use and occupation, the tenant offers in evidence a document shewing that the landlord's title has ceased, the document is admissible, because the property has passed to another who has a right to sue him for the same use and occupation; but when it appears that, under the document in question, the property would have passed from the plaintiff before the time of the use and occupation for which he sued, the document is not admissible, on the usual legal maxim that a tenant cannot deny his landlord's title. Agar v. Young, Car & M. 78.

A. let land to B. on a tenancy from year to year, which he continued to hold for several years after A.'s title had determined, paying rent to A., and he at length gave up possession on a notice to quit from A. Subsequently to the determination of A.'s title, but before B. had given up possession, B. underlet to C. C. paid rent to B. as long as B. continued to hold, but paid no rent to anyone subsequently. In ejectment by A. against C., after B. had given up possession:—Held, that it might be presumed, as a matter of fact, that a new tenancy from year to year had been commenced by B. after A.'s title had ceased, and that C. therefore could not dispute A.'s title. L. & N. W. Ry. v. West, 36 L. J., C. P. 245; L. R. 2 C. P. 553.

The defendant held, as tenant from year to year to the plaintiff, two distinct holdings—one at a rent of 63*l.* and the other of 21*l.*—the gale days of both being the same: the plaintiff granted his estate by way of mortgage, but continued in possession and receipt of the rents, and, afterwards, in his rentbooks consolidated the two holdings into one, at an increased bulk rent of 103*l.*, which was paid by the defendant. The plaintiff served notice to quit in his own name alone, and brought an ejectment in his own name without joining the mortgagee:—Held, that these facts afforded no evidence of the creation, after the mortgage, of a new tenancy, so as to estop the defendant from shewing that the plaintiff's title had passed from him to the mortgagee. Delmege v. Mullins, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 209—Ex. Ch.

Tenant may file interpleader against his landlord, where it arises on act of landlord subsequent to lease. Cowtan v. Williams, 9 Ves. 107.

—— Lessee must renounce Title.]—In an action for use and occupation, where the defendant has come in under the plaintiff he cannot shew that the plaintiff's title has expired, unless he solemnly renounced the plaintiff's title at the time, and commenced a fresh holding under another person. Balls v. Westwood, 2 Camp. 11.

What amounts to a Denial of Lessor's Title—Setting up Long Term.]—A., being tenant for life, under a power of leasing, created in 1763, demised to the defendant in 1826. The lease was not a good execution of the power, and in 1844, after the death of A., the reversioner brought an ejectment against the defendant, the demise being laid by B. only. It appeared at the trial that in 1708 a term of a thousand years was created in the property in question for certain purposes, and to attend the inheritance, and that in an indenture of the 1st of March, 1757, the indenture creating the term was recited, and the executor of the surviving trustee of the term was required to assign it to attend the inheritance:—Held, that the defendant was not estopped from setting up the term, as he did not thereby deny the general title of B. but protected his own lease, which was consistent with such title. Doe d. Egremont (Earl) v. Langdon, 12 Q. B. 711; 18 L. J., Q. B. 17; 13 Jur. 96.

2. Tenant's Right to Compensation for Improvements or Outlay.

a. Under Agricultural Holdings Acts.

Statutes.]—53 & 54 Vict. c. 57 amends the law with respect to compensation due to tenants on land under mortgage.

58 & 59 Vict. c. 27 extends the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, to market gardens.

"Allotment," what is—Garden—Land Cultivated for Purpose of Business.]—A parcel of land of not more than two acres, in which bulbs had been planted by a seedsman for the purpose of his business, is not an allotment within s. 4 of the Allotments and Cottage Gardens Compensation for Crops Act, 1887, inasmuch as it was not land cultivated as a "garden" in the ordinary sense of the term. Cooper v. Pearse, 65 L. J., M. C. 95; [1896] 1 Q. B. 562; 74 L. T. 495; 44 W. R. 494; 60 J. P. 282.

"Contract of Tenancy," what is—Letting from Year to Year—Agreement for Determination by Three Months' Notice at any Time.]—The parties to an agreement for a letting from year to year may by the agreement stipulate that the tenancy may be determined by a three months' notice at any time. A tenant of a market garden under such an agreement current at the commencement of the Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895, holds the land under a "contract of tenancy," within the meaning of s. 4 of the act, as interpreted by s. 61 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, so as to be entitled to compensation for improvements executed before the act. Threlfall, In re (50 L. J., Ch. 318; 16 Ch. D. 274), followed. Kemp v. Derrett (3 Camp. 510) and Doe d. King v. Grafton (21 L. J., Q. B. 276; 18 Q. B. 496) considered. King v. Eversfield, 66 L. J., Q. B. 809; [1897] 2 Q. B. 475; 77 L. T. 195; 46 W. R. 51; 61 J. P. 740—C. A.

Time for giving Notice of Claim—Determination of Tenancy.]—By s. 7 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, "a tenant claiming compensation under this act shall, two months at least before the determination of the tenancy, give notice in writing to the landlord of his intention to make such claim." Where the tenant of a farm was entitled, under the custom of the country, to hold over a portion of the land for four months after the expiration of his notice to quit the farm:—Held, that the "determination of the tenancy" took place when the tenant's holding under the custom of the country ended; and therefore that a notice of his claim for compensation, given two months before that time, was good. Portarlington (Earl), Ex parte, Paul, In re, 59 L. J., Q. B. 30; 24 Q. B. D. 247; 61 L. T. 835; 54 J. P. 644.

Where a lease is to run for a definite period from the entry of the tenant, which entry took place, as to the houses, grass, and fallow land, on May 26th, 1860; as to arable land in corn crop at the separation of the corn crop in the same year; and as to barns and cothouses at Whitsuntide, 1861; a notice for compensation for unexhausted improvements, in order to comply with the requirements of s. 7 of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1883, that "four months at least before the determination of the tenancy" the tenant must give notice to his landlord "in writing of his intention to make a claim," must be given four months prior to the separation of the crop in the year in which the lease terminates. Semble, that when the termination as to arable land is to be the "separation of the crop," that is to be regarded as synonymous with the Martinmas term, so that a notice will be in time if given four months before Martinmas:—Quære, whether, when there is more than one period for the termination to a lease, the notice prescribed by s. 28 must not be given prior to the first period. Wight v. Hopetoun (Earl) (4 Macq. H. L. 729) commented on. Black v. Clay, [1894] A. C. 368; 6 R. 362; 71 L. T. 446—H. L. (Sc.)

The words "determination of the tenancy" in s. 7 of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, mean the determination of the holding in so far as it is an agricultural holding, so that under a tenancy of agricultural land terminating by a custom recognised in the lease on an earlier date than the tenancy of the buildings, the tenancy for the purposes of compensation under the act of 1883 is determined at the earlier date. Morley v. Carter, 66 L. J., Q. B. 843; [1898] 1 Q. B. 8; 77 L. T. 337; 46 W. R. 77.

Compensation under Earlier Act — Notice under Later Act.]—A notice by a tenant in occupation of a tenancy current at the commencement of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, of a claim for compensation for improvements executed after the commencement of the act, is good if given under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, though the compensation is to be based upon the principles of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875. The compensation for such improvements is to be calculated on the basis of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, and not of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. Smith v. Acock, 53 L. T. 230.

Appointment of Referee—Consent of Parties—Power of Umpire to award Costs.]—Where it appears upon the face of an award made under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, that one of the referees was appointed by the county court registrar, but it is not stated that such appointment was made by consent of the parties, the award will be set aside where it is shown that no consent in fact was given. Per Wills, J.: Ord. XL. r. 7, of the County Court Rules, 1889, which purports to give a larger jurisdiction to the county court registrar, is ultra vires. Per Wills, J.: Costs as between solicitor and client cannot be given be given by an award under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. Griffiths and Morris, In re, 64 L. J., Q. B. 386; [1895] 1 Q. B. 866; 15 R. 301; 72 L. T. 290; 43 W. R. 652; 59 J. P. 134.

Award — Giving Compensation generally — No Items—Validity.]—A tenant gave notice of claim for compensation under the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, and the landlord gave notice to the tenant of a counterclaim for dilapidations and breaches of covenant. The parties not agreeing as to the amounts payable under their respective claims, the landlord gave the tenant notice, under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, appointing D. to act on his behalf. The tenant acted in the matter as his own referee. The referees did not appoint an umpire before entering upon the reference, but, differences having arisen, they appointed W. to act as umpire. This appointment of the umpire was in a letter signed by both referees as follows:—"We, the undersigned, hereby appoint you our umpire to settle all differences that have arisen between us in this valuation, which relates to compensation for unexhausted lime, manures, and feeding stuff, and counterclaims for dilapidations and breaches of covenant on both sides, under a lease, dated the 20th July, 1880, and under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875 and 1883, and we agree to abide by your decision in writing as final and binding on all parties." The umpire made his award in writing as follows: "I do award that the sum of 96*l.* 11*s.* is payable by the said Charles Shrubb to the said William Lee, balance in full satisfaction of all claims made by either party." The landlord appealed against the award upon the grounds (1) that it was obligatory that the award should have been made under the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883; (2) that the award was invalid, because it awarded a sum generally in respect of claims under the Agricultural Holdings Acts, 1875 and 1883, and of claims arising outside those acts, without distinguishing between the two sets of claims; (3) that the award was bad, as it awarded a sum generally for compensation and did not, as required by s. 19 of the act of 1883, specify (1) the several improvements in respect of which compensation was awarded; (2) the time at which each improvement was executed; (3) the sum awarded in respect of each improvement:—Held, that there was abundant evidence to warrant the conclusion that this was an award outside the Agricultural Holdings Act altogether, and that it was none the less so because it may have included some matters which were within the act; that the reference was in fact a common law reference; and that the award was final and binding upon the parties. Shrubb v. Lee, 59 L. T. 376; 53 J. P. 54.

—— Without Consent of Parties — Setting aside.]—See Griffiths and Morris, In re, supra.

—— Enforcement in County Court—Balance found due to Landlord.]—The procedure provided by the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, for enforcing in a county court an award made under that statute, is not applicable when the dispute arises out of a claim by a tenant and a counterclaim by a landlord, and the award finds a balance due to the landlord. Holmes and Formby, In re, 64 L. J., Q. B. 391; [1895] 1 Q. B. 174; 15 R. 114; 71 L. T. 842; 43 W. R. 205.

Action by Landlord—Counterclaim for Compensation.]—A claim for compensation by a tenant under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, if disputed, must be referred to arbitration only, and cannot form the subject-matter of a counterclaim in an action for rent brought by the landlord in the high court. Gaslight and Coke Co. v. Holloway, 52 L. T. 434; 49 J. P. 344.

A tenant of a farm, restrained by agreement from selling the hay and straw grown on the farm, became bankrupt. The trustee in bankruptcy removed and sold a quantity of the hay in breach of the agreement and then disclaimed the lease. The landlord sued the trustee for the removal of the hay, and the trustee counterclaimed for unexhausted improvements:—Held, that the counter-claim could not be sustained, as, by the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, s. 8, arbitration is rendered compulsory in case of disputes between landlord and tenant. Schofield v. Hincks, 58 L. J., Q. B. 147; 60 L. T. 573; 37 W. R. 157.

Payment of Compensation to Tenant by Executors of Landlord—Right of Executors to Charge on Holding.]—Although the definition of "landlord" in the s. 61 of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, does not include the executors of a landlord, yet the clause at the end of the section, by which the designations of landlord and tenant are to continue to apply to the parties until the conclusion of any proceedings taken under the act, entitles the executors of a landlord, who have paid to the tenant an amount due to him in respect of compensation under the act, to obtain from a county court, under the 29th section of the act, a charge on the holding to the amount of the sum so paid. Gough v. Gough, 60 L. J., Q. B. 726; [1891] 2 Q. B. 665; 65 L. T. 110; 39 W. R. 593; 55 J. P. 807—C. A.

b. Before the Acts.

Effect of new Lease.]—A lease provided that on its termination the tenant should receive compensation for unexhausted improvements. At its termination a new lease of the farm was granted to the tenant, nothing being said about the compensation:—Held, that the tenant was entitled to compensation under the first lease. Lane v. Moeder, 1 Cab. & E. 548.

Lien for.]—The bankrupt agreed in writing to take a lease of a manufactory for a term of years, and the landlord agreed to erect, at his own expense, certain buildings upon the bankrupt's paying, as an additional rent, 7*l.* 10*s.* per cent. upon the amount so expended. The buildings, however, were subsequently erected by the bankrupt, on the verbal assurance of the landlord that the bankrupt might deduct the amount expended from the rent. The assignees elected not to adopt the agreement for the lease, but refused to deliver up possession to the landlord, unless he allowed them the sum which the bankrupt had expended on the buildings:—Held, that as both the written and verbal agreement between the landlord and the bankrupt contemplated a continuancy of the tenancy which the assignees had themselves repudiated they had no lien on the premises for the money expended by the bankrupt. Ladd. Ex parte, Ryland, In re, 3 Deac. & C. 647.

A father, an equitable owner of land, erected a granary thereon; he afterwards allowed his two sons to use and occupy them, and they erected other buildings thereon at a great expense:—Held, that the sons had a lien on the premises for their outlay. Unity Joint Stock Mutual Banking Association v. King, 25 Beav. 72; 27 L. J., Ch. 585; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 470; 6 W. R. 264.

The plaintiff, at the suggestion of the defendant, his father-in-law, removed from a shop which he had hired into a house belonging to the defendant, and which the defendant promised to let him occupy rent-free. No rent was paid for nineteen years, and the plaintiff expended about 300*l.* upon the premises, almost wholly for repairs. The plaintiff alleged that there was an absolute gift of the house to him:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to any lien in respect of the 300*l.* Millard v. Harvey, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1167; 13 W. R. 125.

Account.]—Under the 145th General Order, the Master has not jurisdiction to give allowance or compensation to a tenant for improvements. A tenant for a term, pending the cause, will not be allowed for improvements made without the sanction of the court, on notice to all parties, although he may have been misled as to its tenure by the receiver. Wildridge v. M'Kane, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 231.

Account between tenant and landlord under a husbandry lease. Kennington v. Houghton, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 620.

A lessee of charity property obtained a further reversionary term, and afterwards made considerable lasting improvements on the property; the reversionary lease being set aside, the court considered the lessee entitled to compensation for money laid out by him in reference to the extended enjoyment. Att.-Gen. v. Kerr, 2 Beav. 420; 9 L. J., Ch. 190; 4 Jur. 406. And see 5 Jur. 863.

Reference under the circumstances directed, to ascertain whether any and what compensation ought to be paid to an outgoing tenant from year to year, for his outlay of capital on charity lands. Att.-Gen. v. Gains, 11 Beav. 63; 12 Jur. 275.

Where a suit has been compromised before the expiration of a lease for five years pending the cause, the tenant is entitled to be compensated for such moneys as he has bonâ fide laid out for the benefit of the lands demised. Garstin v. Nangle, Hay. & J. 542. And see Holmes v. Bowden, ib. 544, n.

Under Void Lease.]—Lessee under a lease void for his own fraud, not entitled to allowances for lasting improvements. Pierce v. Webb, 3 Bro. C. C. 16, n.

Where title fraudulent, equity in giving relief will reimburse the party in possession for permanent improvements. Shine v. Gough, 1 Ball & B. 444.

Where lease or grant is good in law, equity will not set it aside without allowing for lasting improvements on estate. Att.-Gen. v. Balliol College, 9 Mod. 411.

In 1699 a lease of charity land was granted for 999 years, at a rent very little more than had for some time been received for it. The lessee covenanted to build upon the land. That lease was in 1849 set aside as to a part of the land comprised in it, on an information filed against the assignee of that part only; and he was:—Held, not to be entitled to any allowance in respect of the building which had been erected upon the land. Att.-Gen. v. Pilgrim, 2 Hall & Tw. 186. Affirming 12 Beav. 507.

If, on parol agreement for a lease, any consideration had been paid, equity would restore the consideration, though it did not execute the agreement in specie. Hollis v. Edwards, 1 Vern. 159.

There is a difference between money laid out in necessary repairs and lasting improvements, and money laid out for fancy and humour; the former shall be allowed, though not the latter. Ib.

3. LANDLORD'S RIGHT TO TAKE POSSESSION.

Abandonment of Premises.]—If a tenant quits without any intention of returning, the landlord may enter without bringing ejectment. Lacey v. Lear, Peake's Add. Cas. 210; 4 R. R. 904. And see Wildbore v. Rainsforth, 8 B. & C. 6; 2 M. & Ry. 185.

Where a tenant of a house, after a regular notice to quit had been given him, abandoned the premises, locked up the door, and left only a few articles of furniture therein; and the landlord afterwards, in his absence, and when no person was in the house, broke open the door and took possession:—Held, that he was justified in so doing, as he had a legal right of entry. Turner v. Meymott, 79 Moore, 574; 1 Bing. 158; 1 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 13; 25 R. R. 612. And see Taunton v. Costar, 7 Term Rep. 431; 4 R. R. 481.

If the tenancy is determined, and the tenant and his family are gone away, and the house locked up, no one being in possession, the landlord will be justified in breaking into the house and obtaining possession. Hillary v. Gay, 6 Car. & P. 284.

Lessor putting Bill in Window—Effect of.]—If a landlord is lawfully on his tenant's premises for the purpose of making a distress, he may put up a bill in the window for the purpose of letting them, without thereby making himself liable as a trespasser. Skidmore v. Booth, 6 Car. & P. 777.

Lessee refusing to Quit.]—Where a tenant remains in apartments after the expiration of his term, the landlord is not justified in forcibly asserting his right to the possession by expelling him. Newton v. Harland, 1 Scott (N.R.) 473; 1 Man. & G. 644; 2 Jur. 350.

If a tenancy of a house is determined, and the tenant has promised to leave on a particular day, but afterwards refuses to do so, the landlord is not justified in putting the tenant's wife by force out of the house, and putting the tenant's furniture into the street. Hillary v. Gay, 6 Car. & P. 284.

—— Rights as against Third Persons.]—C. rented a farm under the plaintiff, his term in which expired on the 1st February, 1838. On the 2nd February the plaintiff's agent demanded possession of the land; but C. refused to quit unless paid for certain improvements. The plaintiff thereupon brought an ejectment, and obtained actual possession on the 16th July:—Held, that the demand of possession on the 2nd February gave the plaintiff such a constructive possession as to enable him to maintain trespass against a third person for coming on the land and carrying off the crops. Hey v. Moorehouse, 8 Scott, 156; 6 Bing. (N.C.) 52; 9 L. J., C. P. 113.

Lessee of Part of Property—Action for Recovery of Land.]—Where the owner of the reversion of a theatre having by an order in a winding-up of a company obtained the lease and property of the theatre, the lessee of property, boxes, and stalls, brought an action asking for an injunction to restrain the reversioner from preventing the plaintiff having access to his boxes and stalls:—Held, that the order in the winding-up did not affect the right of third parties; the defendant could only exclude the plaintiff by an action for the recovery of land where third parties would have notice and an opportunity of appearing. Leader v. Hayes, 54 L. T. 204.

Disclaimer by Trustee—Rights of Sub-lessee and Landlord.]—When a lessee sub-lets, and afterwards became bankrupt, and his trustee, under s. 23 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and under an order of the Court of Bankruptcy, disclaims the lessee's interest in the premises, the lessor is not entitled to eject the sub-tenant. A. lessee for a term of years by deed demised part of the premises for a shorter term, and the sub-lessee entered into possession. The lessee afterwards liquidated by arrangement, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and his trustee, under an order of the Court of Bankruptcy, disclaimed the lessee's interest in the premises. Notice of the application to the court for leave to disclaim was given to the sub-lessee, within a reasonable time before the order was made. The lessor having brought an action to recover possession of the part of the premises demised to the sub-lessee as from the date of the appointment of the trustee:—Held, that the lessor was not entitled to recover possession. Taylor v. Gillott (L. R. 20 Eq. 682) commented upon. Smalley v. Hardinge, 50 L. J., Q. B. 367; 7 Q. B. D. 524; 44 L. T. 503; 29 W. R. 554—C. A.

A lessee of a house agreed to sub-let two rooms for a part of his term, taking a fine; he afterwards became bankrupt, and his trustee disclaimed the lease. The landlord commenced an action of ejectment against the sub-lessee. The sub-lessee filed his bill to restrain the action, and to compel the landlord to grant him a lease according to the terms of his agreement with the first lessee. The provisions of the agreement differed from those of the lease:—Held, that the sub-lessee had no equity to enforce the provisions of the agreement against the landlord. Taylor v. Gillott, 44 L. J., Ch. 740; L. R. 20 Eq. 682; 32 L. T. 795; 24 W. R. 65.

Licence by Tenant to Landlord to eject—Effect of.]—A licence by a tenant to his landlord to eject him on a specified day without any process of law is void, as authorising the commission of an act which is made illegal by the act 5 Ric. 2, stat. 1, c. 8. Eldridge v. Hawker, 50 L. J., Ch. 577; 18 Ch. D. 199; 45 L. T. 168; 29 W. R. 914.

After Agreement to purchase Lessee's Interest.]—A landlord having power to determine a lease enters into an agreement with the lessee, under which he becomes purchaser of his interest, and then gives notice to determine the lease; the court held, that the relation of vendor and purchaser was established, and would not allow the tenant to be evicted until the question as to the amount of compensation or purchase-money was settled between the parties. Doe v. London & Croydon Ry., 8 L. J., Ch. 200.

Under Proviso in Lease.]—See Johnson v. Edgware, Highgate, and London Ry., ante, col. 811, and Kennedy v. Liddy, ante, col. 980.

Under 4 Geo. 2, c. 28.]—A landlord having dispossessed his tenant, under the 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, is not bound to shew that he complied with the injunctions of that act. Doe v. Lewis, 2 Ken. 320; 1 Burr. 614.

4. Proceedings to gain Possession.

a. Summary.

When Premises Vacant.]—When a tenant ceased to reside on the premises for several months, and left them without any furniture, or sufficient other property to answer the year's rent:—Held, that the landlord might properly proceed under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 16, to recover the possession, although he knew where the tenant then was, and although the justices found a servant of the tenant on the premises when they first went to view the same. Pilton, Ex parte, 1 B. & Ald. 369; 19 R. R. 342.

It is not necessary to state, in the record of the magistrates' proceedings, that the landlord has a right of re-entry; although such a right must exist in order to entitle the party to proceed under this statute. Ib.

—— Before Magistrates.]—Where magistrates had given possession of a dwelling-house, as deserted and unoccupied, and the judges of assize had, on appeal, made an order for restitution with costs, and the tenant brought an action for the eviction against the magistrates, the constable, and the landlord:—Held, that the record of the proceedings before the magistrates was an answer to the action on behalf of all the defendants. Ashcroft v. Bowne, 3 B. & Ad. 684; 1 L. J., K. B. 209.

The judges of assize, on appeal, under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 17, against an order of two magistrates giving possession to a landlord, made an order for restitution of the premises to the tenant. The order of the judges was not directed to any person:—Held, that a mandamus could not issue commanding the two justices to make restitution. Reg. v. Traill, 12 A. & E. 761; 4 P. & D. 325; 10 L. J., M. C. 57.

Proceedings of magistrates for restitution of premises under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, are, by s. 17, to be reviewed (in England) by the judges on the circuits, acting as individual justices. An allegation in an indictment, that an order was made by A. and B., the justices of assize for Surrey, is not supported by a certificate of such an order, being signed by the deputy clerk of assize in the same way as an order of court. Reg. v. Sewell, 8 Q. B. 161; 15 L. J., Q. B. 49; 10 Jur. 48.

An order for restitution though not directed to any person, will justify the sheriff in acting under it. Ib.

Where magistrates, from a doubt of their jurisdiction, decline giving possession of premises to a landlord, the court will not compel them by mandamus to do so. Fulder, Ex parte, 8 D. P. C. 535; 4 Jur. 507.

On an appeal to the judges of assize against the decision of justices giving possession of premises under the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, ss. 16 and 17, requiring that the notice, after the first view by justices, should state what day, at the distance of fourteen clear days at the least, they should return to take a second view:—Held, that fourteen clear days must elapse between the first and second views, and that that period had not elapsed, and the proceedings were set aside as irregular, and restitution ordered. Creak v. Brighton JJ., 1 F. & F. 110.

The power to view and give possession to a landlord of deserted premises, created by 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 16, extended by 57 Geo. 3, c. 52, and varied as to its mode of execution by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, s. 13, is not, by any of the provisions of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, or by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 34, vested in the lord mayor or one alderman sitting in the justice-room at the Mansion-house or Guildhall, so as to enable them to exercise the power in the same manner as a police magistrate sitting in one of the metropolitan police-courts may, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, s. 13, exercise it. Edwards v. Hodges, 15 C. B. 477; 3 C. L. R. 472; 24 L. J., M. C. 81; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 91; 3 W. R. 167.

In an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling-house, F. and M. justified the trespasses; the former, as owner in fee, the latter, as his servant. Plea, also, by the latter, not guilty. Replication, nolle prosequi as to F., but alleging an estoppel as to M., for that M. demised the premises to the plaintiff, as a yearly tenant, at 16*l.* a year, which demise was in force and undetermined. Rejoinder by M., denying that the tenancy of the plaintiff was in full force and undetermined. At the trial, the demise from M. to the plaintiff was proved, and it was shewn that a notice to quit, signed in the names of both F. and M., was given to the plaintiff; and that subsequently a complaint was made to the magistrates under the above statute, which was signed by F., "as for himself and M., either or both of them." Upon that complaint, a warrant was issued, which contained the name of only one complainant, under which the trespass was committed and the plaintiff ejected; the key of the house was taken to M. by the officer; the jury having found for the plaintiff:—Held, that the authority of M., as servant of F., was sufficiently denied by the replication of estoppel, and that trespass was the proper remedy. Darlington v. Pritchard, 2 D. (N.S.) 664; 5 Scott (N.R.) 610; 4 Man. & G. 783; 12 L. J., C. P. 34; 7 Jur. 677. See also Edmunds v. Pinniger, 7 Q. B. 558; 14 L. J., Q. B. 273.

Under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74.]—In an action against a landlord for irregularity in the mode of proceeding to obtain possession of premises under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, where the landlord, at the time of applying for the justices' warrant, was entitled to the possession of the premises, there must be special damage arising from the irregularity complained of. Delaney v. Fox, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 166; 26 L. J., C. P. 5; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1233; 5 W. R. 148.

A declaration, setting out an informal notice of the landlord's intention to apply to the justices for a warrant to obtain possession under the act, and alleging the issuing and execution of such warrant, and that under the authority of such proceedings the plaintiff was forcibly expelled from the dwelling-house of which he was tenant, does not sufficiently shew special damage arising from the informality of the notice. Ib.

Upon an application under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, by a landlord to justices of petty sessions, to recover possession of premises held over by his tenant after the expiration of the term, the tenancy having been proved to the satisfaction of the justices, and its legal determination, and the tenant's refusal to quit, the jurisdiction of the justices to give the landlord possession is not ousted by the tenant's setting up the title of a third person. Rees v. Davies, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 56.

Tenant holding over—Effect of Order—Forcible Entry—Damage to Furniture—Trespass.]—The plaintiff occupied a cottage belonging to the defendant F. under a tenancy determinable upon three months' notice. On the 24th of March, 1890, notice to quit the premises at Midsummer was given by F., but the plaintiff refused to give up possession on the termination of the tenancy, though informed that the owner had entered into a contract with B. (a co-defendant) to pull down and rebuild the plaintiff's cottage, and also one adjoining. On the 3rd of September, F., being still unable to get possession of the cottage occupied by the plaintiff, applied for and obtained from justices an order requiring possession to be given up within twenty-one days under the provisions of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74. The same day that the order was obtained some tiles were removed by one of the defendants from the roof of the plaintiff's cottage and fell into a bedroom, thereby injuring some of his furniture; and before the twenty-one days had expired the foundations of the new cottages were dug in the garden, and some garden produce destroyed. There was also, within the time specified by the justices' order, some further interference with the roof and consequent damage to the furniture:—Held, that an action for trespass and damage to the plaintiff's goods was not maintainable, inasmuch as there was no evidence of a forcible entry or of any cause of action, and that the defendants were justified in acting as they did, notwithstanding the justices' order obtained pursuant to the provisions contained in 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74. Jones v. Foley, 60 L. J., Q. B. 464; [1891] 1 Q. B. 730; 64 L.T. 538; 39 W.R. 510; 55 J. P. 521.

b. In County Court.

Jurisdiction — Determination of Tenancy — "Legal Notice to quit."]—By s. 50 of the County Courts Act, 1856, jurisdiction in ejectment is given to the county courts in cases where neither the rent nor the value of the premises exceeds 50*l.* a year, and the tenant's term and interest "shall have expired, or shall have been determined either by the landlord or the tenant by a legal notice to quit."—The plaintiff let to the defendant a house for three years at a rent of 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* a month, payable monthly; the agreement of tenancy contained a power of re-entry on nonpayment of any part of the rent for twenty-one days after the day of payment, or in case of the breach or non-performance of any of the conditions of the agreement. A month's rent having been in arrear for more than twenty-one days, the plaintiff gave the defendant notice to quit at the end of the next month of the term, alleging as breaches nonpayment of rent and a breach of a condition in the agreement:—Held, that a "legal notice to quit" must be taken to mean the notice to quit required by law and not one depending on the express stipulation of the parties; that the tenancy had not, therefore, been determined within the meaning of the section, and that an action to recover possession of the premises could not be brought in the county court. Friend v. Shaw, 57 L. J., Q. B. 225; 20 Q. B. D. 374; 58 L. T. 89; 36 W. R. 236; 52 J. P. 438.

5. Wrongful Acts and Nuisances.

a. Liability of Landlord.

i. To Tenant.

Negligence of Workmen doing Repairs.]—A well was let from year to year, neither landlord nor tenant being bound to repair the steining. The well being out of repair, the tenant complained to the landlord, who sent in men to repair it. The well was destroyed by the negligence of the workmen employed. An action having been brought by the tenant against the landlord to recover damages for the injury sustained by him:—Held, that the landlord was not necessarily responsible, but that it was a question of fact for the jury what was the nature of the obligation incurred by him by reason of his interference. Mills v. Holton, 2 H. & N. 14.

Cattle poisoned by Yew Trees on Adjoining Land.]—A tenant for life of an estate, in 1868 leased a farm adjoining plantations in which yew trees were growing, and which the lessor reserved to himself. In March and September, 1869, sheep belonging to the lessee died from having eaten of the yew that protruded through the fence surrounding the plantations, and clippings of yew that had been thrown over the fence by the lessor's gardener. The lessor died in February, 1870; the tenant continued to hold the farm as the tenant of the trustees of the will by which the estate was settled. In September and October, 1870, four steers belonging to him got over a ditch, which happened to be nearly dried up, on to land in the hands of the trustees, and died from eating yew there. A bill for the administration of the lessor's estate was filed in February, 1871, and the lessee brought in under the decree a claim against his executors for damages on account of the loss of his sheep and cattle so poisoned :—Held, that the claim for the losses which occurred in the lessor's life, if ever sustainable, was one in respect of an injury to property coming within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 2, and was made too late. Erskine v. Adeane, Bennett's Claim, 42 L. J., Ch. 835 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 756 ; 29 L. T. 234 ; 21 W. R. 802.

Vibration on Adjoining Land — Unstable Building—Estoppel—Derogating from Grant—Measure of Damages.] — Where a lessor, by working engines on land adjoining premises demised by him to a tenant, has caused such vibration as to destroy a house standing on and demised with those premises, it is no defence to an action by the lessee for a nuisance to shew that the house was at the time of its destruction, and also at the date of the demise, in a weak and unstable condition. The lessor is estopped from setting up such a defence, because to give effect to it would be to allow him to derogate from his own grant. Grosvenor Hotel Co. v. Hamilton, 63 L. J., Q. B. 661 ; [1894] 2 Q. B. 836 ; 9. R 819 ; 71 L. T. 362 ; 42 W. R. 626—C. A.

The measure of damages in such an action is not only the value of the tenant's lease, but (as in other cases of tort) includes also all loss suffered by him which is fairly attributable to the wrongful act of the lessor. Ib.

Duty of Landlord to protect Premises.]—Where premises are let as a jeweller's shop to be occupied during hours of business only, the landlord, in the absence of express stipulation, is under no liability for a loss occasioned by a robbery during the night, even though the premises were insufficiently protected. Espir v. Todd, 1 Cab. & E. 155.

ii. To Third Parties.

For wrongful Acts of Lessee.]—If the lessee of property, proceeding by the licence of the lessor, performs acts which amount to a nuisance, and for which he would have no defence in an action, the lessor will be liable, for he is bound to see that his property is so managed that other persons are not injured. White v. Jameson, L. R. 18 Eq. 303 ; 22 W. R. 761.

For Nuisances, &c.]—The lessor of demised premises adjoining the highway is not liable for a nuisance to the highway existing on such premises at the time of the demise, if the lessee occupies under an obligation to repair. Gwinnell v. Eamer, L. R. 10 C. P. 658 ; 32 L. T. 835.

A landlord who lets premises for a fixed and definite purpose is liable for any nuisance that arises naturally and of necessity from the use of such premises as contemplated by the demise. Harris v. James, 45 L. J., Q. B. 545 ; 35 L. T. 240.

A. let to B. a field for the purpose of its being worked as a lime quarry. The ordinary way of getting the limestone was by blasting, and A. authorised the quarrying of the stone and the erection of lime-kilns in the field. A nuisance was caused to the adjoining occupier by the blasting and by the smoke from the kilns, and he brought an action against both A. and B. :—Held, that he, the landlord, was liable, although the nuisance was actually created by the act of his tenant, because the terms of his demise were an authority from him to B. to create the nuisance, which was therefore the necessary consequence of the mode of occupation contemplated in the demise. Ib.

The owner of real property is not responsible for a nuisance committed and continued thereon by the tenant in possession. Rich v. Basterfield, 2 Car. & K. 257 ; 4 C. B. 783 ; 16 L. J., C. P. 273 ; 11 Jur. 696.

If the owner of land demises it with an existing nuisance thereon, he is responsible for the continuance of that nuisance during the term ; so, if he is a party to the creation of a nuisance after the demise ; but he is not responsible for a nuisance so created, though such nuisance is a probable consequence of the use of the land as demised. Ib.

An omission on the part of the owner of land to determine the tenancy after the creation by the tenant of a continuing nuisance thereon is not equivalent to a fresh demise of the premises, so as to make him responsible for such nuisance. Ib.

An action lies against the landlord of a house demised by lease, who, under his contract with his tenant, employs workmen to repair the house, for a nuisance in the house occasioned by the negligence of his workmen. Leslie v. Pounds, 4 Taunt. 649.

Overflow of Water from Dock.]—The Victoria Dock Company, a company incorporated by act of parliament, in pursuance of their powers, in 1858 demised a portion of the dock wall or bank to the Thames Graving Dock Company, the lessees covenanting to construct a graving dock on land of their own, and make and at all times maintain a channel through the demised part of the wall into such graving dock. The Graving Dock Company constructed their dock and the channel in accordance with the covenant in the lease. The undertaking of the Thames Graving Dock Company was afterwards acquired by the Victoria Graving Dock Company. The Victoria Docks Company was afterwards amalgamated with the London and St. Katharine Dock Company. On the 18th January, 1881, there was an unusually high tide and a strong gale, which was at its height at the highest point of the tide. The high tide and gale combined forced the water in the graving dock, which had entered it through the channel demised by the said lease, over the banks and flooded the plaintiff's land. The plaintiff sued both companies for damages. The court came to the conclusion, upon the evidence, that the banks of the graving dock had not been properly maintained at the height required by the Dagenham Commissioners, who are the commissioners of sewers for the district :—Held, that neither the height of the tide nor the force of the wind, nor the coincidence of their happening together, could be considered as the act of God, in the sense which would discharge the Graving Dock Company from liability. That the St. Katharine Dock Company, being under a liability to maintain their own wall, and having leased it with a covenant which bound the lessees to make an opening in it, were in the same position as if it had been cut by a contractor employed by them, and were liable for any damage resulting from their lessee's neglect in taking proper precautions against the natural results of such opening. Burt v. Victoria Graving Dock Co., 47 L. T. 378.

Premises in Dangerous or Defective Condition.]—An action lies against an owner of premises who lets them to a tenant in a ruinous and dangerous condition, and who causes or permits them so to remain, until by reason of the want of reparation they fall upon and injure the house of an adjoining owner. Todd v. Flight, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 377; 30 L. J., C. P. 21; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 291; 3 L. T. 325; 9 W. R. 145.

An owner of a messuage and premises, attached to which was an area, let the same to a tenant from year to year, and died, having devised the property, with an iron grating over the area improperly constructed and out of repair so as to amount to a nuisance, to the defendant. The defendant having no notice of the nuisance, suffered the tenant to remain in the occupation of the premises upon the same terms as before, receiving rent. The wife of A. having sustained damage by reason of the dangerous condition of the grating:—Held, that the defendant, as reversioner, was liable to an action for the damage thereby occasioned. Gandy v. Jubber, 5 B. & S. 78; 33 L. J., Q. B. 151; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 652; 9 L. T. 800; 12 W. R. 526. But on appeal the decision was questioned without the point being determined. S. C., 5 B. & S. 485; 9 B. & S. 15; 13 W. R. 1022—Ex. Ch.

A landlord who lets a house in a dangerous state is not liable to the tenant's customers or guests for accidents happening in consequence during the term. Robbins v. Jones, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 221; 33 L. J., C. P. 1; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 9 L. T. 523; 12 W. R. 248.

A landlord, in 1873, demised a house abutting upon a public street to W., the lease containing a covenant whereby he bound himself to "repair and keep in repair" the demised premises. At the time of the demise there was upon the premises a grating opening into the street, which grating was, unknown to the landlord, in a defective state of repair and dangerous. In 1874 the grating gave way, causing damage to the plaintiff while lawfully using the highway. The jury found that the landlord could not have known of the defective condition of the grating by the exercise of ordinary care:—Held, that he was not liable. Gwinnell v. Eamer, supra.

A landlord is liable for an injury to a stranger by the defective repair of demised premises only when he has contracted with the tenant to repair, or when he has been guilty of misfeasance, as, for instance, in letting the premises in a ruinous condition: in all other cases he is exempt from responsibility for accidents happening to strangers during the tenancy. Nelson v. Liverpool Brewery Co., 46 L. J., C. P. 675; 2 C. P. D. 311; 25 W. R. 877.

The defendants let to F. a house by an agreement in writing, by which F. agreed "to do all necessary repairs to the premises except main walls, roof, and main timbers." There was no agreement by the defendants to repair, and the house was in good condition at the time of letting it. Owing to the defendants' negligence in not repairing a part of the main walls, a chimney-pot during the tenancy of F. fell upon the plaintiff, who was a servant of F., and injured him:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover compensation from the defendants for the injury sustained by him. Ib.

A landlord let premises to a tenant under a lease by which the latter covenanted to keep them in repair. Attached to the house was a coal-cellar under the footway, with an aperture covered by an iron plate, which was at the time of the demise out of repair. A passer-by fell in and was injured:—Held, that the landlord was not liable for this accident. Pretty v. Bickmore, L. R. 8 C. P. 401; 28 L. T. 704; 21 W. R. 733.

Held, also, that the provision in the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 102, makes no difference in this respect. Ib.

The plaintiff was injured through a defect in the condition of a coal-plate in the pavement in front of a house let by the defendant on a weekly tenancy, and such defect, though not shewn to have been in existence at the commencement of the tenancy, had existed for nearly two years before the accident:—Held, that having regard to the nature of the tenancy, there had been a reletting of the premises after the nuisance was created, and that the defendant, as reversioner, was liable. Gandy v. Jubber (5 B. & S. 78; 9 Ib. 15) discussed. Sandford v. Clarke, 57 L. J., Q. B. 507; 21 Q. B. D. 398; 59 L. T. 226; 37 W. R. 28; 52 J. P. 773.

The owner of premises let by him in flats as offices, who retains the staircase in his occupation and control, owes a duty towards the tenants and towards those persons who come to the premises on business with them, to keep the stairs in a reasonably safe state of repair, although the leases to the tenants contain no covenant by the landlord to that effect, and therefore the owner is liable for personal injury caused by the want of repair. Miller v. Hancock, [1893] 2 Q. B. 177; 4 R. 478; 69 L. T. 214; 41 W. R. 578; 57 J. P. 758—C. A.

In an action for damages against the landlord of premises let on a weekly tenancy by a person who has sustained injuries through an accident which took place on the premises, it is a question for the jury whether the accident was caused by a structural defect existing at the time of the original letting, or whether it was caused by the negligence of the tenant. Bowen v. Anderson, [1894] 1 Q. B. 164; 10 R. 47; 42 W. R. 236; 58 J. P. 213.

b. Liability of Tenant.

i. To Landlord.

Waste, what is.]—Semble that an injury to or the destruction of demised premises, resulting from the use of them by the tenant in a reasonable and proper manner having regard to the class of tenement to which they belong, is not waste. Saner v. Bilton, 47 L. J., Ch. 267; 7 Ch. D. 815; 38 L. T. 281; 26 W. R. 394.

Cutting Turf.]—A tenant cannot cut turf under a demise of "improvable bog," unless he can shew that it was necessary to cut away the turf for the purpose of improving it. Pollard v. Smith, 1 Hog, 391.

Tenant restrained from cutting turf for sale (his lease giving a right of estovers only), notwithstanding an uninterrupted practice for eighty years. Courtown (Lord) v. Ward, 1 Sch. & Lef. 8.

Injunction refused to restrain tenant from cutting turf as fire-bote. De Salis (Count) v. ——, 2 Moll. 516.

Where a landlord filed a bill against his immediate tenant, to restrain him from cutting turf for sale on a valuable bog appurtenant to the lands demised, and the tenant put in his answer stating, that he had never by himself been in the actual occupation of any portion of the lands, that he never by himself or any of his agents had committed the waste charged by the bill, and that if his sub-tenants had cut turf for sale or otherwise, he was unable to restrain them from so doing, the practice having existed previously to the lands coming into his possession :—Held that although it did not appear whether these tenants were merely tenants from year to year, or had any greater interest, the injunction could not issue as they were not before the court. Norbury (Lord) v. Alleyne, 1 Dr. & Wal. 337.

A lessee for lives renewable for ever will be restrained from committing waste on the demised premises by cutting turf, although it appeared that the bog cut out was converted into pasture land, and that the ground was improved by the waste. White v. Walsh, 1 Jones, 626, n. S.P., Anon., 1 Jones, 627, n.

A lessee for years renewable for ever will be restrained from similar waste, although it appears that the tenants had immemorially cut turf. Waterpark (Lord) v. Austen, 1 Jones, 627, n.

A mere demise of bog, as such, will not give the lessee a right to cut turf for sale, particularly where the demise is of the bog together with other property. But if nothing but bog be demised, and it is not convertible to any other use save being cut for sale, or if it were, at the time of the demise used by cutting it for sale, the lessee may cut turf for sale. Coppinger v. Gubbins, 3 Jo. & Lat. 397 ; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 304.

Tenant in fee, in possession of lands, conveyed the same and all bogs thereon to a purchaser, who, by deed of equal date, demised the lands to the vendor and his heirs for lives, renewable for ever, to hold "in the same manner as he now holds and enjoys the same," reserving a rent equal to 6*l.* per cent. on the purchase-money. The lease contained the ordinary powers and covenants. The vendor had, in some few instances, before the conveyance, cut turf for sale :—Held, nevertheless, the court being of opinion that there was no such general dedication of the bog to cutting, for mere purpose of sale, as to convert it into the nature of an open mine, that the lessee was not entitled to cut turf for sale. Ib.

Cutting Timber and Trees.]—See supra, M. 12, ante, col. 1237.

Sowing Pernicious Crops.]—Injunction granted to stay waste and from sowing land with pernicious crops. Pratt v. Brett, 2 Madd. 62 ; 17 R.R. 187.

Breaking up Meadow or Pasture.]—A tenant will not be allowed to break up ancient meadow or pasture, though the land is mossy and requires tillage. Martin v. Coggan, 1 Hog, 120.

Quære, whether injunction would be granted on ground of waste to restrain tenant from ploughing up meadow to build on. De Wilton (Lord) v. Saxon, 6 Ves. 106.

Where a tenant turned up the ground, the court interfered by injunction to stay waste. Carden v. Butler, Hay. & J. 112.

—— Penalties—Increase of Rent.]—See ante, cols. 950 et seq. and cols. 1184, 1185.

Cultivating Waste Land.]—An action for an injury to the inheritance lies by the reversioner against the tenant pending the term for inclosing and cultivating waste land included in the demise, and for continuing the grievance. Queen's College, Oxford v. Hallett, 14 East, 489.

Carrying out Allotment System—Licence by Lessor—Duration of Permission.]—A tenant for life, dispunishable for waste, had power to lease for twenty-one years ancient pasture land, which he afterwards, and before any lease, had converted into garden allotments in a manner amounting to waste. The leasing power provided against "any fine, premium or forfeit being taken for the making thereof," and that "none of the lessees should be, by any clause or words therein contained, authorised to commit waste, or exempted from punishment for waste." In a lease reciting this power, the tenant for life demised the premises for twenty-one years, reserving a rent payable half-yearly. The lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to break up any of the pasture land demised, "except for the purpose of carrying out the allotment system," introduced by the tenant for life :—Held, that the exception in the covenant did not amount to a licence or an authority to the lessee to commit waste by carrying out the allotment system, and that if any implication could be made so as to construe that exception as justifying a permission to the lessee to do anything, it could not be inferred that it permitted him to do more than to carry out the allotment system during the life of the tenant for life, so far as the tenant for life had power to permit it, and not otherwise. Doe d. Hopkinson v. Ferrand, 20 L. J., C. P. 202 ; 15 Jur. 1061.

Converting into Cemetery.]—Semble, the conversion of meadow and pasture lands into a public cemetery amounts to waste at common law. Hunt v. Browne, Sau. & Sc. 179.

Erecting Buildings on Holding—Dwelling-houses.]—Erecting on an agricultural holding dwelling-houses to be used in furtherance of an illegal conspiracy held to amount to waste. Brooke v. Mernagh, 23 L. R., Ir. 86. S. P., Brooke v. Kavanagh, 23 L. R., Ir. 97.

——Glass-house.]—See Meux v. Cobley, 61 L. J., Ch. 449 ; [1892] 2 Ch. 253 ; 66 L. T. 86.

Altering Buildings.]—At law the tenant is guilty of waste if he pull down doors, windows, wainscots, or in any way alters the material form and features of the demised buildings. North v. Guinan, Beat. 343. And see Edge v. Pemberton, 12 M. & W. 187 ; 1 D. & L. 467 ; 13 L. J., Ex. 48.

Where, in an action by the reversioner against the tenant of a house, for opening a door in a wall without his consent, and thereby damaging the house, and prejudicing his reversionary interest, the opening of the door is proved, and all actual damage is disproved, the jury should be directed to inquire whether the reversionary interest has or has not been injured. Young v. Spencer, 5 M. & Ry. 47 ; 10 B. & C. 145 ; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 106.

The reversionary interest of the plaintiff might be injured, although the house itself was not. Ib.

Injunction against proceeding with alterations in a house under an agreement for a lease upon circumstances that would probably prevent a specific performance, viz. surprise, the effect of fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment, and the particular nature of the alterations for the conversion of a private house to the purpose of a coachmaker's business, wholly changing the nature of the subject. Bonnett v. Sadler, 14 Ves. 526.

—— Pulling down and rebuilding.]—Two leases were granted of pieces of land with some buildings on them, one granted in 1798 for 999 years, the other granted in 1824 for 988 years. There was no reservation of a power of re-entry for breach of covenant, nor was there any negative covenant obliging the lessee not to change the use of the premises. There was a power of re-entry for rent in arrear, and no sufficient distress on the premises. In each lease there was a covenant by the lessee that he, his executors, &c., "will during the term granted preserve, uphold, support, maintain, and keep the demised premises, and all improvements made and to be made thereon, in good and sufficient order, repair, and condition; and at the end or sooner determination of this demise, shall and will so leave and deliver up the same unto" the lessor, his heirs, &c. The premises had been used as corn stores for some years; and afterwards as artillery barracks, and dwellings for married soldiers. They had fallen into disrepair: it became necessary to repair them: the lessee thought it would be beneficial to convert the store buildings into dwelling-houses, which would much increase their value, and was proceeding to convert them accordingly, when the lessor filed a bill to restrain him, alleging waste:—Held, that this was not the case of enforcing a negative covenant where the words of contract were clear and indisputable; that the waste alleged was meliorating waste, and that, under the circumstances, the court had, in the due exercise of its discretion in such matters, properly refused to interfere by injunction. Doherty v. Allman, 3 App. Cas. 709; 39 L. T. 129; 26 W. R. 513—H. L. (Ir.)

The court will not restrain a tenant from pulling down a house and building another which the landlord objects to. Smyth v. Carter, 18 Beav. 78.

Where Premises burnt.]—A tenant for years is subject to waste where the premises have been burnt, though there be no covenant to repair or rebuild. Rook v. Worth, 1 Ves. 462.

Removing Barrier between Mines.]—An action in the nature of waste will lie against a lessee of a mine for an injury to the reversion by the removal of a barrier or a boundary between it and an adjoining mine. Marker v. Kenrick, 13 C. B. 188; 22 L. J., C. P. 129; 17 Jur. 44.

Threat to commit Waste.]—A breach, in an action by landlord against tenant, that the tenant threatened to commit waste unless paid a certain sum by the incoming tenant, and that the latter was thereby compelled to and did pay him that sum, in order to prevent his committing such waste, is bad. Leach v. Thomas, 2 M. & W. 427; 5 D. P. C. 612; 6 L. J., Ex. 126.

Action of Waste—When it Lies.]—An action in the nature of waste will lie against a lessee, although the act complained of might also be the subject of an action for the breach of an express covenant. Marker v. Kenrick, 13 C. B. 188; 22 L. J., C. P. 129; 17 Jur. 44.

An action in the nature of voluntary waste will lie against a tenant for years after the expiration of his term as well as an action for the breach of covenants contained in his lease. Kinlyside v. Thornton, 2 W. Bl. 1111.

An action for waste lies at the suit of a landlord against his tenant, for acts done by the latter, while holding over after the expiration of a notice to quit. Burchell v. Hornsby, 1 Camp. 360.

Damages—Nominal.]—In an action of waste, on the 6 Edw. 1, c. 5, against a tenant for years, for converting three closes of meadow into garden ground, if the jury gives only one farthing damages for each close, the court will give him leave to enter up judgment for himself. Harrow School v. Alderton, 2 Bos. & P. 86. And see Pindar v. Wadsworth, 2 East, 155.

Where the action of the tenant amounts to technical waste, if the court is satisfied it is waste which does not injure the inheritance, it is no answer for the landlord to say that it benefits the tenant and puts money into his pocket—Per Kay, J. Tucker v. Linger, 51 L. J., Ch. 713; 21 Ch. D. 18; 46 L. T. 894; 30 W. R. 578. Affirmed, 52 L. J., Ch. 941; 8 App. Cas. 508; 49 L. T. 273; 32 W. R. 40; 48 J. P. 4—H. L. (E.)

—— On Lessor's Death.]—Lessee's damages in waste moderated by death of lessor. Anon., Cary, 2.

Injunction against Waste.]—Where a tenant defending an ejectment brought by his landlord, makes default at the trial, and makes use of the interval to do all the mischief he can by breaches of covenant and wilful waste, an injunction will be granted on motion, or in the vacation or petition; but it was refused where no ejectment had been brought. Lathropp v. Marsh, 5 Ves. 259.

And see Bonnett v. Sadler and Smyth v. Carter, supra.

ii. To Third Parties.

Of Occupier of Premises.]—The duty of him who occupies a house abutting on the highway is to repair all known defects of the house and its appurtenances, the non-repair of which may result in danger to the passers-by; and that duty is not discharged by the employment of a contractor to repair such defects. If damage results from the negligence of a contractor so employed, the householder is liable. Tarry v. Ashton, 45 L. J., Q. B. 260; 1 Q. B. D. 314; 34 L. T. 97; 24 W. R. 581.

A. occupied a house abutting on a street. Projecting from the front wall, about fifteen feet over the pavement, was a lamp which he had employed a contractor to repair, along with his other lamps. The contractor did his work badly. Another contractor being afterwards employed by A. to examine the lamp, placed the ladder against the bracket which joined it to the wall. The weight of the ladder and the rotten state of the bracket caused the lamp to fall and injure a passer-by in the street:—Held, that A. was responsible to him for the injury so caused. Ib.

The defendant was tenant and occupier of a newly-erected stable, adjoining and all but touching the flank wall of a house in the suburbs of London, and which stable was erected on a mound of made earth at a higher level than the basement of the plaintiff's house, and the result was that water, mixed with stable drainage and sewage leaking from a broken soil-pipe in the stable yard, oozed through the wall of the plaintiff's house, so as to be a nuisance. On a bill by the owners of the house, for an injunction to restrain the nuisance occasioned by the damp, and also by the noise of the horses kept in the stable:—Held, that the occupier of the house should be a party to the suit, inasmuch as the alleged nuisances were of a temporary nature. Broder v. Saillard, 45 L. J., Ch. 414; 2 Ch. D. 692; 24 W. R. 1011.

The bill having been amended by the addition of the occupier as a co-plaintiff, it appeared that the damp was due to the circumstance of the stable being erected on made earth, placed there unknown to the defendant by some predecessor in title:—Held, nevertheless, that an injunction should be granted, for the reason that the possessor of land is responsible for nuisances arising on it, by whatever means occasioned. Ib.

Held, also, with regard to the noise, that the stable was so situated that the ordinary use of it occasioned an annoyance amounting to a nuisance. Ib.

The plaintiff and the defendant were respectively occupiers of adjoining houses. An old drain which commenced on the defendant's premises, and thence passed under and received the drainage of several other houses, turned back under the defendant's house, and thence under the cellar of the plaintiff's house, and ultimately into a public sewer. The part of the return drain which passed through the defendant's premises being decayed, the sewage escaped and flowing into the plaintiff's cellar did damage. The defendant was unaware of the existence of this return drain, and consequently of its want of repair:—Held, that the defendant was liable for the damage done to the plaintiff: for that defendant's duty was to keep the sewage which he himself was bound to receive from passing from his own premises to the plaintiff's premises otherwise than along the old accustomed channel, and that this duty was independent of negligence on his part, and independent of his knowledge or ignorance of the existence of the drain. Humphreys v. Cousins, 46 L. J., C. P. 438; 2 C. P. D. 239; 36 L. T. 180; 25 W. R. 371.

A. granted a lease of two rooms to B., and then let to C. a room above B.'s rooms for dancing and other entertainments. B. commenced an action against A. and C. for an injunction, alleging that the dancing overhead and the behaviour of the visitors on the stairs was a nuisance:—Held, that the annoyance from dancing was a nuisance, but that the annoyance from visitors on the stairs was not a nuisance for which A. or C. was liable. Jenkins v. Jackson, 58 L. J., Ch. 124; 40 Ch. D. 71; 60 L. T. 105; 37 W. R. 253.

A person carrying on a delicate and sensitive trade has no right to complain, on the ground of nuisance, because a person occupying premises below, above, or adjoining his, in carrying on another trade in a proper and reasonable manner, does something which, although not in itself noxious to another trade, may be detrimental to his delicate and sensitive trade. Cooke v. Forbes (L. R. 5 Eq. 166) distinguished. Robinson v. Kilvert, 58 L. J., Ch. 392; 41 Ch. D. 88; 61 L. T. 60; 37 W. R. 545—C. A.

Lessee of Sporting Rights—Overstocking of Land with Game—Injury to Crops.]—The plaintiff was the tenant of a farm over which the shooting rights were reserved to the landlord. The defendants were lessees of the shooting rights over the estate of which the plaintiff's farm formed part. The plaintiff brought his action in the county court against the defendants for compensation for injury done to his crops by pheasants brought into a coppice adjoining his farm. It was proved at the trial that the defendants had brought from another part of the estate 450 pheasants, and turned them down in the coppice adjoining the plaintiff's farm, and that the pheasants came out of the wood and did damage by feeding on the crops in his field, which was contiguous to the coppice. The amount of the damage done was not disputed. The county court judge held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount claimed. The defendants appealed:—Held, on appeal, that the county court judge was right, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover, as the damage complained of had been done by reason of an undue quantity of game having been brought near to his farm, and that the sporting rights of the defendants had been exercised in an unreasonable manner. Farrer v. Nelson, 54 L. J., Q. B. 385; 15 Q. B. D. 258; 52 L. T. 766; 33 W. R. 800; 49 J. P. 725.

Abatement of Nuisances.]—A nuisance arose from a privy in the upper part of a house, of which, with the shop belonging thereto, H. was the lessee, at a rack-rent, for twenty-one years. H. occupied the shop only, and sub-let the upper part, where the nuisance arose, to K., a weekly tenant, and to this part of the premises H. had no access. C., as agent for H.'s lessor, collected the rent. The parish authorities, for the purpose of abating the nuisance, under the powers given them by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, s. 21, and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 12, summoned C., as the owner of the premises within the interpretation clause (s. 2) of the latter statute, before the justices, who made an order upon him to abate the nuisance:—Held, that C. was not the owner within the true construction of s. 2, as K., the weekly tenant, was the occupier of the premises where the nuisance arose, and that therefore H. was not the occupier, but the person receiving rent from the occupier, of the property within the meaning of the statutes. Cook v. Montague, 41 L. J., M. C. 149; L. R. 7 Q. B. 418; 26 L. T. 471; 20 W. R. 624.

—— Payment by Tenant—Recovery from Landlord.]—The plaintiff was tenant from year to year to the defendants, of a house in London, in which a nuisance arose by reason of water and sewage collecting in the cellar owing to a stoppage in the drains. The sanitary authority under s. 4, sub-s. 1, of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, served a notice at the premises, directed to the owner or occupier, and requiring the nuisance to be abated; they did not serve a notice on the owner under s. 4, sub-s. 3, which provides for service on owner in case of structural defect. The plaintiff, who under the act was liable to a penalty if he did not comply with the notice, did the necessary work, in the course of which it was discovered that the nuisance arose from a structural defect:—Held, that plaintiff was entitled under s. 11, sub-s. 1, to recover from the defendants the costs and expenses incurred in abating the nuisance as money paid by him for the use and at the request of the defendants;

although no notice under s. 4, sub-s. 3, had been served upon the defendants as owners. Per Charles, J., he was also entitled to recover at common law. Gebhardt v. Saunders, [1893] 2 Q. B. 452; 67 L. T. 684; 40 W. R. 571; 56 J. P. 741.

See further, NUISANCE.

c. Action by Lessor against Third Party.

For Injury to Reversion—Proof of Tenancy.]—In an action, an averment that the plaintiff's close, at the time of the injury, was in the occupation of J. V. and H. V., is sufficiently proved, if at the time of the injury it was in their occupation, though the tenancy was since changed, before action. Vowles v. Miller, 3 Taunt. 137.

In an action for an injury done to the plaintiffs' reversion, they proved that they were tenants in common under a demise; and a witness stated that he occupied part of the premises under both the plaintiffs, and that he had at first an agreement in writing, which he signed; and another witness said, that he occupied under one of the plaintiffs only, and that he did not know the other;—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of a tenancy by both the occupiers under both the plaintiffs. Strother v. Barr, 2 M. & P. 207; 5 Bing. 136; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 245. See Webb v. Clarke, 4 W. R. 125.

A first count was for injuring the plaintiff's reversion in lands, by cutting and carrying away branches from trees growing on it. Second count, in trover, for the branches. Proof that the plaintiff demised the lands to a tenant, by a written agreement not produced, and that the defendant carried away some branches, the value of which was not shewn:—Held, that the plaintiff could not support the first count without producing the written agreement; but that, on the second count, he was entitled to nominal damages. Cotterill v. Hobby, 6 D. & R. 551; 4 B. & C. 465; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 276.

In an action for an alleged injury to the plaintiff's reversionary interest in a house, he averred in his declaration that the premises were in the occupation of P., as tenant thereof to the plaintiff. It was proved that the house had been let to P. by a cestui que trust, to whom she had paid rent, the plaintiff being his trustee:—Held, to be no variance, as the legal estate was in the plaintiff, and the cestui que trust was to be considered as his agent or bailiff. Vallance v. Savage, 5 M. & P. 576; 7 Bing. 595; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 181.

—— Defence.]—To an action by a reversioner against the defendant, for pulling down a wall, and building and incumbering a close in the occupation of his tenant, and putting other buildings thereon, a plea that he was the occupier of a dwelling-house adjoining the close and wall, and, in repairing his dwelling-house, accidentally threw down the wall, and afterwards, and in a reasonable time, and before action, rebuilt the wall, and committed the grievance in such rebuilding, &c.:—Held, ill. Taylor v. Stendall, 3 D. & L. 161; 7 Q. B. 634; 14 L. J., Q. B. 301; 9 Jur. 1096.

For Detinue of Specific Articles removed during Tenancy.]—A lessor can maintain an action in detinue or trover for the recovery of specific articles wrongfully removed, with the privity of the lessee, from the demised premises during the tenancy. Petre v. Ferrers, 61 L. J., Ch. 426; 65 L. T. 568.

F. was the tenant of a mansion and premises under a demise for years granted by trustees of a settlement under a power, P. being entitled under the settlement to the reversion expectant upon the termination of the lease. During the term certain articles, consisting of an altar-stone and sacred relics, which from a time anterior to the demise had been used and kept in a chapel constituting part of the demised premises, were removed under the authority of F.:—Held, that P. was entitled to a judgment for restoration of the specific articles. Ib.

6. Tenant's Duty to Preserve Boundaries.

Generally.]—A tenant is bound to preserve the boundaries, and if he permits them to be destroyed so that the landlord's land cannot be distinguished from his, he is bound to restore them specifically, or to substitute land of equal value. Att.-Gen. v. Fullerton, 2 Ves. & B. 263; 13 R. R. 76.

Where a tenant of land for life, or for years or at will, has lands of his own adjoining to that which he so holds as tenant, it is his duty to keep the boundaries between them clear and distinct, so that at the expiration of the tenancy the reversioner or remainderman may be able without difficulty to resume possession of what belongs to him; and if the person having such partial interest neglects this duty, and suffers the boundaries to be confused, so that the reversioner or remainderman cannot tell to what lands he is entitled, a court of equity will give relief by compelling the persons who have occasioned the difficulty to make good, out of what may be considered to lie in the nature of a common fund, that portion of it which belongs to another; but in order to obtain this relief it must be shewn that the tenant is in possession of the specific land originally demised. Att.-Gen. v. Stephens, 6 De G. M. & G. 111; 25 L. J., Ch. 888; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 51; 4 W. R. 191.

Jurisdiction of Court.]—The duty of the tenant of land, immediately adjoining other land of his own, is, not merely to leave the boundary between his own land and his landlord's distinct at the expiration of his term, but to keep it distinct during the term. The court has, therefore, jurisdiction during the term to ascertain the boundary if the tenant has confused it. A reference to chambers to ascertain boundaries directed in lieu of the issue of a commission, further consideration being adjourned and costs reserved. Spike v. Harding, 47 L. J., Ch. 323; 7 Ch. D. 871; 38 L. T. 285; 26 W. R. 420.

Lessor allowing Building beyond Boundary.]—On a demise of a piece of ground on which a tenant has built, if it corresponds with the abuttals, though not with the measured distance as stated in the lease, and the lessor sees the building going on without objecting to it, he will not afterwards be allowed to claim the overplus above the measured distance on the footing of an encroachment. Neale d. Leroux v. Parkin, 1 Esp. 229.

Encroachments by Tenants—Statute of Limitations.]—Where a tenant takes in and incloses adjoining land during his tenancy, the presumption of law that he does it for his landlord, so that the land gained by such encroachment will have to be given up at the end of the tenancy as part of the original demised premises, is not rebutted by the fact that the landlord expressly assented to the inclosure being made; and where such presumption exists, the Statute of Limitations (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 7, does not apply till the original tenancy has ended. Whitmore v. Humphries, 41 L. J., C. P. 43; L. R. 7 C. P. 1; 25 L. T. 496; 20 W. R. 79.

Landlord allowing Tenant to exercise Acts of Ownership.]—Where a landlord suffers his tenant to exercise acts of ownership, and makes no objection to it, it is evidence to be left to the jury, whether he did not mean to be bound by those acts of his tenant. Doe d. Winckley v. Pye, 1 Esp. 366.

O. FURNISHED HOUSES.

1. AGENTS TO LET.

Liability of.]—The plaintiff employed the defendant, as a house agent, to let a house for her on commission. In an action for introducing an insolvent tenant:—Held, that it was properly left to the jury upon the evidence to say whether it was part of the defendant's retainer to make reasonable inquiries as to the eligibility of the tenant. Heys v. Tindall, 1 B. & S. 296; 30 L. J., Q. B. 362; 4 L. T. 403; 9 W. R. 664.

Authority of.]—It is doubtful whether an agent to let a house has an implied general authority to let persons into possession, but slight evidence will be sufficient to shew an express authority. Slack v. Crewe, 2 F. & F. 59.

2. CONTRACT.

Habitable.]—It is not enough that a landlord in letting a furnished house honestly believes that the house is in a fit state for habitation; the house itself must be reasonably habitable. Charsley v. Jones, 53 J. P. 280.

In an agreement to let a furnished house there is an implied condition that the house shall be fit for occupation at the time at which the tenancy is to begin, and if the condition is not fulfilled, the lessee is entitled thereupon to rescind the contract. Wilson v. Finch Hatton, 46 L. J., Ex. 489; 2 Ex. D. 336; 36 L. T. 473; 25 W. R. 537.

In a contract for the letting of a furnished house or rooms there is no implied condition that the house shall continue fit for habitation during the term. Wilson v. Finch Hatton (2 Ex. D. 336) explained. Sarson v. Roberts, 65 L. J., Q. B. 37; [1895] 2 Q. B. 395; 14 R. 616; 73 L. T. 174; 43 W. R. 690; 59 J. P. 643—C. A.

—— Bugs.]—It is an implied condition in the letting of a furnished house that it shall be reasonably fit for habitation; if it is not (e.g. where it is greatly infested with bugs), the tenant may quit it without notice. Smith v. Marrable, 11 M. & W. 5; 2 D. (N.S.) 810; Car. & M. 479; 12 L. J., Ex. 223; 7 Jur. 70.

Upon the letting of a furnished house for immediate occupation, with an express condition that it is fit for occupation, if it is not so, and is at once given up on that account, the landlord cannot recover either the rent or for use and occupation. On such a contract, whether express or implied, it is a breach of the condition if the house is so infested and overrun with bugs, as to render it unfit for occupation; and as the condition applies to the whole house, it is a breach if any of the rooms are in that state. But it must appear that the nuisance existed to a serious and substantial extent, and was such as the tenant could not reasonably be expected either to endure or to extirpate. Campbell v. Wenlock (Lord), 4 F. & F. 716.

—— Defective Drainage.]—The defendant agreed to rent the plaintiff's furnished house for three months from the 7th of May, but having at the beginning of the intended tenancy discovered that the house was unfit for habitation owing to defective drainage, he refused to occupy it. The plaintiff repaired the drains, and on the 26th of May tendered the house in a wholesome condition to the defendant, who refused to occupy or to pay any rent. The plaintiff having sued for the rent and for use and occupation:—Held, that the state of the house at the beginning of the intended tenancy entitled the defendant to rescind the contract, and that he was not liable for the rent or for use and occupation. Wilson v. Finch Hatton, supra.

—— Insufficiency of Water Supply.]—An agreement was entered into between C. and P. for the lease of a partly furnished house, together with a garden and a few acres of ground, for a term of five years. P. alleged that a false representation had been made by C. as to the sufficiency of the water supply, and, on the water supply failing, P. alleged that the house was uninhabitable, and refused to be bound by the agreement. There was evidence that the pipes had become stopped up when the house was in the occupation of P.:—Held, upon the evidence, that there had been no misrepresentation by C.; and that, in a letting of this description, the doctrine laid down in Smith v. Marrable (11 M. & W. 5), that there was an implied condition in the letting of a house that it should be reasonably fit for habitation, was inapplicable. Chester v. Powell, 52 L. T. 722.

—— Infectious Disease.]—One who has agreed to take a furnished house is not bound to fulfil his contract if the house be infected with measles at the date fixed for the commencement of the tenancy. If in such a case the lessor sue for rent, he must show, to entitle him to succeed, that the house was in fact in a state fit for human occupation at the date fixed for the commencement of the term, notwithstanding a previous intimation by the tenant of his intention to repudiate the contract. Bird v. Greville (Lord), 1 Cab. & E. 317.

There is no duty in the case of a man who has let part of his house as furnished lodgings to give information to the lodgers upon a member of his family living in the house becoming ill with an infectious disease. Sarson v. Roberts, supra.

—— Right to Determine Lease—Implied Agreement only exists at Commencement.]—A tenant is not justified in determining a tenancy of a furnished house, because during the term a portion of the plastering of the ceilings (which were cracked and fractured at the commencement of the tenancy) fell in one room, and the plastering of the ceilings in other rooms was unsound, and liable to fall. On a letting of a furnished house, the implied term that it shall be fit for human habitation only applies to the condition of the premises at the commencement of the tenancy. Maclean v. Currie, 1 Cab. & E. 361.

—— Housing of the Working Classes—Damages for Breach.]—By s. 12 of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 72), "in any contract for letting for habitation by persons of the working classes a house or part of a house, there shall be implied a condition that the house is at the commencement of the holding in all respects reasonably fit for human habitation":—Held, that a tenant under that section has a right to sue his landlord for damages for injuries caused by the premises not being reasonably fit for human habitation owing to any defective state of repair. Walker v. Hobbs, 59 L. J., Q. B. 93; 23 Q. B. D. 458; 61 L. T. 688; 38 W. R. 63; 54 J. P. 199.

Agreement to Furnish—Condition precedent.]—A. let to B. a furnished house, at a certain rent payable in advance from a certain future day, and agreed that it should be furnished suitably for a school:—The suitable furnishing of the house is a condition precedent to the right to demand the rent. Mechelan v. Wallace, 6 N. & M. 316; 7 A. & E. 54, n.

Agreement to Deliver up in Good Condition.]—A defendant agreed to hire of the plaintiff a house and household furniture, and, at the expiration of the tenancy, to leave the furniture cleaned:—Held, that this contract was supported by proof that the furniture was clean at the time the defendant took possession of it, and that he agreed to leave it as he found it. Stanley v. Agnew, 12 M. & W. 827; 13 L. J., Ex. 197.

—— Agreement to refer to Arbitration.]—Where by a written agreement a tenant of a furnished house agrees at the expiration of the tenancy to deliver up possession of the house and the furniture in good condition, and in the event of loss or damage to make good or pay for the same, the amount of such payment, if disputed, to be settled by two valuers, the settlement of the amount of the payment by the valuers is a condition precedent to the right of the landlord to bring an action in respect of the dilapidations. Babbage v. Coulburn, 52 L. J., Q. B. 50; 9 Q. B. D. 237, n.; 46 L. T. 794; 30 W. R. 950, n.—C. A.

To use as Private Residence.]—An agreement to let a furnished house was drawn up by the plaintiff and sent to the defendant, who returned it unsigned, and sent a letter, in which he wrote, "I approve of the agreement and will sign it"; but, before it was signed, refused to carry it out, on the ground that she found the plaintiff—while assuring her that he meant to use the house as a private residence—was actually advertising it as a boarding-house:—Held, first, that the agreement required a 2*s.* 6*d.* stamp, but might be admitted on payment of the penalty. Caralciro v. Puget, 4 F. & F. 537.

Held, secondly, that if the letter amounted to an adoption of it as a final agreement, it would be sufficient within the Statute of Frauds. Ib.

Claim and Proof—What a Variance.]—A declaration for rent stated a demise of a messuage, land, and premises, with the appurtenances. The proof was a demise of a messuage and land, together with the furniture, utensils, and implements:—Held, that as the rent issued out of the real property, and not out of the furniture, it was sufficient to allege and prove a demise of the real property, and therefore there was no variance. Farewell v. Dickenson, 6 B. & C. 251; 9 D. & R. 345; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 154. S. P., Salmon v. Mathews, 8 M. & W. 827; 11 L. J., Ex. 59.

Premises Destroyed by Fire.]—When furnished apartments have been let by a verbal contract at a sum payable quarterly, and the premises are destroyed by fire in the middle of a quarter, an action lies for the use and occupation during the current quarter, until the fire, at a rate proportioned to the time of actual occupation, if it appears that both parties have agreed that the occupier's liability does not continue after the occurrence of the fire; for such agreement negatives the supposition of a demise for a certain time, and shews a contract in respect of the occupation de die in diem. Parker v. Gibbins, 1 Q. B. 421; 1 G. & D. 10; 5 Jur. 1036. See also ante, col. 928.

P. LODGINGS.

1. LETTING.

Statute of Frauds.]—An agreement to occupy lodgings at a yearly rent, payable in quarterly proportions (the occupation to commence on a future day), is an agreement relating to an interest in land within 29 Car. 2, c. 3 (Statute of Frauds), s. 4. Inman v. Stamp, 1 Stark. 12; 18 R. R. 740.

And a verbal agreement to take ready-furnished lodgings "for two or three years" is a contract for an interest in land, and valid as a lease for not exceeding three years. Edge v. Strafford, 1 Tyr. 293; 1 C. & J. 391; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ex. 101.

By a parol agreement between the plaintiff, a boarding-house keeper, and the defendant, the defendant agreed to pay, for the board and lodging of himself and man, and accommodation for his horse, at the boarding-house, 200*l.* a year from a fixed day; the agreement to be terminable by a quarter's notice on either side. The plaintiff having sued the defendant for a breach by him of this agreement, in refusing to become an inmate of the boarding-house:—Held, that though the agreement was unwritten, the action was maintainable; for that the contract was not one for any interest in or concerning land. Wright v. Stavert, 2 El. & El. 721; 29 L. J., Q. B. 161; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 867; 2 L. T. 175; 8 W. R. 413.

Use and Occupation.]—A person who agrees to take furnished lodgings, but does not enter, is not liable to an action for use and occupation. Edge v. Stafford, supra.

Covenant not to Underlet.]—Letting lodgings is not a breach of a covenant not to underlet. Doe d. Pitt v. Laming, 4 Camp. 77; 15 R. R. 728.

Tenant not Liable for Double Value on Holding over.]—A weekly tenant continuing in possession several weeks after the expiration of a notice to quit, and a demand made, is not liable to an action for double value under 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 1. Lloyd v. Rosbee, 2 Camp. 453 ; 11 R. R. 764.

Special Contract.]—A defendant entered into an agreement in writing with the plaintiff, by which he was to board and lodge with the plaintiff at a certain weekly sum, and the plaintiff agreed to take in payment for the board and lodging certain furniture of the defendant in the plaintiff's house. The furniture having afterwards, and before the plaintiff had appropriated it, been taken in execution for a debt of the defendant to another party :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for board and lodging generally, as if the special contract had never existed. Keys v. Harwood, 2 C. B. 905 ; 15 L. J., Car. P. 207.

When no Contract entered into.]—A. and his wife boarded and lodged in the house of B., the brother of A., and both A. and his wife assisted B. in carrying on his business. A. brought an action for the services, to which B. pleaded a set-off for board and lodging :—Held, that neither the services on the one hand, nor the board and lodging on the other, could be charged for, unless the jury was satisfied that the parties came together on the terms that they were to pay and to be paid ; but that, if that were not so, no ex post facto charge could be made on either side. Davies v. Davies, 9 Car. & P. 87.

Rent—Landlord's Misconduct causing Tenant's leaving.]—If a landlord of furnished lodgings, by his misconduct, justifies a tenant in an abrupt departure, during a tenancy limited to a specific period, he cannot recover rent for the whole time agreed on, but is entitled to rent for the time during which there has been an actual occupation. Kirkman v. Jervis, 7 D. P. C. 678.

Defence—Plaintiff intending to use Premises for Immoral Purpose.]—In an action for breach of a contract to let rooms, the defendant may justify such breach by the fact that the plaintiff intended to use the rooms for illegal purposes, whether at the time of refusing to perform the contract he assigned or really acted upon such intended use as a reason for such refusal or not. Cowan v. Milbourn, 36 L. J., Ex. 124 ; L. R. 2 Ex. 230 ; 16 L. T. 290 ; 15 W. R. 750. And see ante, col. 924.

2. Rights of Lodgers.

Who is a Lodger.]—By an agreement in writing the plaintiff hired from F. rooms in a house held by her under an unexpired lease from the defendant, for which the plaintiff was to pay F. 27*l.* 10*s.* per quarter, she paying rates and taxes and keeping the premises in repair. The rooms so hired by the plaintiff substantially constituted the whole house, F. only retaining possession of the housekeeper's room on the basement and of two or three empty attics and a stable. Rent being due from F. to the defendant, the latter distrained and sold household furniture belonging to the plaintiff, who, relying upon the provisions of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 79), sued him for an illegal distress :—Held, that, although the agreement under which he held might make him an under-tenant, the plaintiff was not the less a lodger entitled to the protection of the statute. Philips v. Henson, 47 L. J., C. P. 273 ; 3 C. P. D. 26 ; 37 L. T. 432 ; 26 W. R. 214.

If the landlord, reserving a room in a house, lets the rest of it to a person, but retains such control and dominion over it as is usually retained by masters of houses let in lodgings, the relation of landlord and "lodger" may exist between the parties within the meaning of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 79), although the lodger has the right of exclusively occupying the greater part of the premises, and has separate and uncontrolled power of ingress and egress, and neither the landlord nor his agent sleeps or resides in the house, and the lodger acts as caretaker of the part reserved. The existence of the relationship of landlord and lodger is a question of fact. Ness v. Stephenson, 9 Q. B. D. 245 ; 47 J. P. 134.

An occupier of part of a house is not a "lodger" within the meaning of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871, unless the person under whom he holds retains some control and dominion over the house. Morton v. Palmer, 51 L. J., Q. B. 7 ; 45 L. T. 426 ; 30 W. R. 115—C. A.

—— How far a Question for Jury.]—The plaintiff rented three floors of a house from B., the lessee, who received the plaintiff's rent and paid the rates and taxes. B.'s name was painted over the shop, and he occupied the ground-floor and basement. Afterwards B. let the ground-floor and basement to J., whose name was then painted up with B.'s. The plaintiff continued to occupy and pay rent to B. B.'s lessor seized the plaintiff's goods for distress for rent due from B. In an action against the lessor's bailiff for wrongful distress, the judge left it to the jury to say whether the plaintiff was a lodger, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff :—Held, that there had been a misdirection, as the question left to the jury had the effect of leaving it to them to decide as to the construction of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act. Ib.

Held, by Brett and Lindley, L.JJ., that there ought to be a new trial ; Cotton, L.J., being of opinion that judgment ought to be entered for defendant. Ib.

Distraining on Lodger's Goods.]—See Distress.

To Use of Premises.]—If a person takes lodgings on the first and second floors of a house, he has a right to the use of the door-bell, the knocker, and the skylight of the staircase, and the water-closet, unless it is otherwise stipulated at the time of the taking of the lodgings ; therefore, if the landlord deprives the lodger of the use of either, an action lies. Underwood v. Burrows, 7 Car. & P. 26.

Right of Voting at Parliamentary Elections.]—See Election Law.

3. Liability of Lodging-house Keeper.

Common Lodging-house—Registration.]—A lodging-house, where hawkers and persons of a similar class are received, staying for various periods, having their meals in one room, and paying sixpence a night, is a common lodging-house within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1875, and therefore requires registration. Langdon v. Broadbent, 37 L. T. 434.

Penalty for Keeping—Charitable Institutions—Non-registration.]—Sect. 3 of the Common

Lodging Houses Act, 1853, provides that "a person shall not keep a common lodging-house or receive a lodger therein until the house has been inspected and approved for that purpose by some officer appointed in that behalf by the local authority, and has been registered." The appellant opened and kept a lodging-house for the reception of male lodgers, who slept in one common room capable of accommodating 100 persons. The lodgers were charged, at the discretion of the manager, a sum not exceeding 4*d.* per night for bed, supper and breakfast; but the house was maintained not for the purpose of gain, but for the accommodation of the poorest class of persons only, partly with a charitable and partly with a religious object. The house had not been inspected or approved by the officer of the local authority, nor was it registered. The appellant having been summoned and convicted for keeping a common lodging-house in contravention of the provisions of the above section:—Held, that the house, being maintained as a charitable institution, and not for purposes of gain, was not a common lodging-house within the meaning of the act, and that the conviction could not be supported. Booth v. Ferrett, 59 L. J., M. C. 136; 25 Q. B. D. 87; 63 L. T. 346; 38 W. R. 718; 55 J. P. 7.

"Keeper of"—Non-residence of Landlord.]—The landlord of a house in the city of Dublin, all the rooms of which are let out in tenements by the week, at rents less than three shillings per week, although he does not reside upon the premises, is the keeper of a common lodging-house within the meaning of the Dublin Improvement Acts Amendment Act, 1864, s. 24. Halligan v. Ganly, 19 L. T. 268.

By-laws and Registration.] — See LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

For Loss of Lodgers' Goods.]—There is no duty of the keeper of a lodging-house arising out of the relation of lodging-house keeper and lodger, to take care of his lodger's goods as in the case of an innkeeper. Holder v. Soulby, 8 C. B (N.S.) 254; 29 L. J., C. P. 246; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1031; 2 L. T. 219; 8 W. R. 438.

Nor, assuming it to be a usage in lodging-houses that the keeper, when the lodger is about to quit his apartments, has licence to enter and show them to strangers who are inquiring for lodgings, is there, arising out of that usage, any liability on the keeper, if the goods are then stolen, for not using due and proper care to prevent such persons from carrying away the lodgers' goods then in the apartments. Ib.

Lodgers are bound to take care of their own goods. Ib.

—— Dishonesty of Servant.]—To render a lodging-house keeper liable for the wrongful acts of a servant, the lodging-house keeper must have been guilty of such a misfeasance, or such gross misconduct, as an ordinary and reasonable person would not have been guilty of. Clench v. D'Arenberg, 1 Cab. & E. 42.

A declaration alleged that the plaintiff became a guest in a boarding-house of the defendant, on the terms that she would take due and reasonable care of the plaintiff's goods while they were in her house, for hire and reward to her in that behalf payable, and that it became her duty, by herself and her servant, to take such due and reasonable care of the plaintiff's goods whilst she remained as a guest, with the goods in the defendant's house. It appeared that the plaintiff was a guest in the defendant's boarding-house, paying between 2*l.* and 3*l.* per week, and having the use of sitting, drawing and dining-rooms, in common with others, her own bedroom, her board, and the attendance of the servants. In the evening the plaintiff, being about to leave, while her luggage was in the hall, near the front door, sent one of the servants out to a shop near for biscuits; he left the front door ajar, and a thief entered and stole a box of the plaintiff's. The judge directed the jury that the defendant was not bound to take more care of her house and the things in it than a prudent owner would take; and one of the questions which he left to the jury was whether, supposing the loss to have been occasioned by the negligence of the servant in leaving the door ajar, there was any negligence on the part of the defendant in hiring or keeping the servant:—Held, that it was at least the duty of a boarding-house keeper to take such care of her house and the goods of her guests in it as a prudent householder would take. Dansey v. Richardson, 3 El. & Bl. 144; 2 C. L. R. 1442; 23 L. J., Q. B. 217; 18 Jur. 721.

By Lord Campbell, C.J., and Coleridge, J., that it was a breach of the defendant's duty, as keeper of a boarding-house, if, through the gross negligence of herself or her servant, the plaintiff's box was stolen; and that the distinction between the negligence of the servant in leaving the door open, and the negligence of the defendant in hiring or keeping the servant, could not be supported, and therefore that the direction was wrong. But by Wightman and Erle, JJ., a boarding-house keeper is not bound to take more care about the goods of his guest than he as a prudent owner would take with respect to his own; and that if the defendant had taken care to employ and keep none but trustworthy servants, she was not liable for the act of negligence of the servant in leaving the door open, and therefore that the direction was right. Ib.

1. LAND CHARGES REGISTRATION AND SEARCHES ACT, 1888.

Charges within—Charges under Public Health Act.]—By s. 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, certain expenses incurred by local authorities, for the payment of which the owner of the premises in respect of which they were incurred is liable, may be recovered from the owner, and until recovery are a charge upon such premises:—Held, that such expenses are not "land charges" within the meaning of the Land Charges Registration and Searches Act, 1888, so as to require registration under that act. Reg. v. Holt, 59 L. J., Q. B. 113; 24 Q. B. D. 178; 62 L. T. 117; 38 W. R. 236; 54 J. P. 120.

Vacating Registration.]—A husband being in default for non-payment of alimony and costs, writs of sequestration were issued to enforce payment, and were duly registered under the Lands Charges Act, 1888. Before the sequestrators could sell the property in respect of which the writs had been issued, the husband assigned his interest therein, and the assignee having satisfied the claims by paying an agreed sum into court, the petitioner, with the concurrence of all parties, applied to discharge the sequestrators and to vacate the registration of the writs:—Held, that there was no power under the act to order the registration of the writs to be vacated. Cook v. Cook, 59 L. J., P. 69; 15 P. D. 116; 62 L. T. 667; 38 W. R. 656.

2. TRANSFER OF LAND ACT, 1862.

Indefeasible Title—Trustees for Sale—Consent.]—Trustees having the legal estate in, and being empowered to sell real estate, with the consent of the beneficial tenant for life, for the time being, entitled in possession, are not "trustees for sale of the fee simple," within the fourth clause of the 4th section of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53. Bradish v. Ellames, 3 N. R. 632; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 251; 10 L. T. 89.

—— Purchaser for Mortgagee.]—A mortgagor registered with an indefeasible title made three successive mortgages, all of which were entered on the register of incumbrances; the first mortgagee sold under his power of sale, and conveyed the estate to a purchaser:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to be registered with an indefeasible title. Richardson's Purchase, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 616; L. R. 12 Eq. 398; 25 L. T. 12; 19 W. R. 1048; as varied on a subsequent application, 41 L. J., Ch. 221; L. R. 13 Eq. 142; 20 W. R. 163.

When the owner of an equity of redemption of real estate is entered on the register of estates with an indefeasible title, under the Transfer of Land Act, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, subject to a mortgage, and the mortgagee afterwards exercises his power of sale, and conveys part of the registered property to a purchaser, such purchaser is entitled, after his conveyance has been entered on the register, to have the property bought by him, and all entries relating thereto removed from the register without the consent of the mortgagor. Winter, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 318; L. R. 15 Eq. 156; 27 L. T. 842; 21 W. R. 320.

—— Expenses of making Roads—Charge.]—A. the owner of seven lots of land, sold two of them to B., and he retained five. They entered into mutual covenants for bearing, in proportion, the expenses of a road common to all the lots, and there was a proviso that the expenses should be a charge upon the owners of the seven lots in proportion:—Held, that the land was not charged, and that A. was entitled to have an indefeasible title to his five lots registered under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, without noticing the proviso or the claims of B. Mason, Ex parte, Drew's Estate, In re, 35 Beav. 443; 35 L. J., Ch. 845; L. R. 2 Eq. 206; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 425; 14 L. T. 278.

—— "Valid Marketable Title."]—In 1857, in suits in chancery, it had been certified that a good title could be made to certain estates, and the estates were afterwards sold under orders of the court, subject to a condition that the title should not be required prior to a private act of parliament which had vested the estates in trustees for sale, and which recited the previous certificate of good title made by the court of chancery:—Held, that the title up to the period for which it had been certified might be accepted without further examination as indefeasible for registration. Watney, In re, 38 L. J., Ch. 57.

Jurisdiction of Court.]—Semble, the jurisdiction of the court of chancery was not extended by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, which act was only intended to give the court power to make a sale with an indefeasible title, when it had jurisdiction aliunde to order the sale. Bradish v. Ellames, 3 N. R. 632; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 251; 10 L. T. 89.

Practice.]—Mode of obtaining the opinion of the court under the 17th and 134th sections of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53. Anon., 5 N. R. 230.

The preliminary order or orders under the s. 43 of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, must be made on petition in court, and not upon application in chambers; and it is proper before obtaining certificate, that an order or orders should be made embracing all the matters referred to in that section. Bradish v. Ellames, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1231; 11 L. T. 532; 13 W. R. 170.

—— Materials in support of Application.]—In ex parte applications, under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, s. 4, for the opinion and directions of a judge, a statement, in writing, of the facts should be prepared, certified by the registrar, and submitted to the judge. Kennard, In re, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 27; 11 L. T. 585; 13 W. R. 302.

When an ex parte application for an order to the registrar of titles is accompanied by a written statement of the circumstances of the case, certified by the registrar of the court, the judge must hear it. Drew's Estate, In re, 35 Beav. 446; 35 L. J., Ch. 845; L. R. 1 Ch. 126; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1030.

The practice with regard to appeals from the land registry office is for the court to proceed on a certified statement of the registrar. Ib.

—— Advertisements.]—Upon an application for the sale by the court of lands with an indefeasible title, the court will fix a day upon which parties who have sent in claims in answer to the advertisements directed by the act must bring in evidence of such claims. Bradish v. Ellames, 15 L. T. 350; 15 W. R. 380.

LAND SOCIETY.

Rules—Construction.]—A land society was formed for the purchase of an estate to be sold in lots to the members, each of whom covenanted to abide by the rules of the society. The estate was purchased by trustees for the society, and the purchase-money was secured by mortgages on which the trustees were liable. The estate was divided into numbered allotments, and a price set opposite each number to be paid by monthly instalments, and such allotments were to be allotted at that price unless previously sold by auction. By r. 35 members were required in addition to the price of their allotments, to pay a proportionate part of the price, expenses, and interest payable in respect of allotments held from time to time by the trustees. The rules further provided for the forfeiture of allotments in case of default, and declared that the rights of the defaulting member in respect of such allotments should absolutely cease; they empowered the trustees to sell such forfeited allotments, and required them in the event of a sale, after deducting all moneys payable under the rules by the defaulting member, to pay him the surplus of the proceeds:—Held, that unallotted and forfeited allotments were allotments held from time to time by the trustees within r. 35, and that members were liable for contributions in respect thereof. Hill v. Crank, 62 L. J., Q. B. 145; 68 L. T. 551—C. A.

—— Building Society.]—A society whose rules are certified as a building society is not justified in acting as a freehold land society. Grimes v. Harrison, 26 Beav. 435; 28 L. J., Ch. 823; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 528; 23 J. P. 421. And see Kent Building Society, In re, 1 Dr. & Sm. 417; 30 L. J., Ch. 785; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1045; 4 L. T. 610; 9 W. R. 686.

I. CONSTRUCTION OF COMPULSORY POWERS.

General Rules.]—Equity, in exercising its jurisdiction to prevent companies, intrusted with large powers by the legislature, acting in a manner prejudicial to the rights of individuals on the one hand, will, on the other, be careful not to assist persons in availing themselves of any omission in such powers, for the purpose of giving effect to exorbitant claims against the companies. Bell v. Hull and Selby Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 616.

It is on the ground of ageneral public good, that the legislature grants to railway companies the compulsory powers of taking the property of individuals. Gray v. Liverpool and Bury Ry., 9 Beav. 391; 4 Railw. Cas. 235; 10 Jur. 364.

In questions between companies and individuals whose property the former seek to take under compulsory clauses in their acts, the court does not strain the construction of the act in favour of the former. Ib.

When the power of fully completing a railway, according to the intention of the legislature, depends on the voluntary consent of individuals having property on the proposed line, such consent ought to be obtained by the company before they proceed in the undertaking. Whether, where it is evident that the line of a railway cannot be fully completed, the company have a right, compulsorily, to take any part of the property in the proposed line, quære. Ib.

The court will not take into consideration the possibility of a public company hereafter obtaining extended parliamentary powers. G. W. Ry. v. Metropolitan Ry., 1 N. R. 551.

Injuring Persons without Compensation.]—It is a proper rule of construction not to construe an act of parliament as interfering with or injuring persons' rights without compensation, unless one is obliged to so construe it. Att.-Gen. v. Horner, 54 L. J., Q. B. 232; 14 Q. B. D. 257; 33 W. R. 93; 49 J. P. 326.

Strict Construction.]—The court will not construe the compulsory powers of a railway company so as to extend them beyond the express words or absolutely necessary implication of the act, it being the duty of the company to take care that the public understand, before the act is passed, the extent of the compulsory powers that they require. Lamb v. North London Ry., L. R. 4 Ch. 522; 21 L. T. 98; 17 W. R. 746.

Acts of parliament authorising the construction of public undertakings are to be construed strictly with reference to the rights of those who are empowered to make them. Eversfield v. Mid-Sussex Ry., 5 Jur. (N.S.) 776.

Doubtful Construction.]—Where the construction of an act of parliament under which property is to be compulsorily taken is doubtful, it should be construed most favourably to those who seek to defend the property from innovation. Sparrow v. Oxford, Worcester and Wolverhampton Ry., 9 Hare, 441.

Observations as to the construction of doubtful passages of acts of parliament, as between a company and the public. Eton College, Ex parte, 20 L. J., Ch. 1; 15 Jur. 45.

It is incumbent on a company claiming a statutory compulsory power of taking land to prove clearly and distinctly from the act of parliament the existence of the power; and if there is any doubt with regard to its extent, the landowner should have the benefit of that doubt. Simpson v. South Staffordshire Water Works Co., 4 De G. J. & S. 679; 34 L. J., Ch. 380; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 453; 12 L. T. 360; 13 W. R. 729, 908. S. P., Barker v. North Staffordshire Ry., 2 De G. & Sm. 55; 5 Railw. Cas. 401; 12 Jur. 324, 575, 589.

Powers conferred on Public Bodies.]—In the construction of powers conferred by act of parliament upon public bodies acting for the public benefit alone, the intention of the legislature is not to be measured by the more guarded powers given to public companies established for trading purposes. North London Ry. v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 1 Johns. 405; 28 L. J., Ch. 909; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1121; 7 W. R. 640.

An act empowering a company to contract for purposes of public advantage ought not to receive a narrow construction. Dover Gas Light Co. v. Dover Corporation, 7 De G. M. & G. 545.

Where the legislature confers powers on any body, whether one which is seeking to make a profit for shareholders, or one acting solely for the public good, to take lands compulsorily for a particular purpose, it is on the ground that the using of that land for that purpose will be for the public good, and a contract purporting to bind such a body and their successors not to use those powers is void. Ayr Harbour Trustees v. Oswald, 8 App. Cas. 623—H. L. (Sc.)

Deviation from Powers given.]—Acts of parliament for making canals, railroads, etc., are powers given by parliament over the land of the different proprietors through whose estates the works are to proceed. Each proprietor, therefore, has a right to have the power strictly and literally carried into effect, as regards his own lands, and also has a right to require that no variation shall be made to his prejudice. But where the act of parliament is faithfully carried into execution, as regards his lands, he cannot on the mere ground of a variation which is not injurious to himself, and which was made with the consent of others, obtain from a court of equity, an injunction to stay the proceedings. Lee v. Milner, 2 Y. & Coll. 611.

Persons obtaining from the legislature power to interfere with the rights of property are bound strictly to adhere to the powers so conceded to them, to do no more than the legislature has sanctioned, and to proceed only in the mode which the legislature has pointed out; but (except in a proceeding at the instance of the attorney-general) any one seeking the assistance of a court of equity, to restrain the violation of such a contract with the legislature, is bound to show that he has a private interest in the matter. Liverpool Corporation v. Chorley Water Works Co., 2 De G. M. & G. 852.

Land must be bonâ fide required.]—Principles upon which the court will exercise its jurisdiction over bodies to whom parliament has given powers of making compulsory purchases of land. Webb v. Manchester and Leeds Ry., 4 Myl. & C. 116; 1 Railw. Cas. 576.

Semble, that the court will not allow such bodies to avail themselves of their parliamentary powers, by taking land which they do not require for a bonâ fide purpose sanctioned by their act of parliament. Ib.

Semble, also, that although an attempt to obtain possession of land has been, in the first instance, made under colour of the powers of the act of parliament, when not really required for the bonâ fide purposes of the act, yet if the land afterwards becomes really necessary or desirable for such bonâ fide purposes, the court will not interfere to prevent its being taken. Ib.

Taking not Authorised.]—Where a railway company takes land in excess of its powers, semble, the court will not grant relief by injunction if the quantity and value of the land are extremely small. Dowling v. Pontypool, Caerleon and Newport Ry., 43 L. J., Ch. 761; L. R. 18 Eq. 714.

Object attainable in Another Way.]—When a railway company has given notice to take land for some object which is clearly within their compulsory powers, a court of equity will not interfere to restrain them merely on the ground that they might obtain the same object in some other way without taking the land. Lamb v. North London Ry., L. R. 4 Ch. 522; 21 L. T. 98; 17 W. R. 746.

Public Act.]—An act of parliament for the formation of a railway, containing a declaration that it is to be judicially taken notice of as a public act, cannot be treated or construed as a private assurance. Hargreaves v. Lancaster and Preston Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 416.

Enabling not Compulsory.]—Acts of parliament, authorising companies to make railways, are regarded as but enabling statutes which give powers, but do not render compulsory or obligatory the exercise of those powers. Scottish

North Eastern Ry. v. Stewart, 3 Macq. H. L. 382 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 607 ; 7 W. R. 458. S. P., Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee Ry. v. Philip, 2 Macq. H. L. 514 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 249 ; 5 W. R. 377. Astley v. M. S. & L. Ry., 2 De G. & J. 453 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 478 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 567 ; 6 W. R. 561.

Incorporation of Lands Clauses Act.]—Where an act of parliament with compulsory powers incorporates the whole of the Lands Clauses Act, a right to compensation is without any other enactment conferred upon the persons interested in lands injuriously affected by the exercise of such powers. Reg. v. St. Luke's, Chelsea, 41 L. J., Q. B. 81 ; L. R. 7 Q. B. 148 ; 25 L. T. 914 ; 20 W. R. 209—Ex. Ch.

The effect of the incorporation of a general act by the special act of a company with compulsory powers is, that the general act must be looked at with reference to the powers conferred upon the company of dealing with the land when required ; but it is to the special act that regard must be had for the purpose of ascertaining the contract between the landowner and the company, and the power which the company has of acquiring the land. Simpson v. South Staffordshire Waterworks, In re, 4 De G. J. & S. 679 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 380 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 453 ; 12 L. T. 360 ; 13 W. R. 729. See also Westminster Estate (Parish of St. Sepulchre), In re, 4 De G., J. & S. 232 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 372 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 298 ; 9 L. T. 819 ; 12 W. R. 499 ; 3 N. R. 594.

The Lands Clauses Act is not to be considered as incorporated in a subsequent private act of parliament, the object of which is merely to give a certain benefit to a company in respect of a lease which has been conditionally granted to them, and which it confirms ; the former act being applicable only where land is sought to be acquired for undertakings of a public nature. Wale v. Westminster Palace Hotel Co., 8 C. B. (N.S.) 276 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 26 ; 9 W. R. 14.

A railway act passed in 1844, under which lands were taken afterwards. In 1845, the Lands Clauses Act passed ; and in 1847 a second railway act was passed extending the first :—Held, that the Lands Clauses Act applied to the whole undertaking, and became consolidated both with the acts of 1844 and 1847, and that the owner of lands taken under the first act of 1844 became entitled to the benefit of its provisions. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry. v. Evans, 15 Beav. 322. S. P., Evans v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., 1 El. & Bl. 754 ; 22 L. J., Q. B. 254 ; 17 Jur. 878.

Exclusion of.]—The City of London Sewers Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. clxiii.), incorporates the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, except so far as they are inconsistent therewith, or are therein declared not to extend thereto ; and by s. 3, the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act relating to the "purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement," are declared not to extend to the City of London Sewers Act :—Held, that s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, which is included under the heading "Purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement," preceding s. 16, was excepted by the form of words used in s. 3 of the City of London Sewers Act ; and that a person whose premises had been injuriously affected by works done under the latter act was not entitled to compensation. Ferrar v. Sewers Commissioners, 38 L. J., Ex. 102 ; L. R. 4 Ex. 227 ; 21 L. T. 295 ; 17 W. R. 709—Ex. Ch.

By two acts of Geo. 3, the defendants were empowered to alter the levels of streets without compensating those injured by such alteration. The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, enables a vestry to purchase any right or easement over any land necessary for their works ; it also incorporates the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, but excludes the operation of ss. 16 to 68, being those sections which relate to the taking of lands otherwise than by agreement ; and by s. 247 it repeals all acts which are inconsistent with it. The defendants obstructed the plaintiff's light in raising a street, and refused to enter into any agreement or pay compensation :—Held, that in the absence of any agreement, the defendant was not entitled to compensation, as s. 68 was not incorporated. Baker v. St. Marylebone Vestry, 24 W. R. 848 ; 35 L. T. 129.

The London (City) Improvement Act, 1847, provided, by s. 1, that the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, "so far as the provisions thereof were not expressly varied or accepted," should be incorporated ; and by s. 19, that "so much of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, as relates to the purchase of lands otherwise than by agreement" should not be incorporated. The Holborn Valley Improvement Act, 1864, by s. 5, incorporated the act of 1847, except s. 19, and also the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, "except the part of the last-mentioned act with respect to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement." An act for further improvements of the Holborn Valley, passed in 1867, by s. 1, incorporated the previous Improvement Act, except certain sections, and the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, "except the provisions of the last-mentioned act with respect to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement." Under the Holborn Valley Improvement Act, 1864, the corporation of London constructed certain works, and thereby blocked up a street near the plaintiff's premises, and diminished the access to and value of the premises, and the plaintiff sent in a claim under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 68 :—Held, that s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act was excepted from the local acts, and that (even assuming s. 68, if incorporated, would give a right to compensation) this being so, and no other sections giving such a right, the plaintiff was not entitled to compensation either by statutory process or right of action at common law. Dungey v. London Corporation, 38 L. J., C. P. 298 ; 20 L. T. 921 ; 17 W. R. 1106.

By a special act the Lands Clauses Act, "except so much as related exclusively to the purchase and taking of land by compulsion," was incorporated with it :—Held, that s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act was not excepted, although that section was within the division of the Lands Clauses Act relating to "the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement." Broadbent v. Imperial Gas Light Co., 7 De G. M. & G. 436 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 276 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 221 ; 5 W. R. 272.

Varying.]—The Lands Clauses Act, 1845, contained special provisions with regard to claims for compensation for lands affected by the works of a railway, and directed that (except in certain specified cases) compensation should be awarded with costs. A special act (38 & 39 Vict. c. ccviii.) declared that the provisions of the general act were, "except where expressly varied by the special act," incorporated with it. The general act provided the forms of proceedings in arbitrations—such as the appointment of arbitrators by the contending parties, and the appointment of an umpire by the arbitrators—and declared that compensation might be recovered with costs. The special act directed that arbitrations conducted under its provisions should be conducted by an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade, but contained no specific directions as to the award of costs. An arbitration of this sort took place under the special act. The arbitrator awarded compensation, but said nothing as to costs:—Held, that the claimant was entitled to costs, for that the substitution of one form of proceeding in the arbitration different from that in the general statute, expressly varied the provisions of the general statute as to that matter, but did not repeal the provisions as to costs in the general statute, nor affect the general rule that the party succeeding in such an arbitration should recover costs. Metropolitan District Ry. v. Sharpe, 50 L. J., Q. B. 14; 5 App. Cas. 425; 43 L. T. 130; 28 W. R. 617; 44 J. P. 716—H. L. (E.)

II. PURCHASE OF LANDS.

A. BY AGREEMENT.

1. Generally, 1299.
2. Capacity to Sell and Convey, 1302.
3. In Consideration of a Rent-charge, 1305.
4. Agreements between Landowners and Promoters, 1307.
5. Specific Performance, 1311.

1. GENERALLY.

To procure Supply of Water.]—A clause in an agreement by a railway company to purchase land, binding the company to procure a supply of water as good as the supply of water cut off by the construction of the line from the severed lands of the vendor, only binds the company to do once for all that which may reasonably be expected to insure a sufficient supply of water, and does not bind them to do whatever may be necessary from time to time to secure that result. Gray and Metropolitan Ry., In re, 44 L. T. 567.

"Necessary and convenient for Traffic"—Land used for Garden—Coal-shed let to Tenant.]—Land was conveyed to a railway company for the construction of "a station-house and other works and conveniences necessary and convenient for passenger and goods traffic," with a covenant by the company that if any part should not within five years be used for the purposes of the station-house, works and conveniences, and so used at the expiration of that time, the company would reconvey or purchase as therein mentioned. About fifty-two perches were used as garden ground in part by the station-master and in part by some of the porters, and about four perches were occupied by a coal-shed, let by the company to a coal dealer to store his coal brought by the railway, ready for distribution:—Held, that the company were not bound to reconvey or purchase. Harris v. L. & S. W. Ry., 60 L. T. 392.

Time for Purchase of Land.]—A landowner agreed with a railway company to sell them ten acres of land and one acre for a station, at a certain price, and that if the company should require more land for the station, or for any purpose, they should pay for the same at the rate of 100*l.* per acre, and the agreement was to be supplemental to the Lands Clauses Act. The ten acres were paid for and conveyed. Before the compulsory powers of the company had expired they gave (apparently by mistake) notice to treat for three acres more, and before the time for completion expired they took possession of these three acres, alleging that they required the land. They also took possession of some small pieces of land which were covered by earth slipped from the railway:—Held, that, under the agreement the company had power, until the expiration of the time limited for the completion of the railway, to take such land as they required for the purpose of a station, or for slips of earth at 100*l.* an acre. Kemp v. S. E. Ry., 41 L. J., Ch. 404; L. R. 7 Ch. 364; 26 L. T. 110; 20 W. R. 306.

An agreement between a railway company and landowner provided that in case the company should require additional land for the purposes of their railway and works, they should pay for it at the rate of 200*l.* per acre, without further payment in respect of severance or other damages:—Held, that the company were thereby authorised to take land for the purpose of diverting a footway, within the time for completing their works, which had not expired, although the time for compulsory taking of land had expired. Rangeley v. Midland Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 313; L. R. 3 Ch. 306; 18 L. T. 69; 16 W. R. 547.

Public companies having power to purchase land cannot contract for its purchase, and insist upon a custom to defer its completion to the extreme period of time allowed them for the taking of land and the completion of their works. No such custom exists, but they are bound to complete their contract within a reasonable time. Baker v. Metropolitan Ry., 31 Beav. 504; 32 L. J., Ch. 7; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 61; 7 L. T. 494; 11 W. R. 18.

Price and Damages.]—Action for obstructing a private right of way. Plea, that the defendants were authorised to make a railway near to the plaintiff's messuage, for which purpose they agreed in writing to purchase his land near the messuage; and as the making of the railway was likely to injure him, it was agreed that the defendants should pay to the plaintiff, for the purchase of the land, such a sum of money as should compensate not only for the price, but also for all injury which should necessarily arise from making the railway near to the messuage. That in pursuance of this agreement by a deed, the plaintiff, in consideration of 575*l.* paid to her by the defendants, conveyed the land to them for the purpose of making the railway. That it was agreed that that sum should be accepted, and the plaintiff accepted the same, for the purchase of the land, and by way of compensation for all damage which she might sustain by reason of the exercise of the powers of the act upon the land purchased, 575*l.* being the sum so agreed to be paid, to compensate the plaintiff, not only for the price of the land, but also for all injury which should necessarily arise from making the railway. That the grievances complained of were part of the injury necessarily arising from making the railway, and were part of the damage sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the exercise of the powers of the act, and intended to be compensated. The deed recited, "whereas the plaintiff has agreed to accept, and the defendants to pay, 575*l.* for the land, and by way of compensation for all damage which may be sustained by the plaintiff, by reason of the exercise of any of the powers of the act upon the land so agreed to be purchased" :—Held, that the plea was bad, for that the legal effect of the agreement, as stated in the plea, was, that the sum was paid to compensate the plaintiff for all such injury as should necessarily arise from making the railway near to the messuage of the plaintiff ; whereas, by the deed, it appeared that it was paid to compensate for specific injury only, not complained of in the declaration. Pilgrim v. Southampton and Dorchester Ry., 7 C. B. 205 ; 18 L. J., C. P. 139 ; 13 Jur. 515.

Effect of Notice to Treat.]—After the passing of the act, the company, before claiming the benefit of the agreement, served the defendant with a common notice to treat, and did not formally insist on the agreement until the defendant had appointed an arbitrator. The company subsequently entered under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act :—Held, that this clause applied exclusively to compulsory purchases; that the proceedings of the company assumed the non-existence of any agreement; and on these grounds a bill by the company and two promoters for specific performance of the agreement was dismissed. Bedford and Cambridge Ry. v. Stanley, 2 J. & H. 746 ; 1 N. R. 162 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 60 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 152 ; 7 L. T. 477 ; 11 W. R. 139. See Kemp v. S. E. Ry., 25 L. T. 622.

Abandonment—Compulsory Powers.]—If a company exercises its compulsory powers, and takes proceedings under the Lands Clauses Act, relating to the purchase of lands otherwise than by agreement, it cannot afterwards enforce a prior agreement. Ib.

Agreement purporting to diminish Powers over Land taken.]—Harbour trustees, constituted for the management and improvement of a public harbour by a special act, which incorporated the Land Clauses (Scotland) Act, 1845, were empowered to take lands scheduled (which included that part of O.'s land having an unrestricted frontage to the harbour) for the undertaking. While the question of compensation to O. for his land was before the arbiter the trustees lodged a minute agreeing that the conveyance should restrict their use of the ground taken so as not to interfere with the access from the remaining property of O. to the harbour. To this minute O. did not assent. The arbiter found 4,900*l.* payable by the trustees as compensation for an unrestricted use, or 2,786*l.* if it were competent for the trustees to bind themselves and their successors by the above-mentioned minute. O. raised an action for declarator of an absolute purchase and unrestricted right in the subject, and for payment of the larger sum :—Held, that the trustees had power under their special act, now or at any future time, to make erections on the piece of ground taken, which would effectually destroy the frontage of O.'s remaining property to the harbour ; secondly, it was not competent to the trustees to dispense with future exercise of their powers by themselves and their successors. Ayr Harbour Trustees v. Oswald, 8 App. Cas. 623—H. L. (Sc.)

Effect of, on Legal Rights.]—A railway company having purchased of the proprietors of a canal all their estate and interest in it, subject to certain leases, as to portions thereof, being houses and wharves, determinable upon six months' notice ; and, previously to obtaining their act, having agreed with the lessees of the said houses and wharves to give them satisfaction, recompense and compensation for the value of their leasehold interests, or for damage sustained by them in respect of fixtures and improvements or otherwise, by the execution of the act ; and the railway company being then the reversioners, gave the lessees notice to determine their tenancies :—Held, that the court would not permit them so to exercise their legal rights on the face of the above agreement. Doo v. Croydon Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 257 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 200 ; 3 Jur. 258.

—— Leaseholds.]—Where a railway company arranges by agreement with a lessee to take land held under a lease containing a proviso against assignment without the licence of the lessor, the necessity for such licence is taken away by the operation of the act. Slipper v. Tottenham and Hampstead Junction Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 841 ; L. R. 4 Eq. 112 ; 16 L. T. 446 ; 15 W. R. 861.

Where a portion of the land comprised in a lease is taken by a railway company, the lessee is not bound, under s. 119, to procure the lessor's consent to the agreement with the company for the apportionment of the rent. Ib.

2. CAPACITY TO SELL AND CONVEY.

Act strictly Construed.]—The provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, s. 9, which relate to the purchase of lands from persons under disability, must be strictly complied with. Wycombe Ry. v. Donnington Hospital, L. R. 1 Ch. 268 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 347 ; 14 L. T. 179 ; 14 W. R. 359.

Unless the court is convinced that future interests have been substantially protected. Adderley (Rector), Ex parte, 10 L. T. 131 ; 12 W. R. 243.

Husband and Wife.]—Where a testator devised land to his widow, Mary, for life, remainder to his son, and Elizabeth his wife in fee, who, during the life of the tenant for life, conveyed the land by a deed not acknowledged to a railway company :—Held, that the wife's interest was within s. 7 of the Lands Clauses Act, and passed to the company. Cooper v. Gostling, 4 Giff. 449 ; 9 L. T. 77 ; 11 W. R. 931.

Equitable Tenant for Life.]—An equitable tenant for life cannot, under s. 7 of the Lands Clauses Act, make a conveyance which will pass the legal estate. Lippincott v. Smyth, 29 L. J., Ch., 520 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 311 ; 2 L. T. 79 ; 8 W. R. 336.

Tenant in Tail.]—Inalienable estates tail are within s. 7 of the Lands Clauses Act, and may, under that statute, be conveyed by the tenant in tail in possession ; but that statute does not extend to the crown, for the king not being specially named therein, the rights of the crown are unaffected thereby. Cuckfield Burial Board, In re, 19 Beav. 153 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 585 ; 3 W. R. 142.

Death of Vendor—Infant a Trustee.]—A vendor contracted to sell land to a railway company, and died, having demised the land to an infant. The company had entered into possession under its statutory powers, but had not accepted the title. On a petition under the Trustee Act, the court made an order declaring the infant a trustee for, and directing that on payment of the purchase-money he or some proper person should convey to, the company. Lowry's Will, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 509; L. R. 15 Eq. 78; 21 W. R. 428.

Trustee absent.]—Where one of two trustees for sale was absent in America:—Held, that the other, under the description of an "incapacitated" person, was entitled by the London Bridge Acts to make a conveyance for the purpose of such acts. Tatham, Ex parte, London Bridge Acts, In re, 3 Y. & Coll. 67; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 64; 2 Jur. 440.

Person of Unsound Mind.]—Sect. 7 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, does not authorise a person of unsound mind to sell land to a company or public body who have statutory power to take it: the section only authorises the committee of a lunatic to sell. Tugwell, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 1006; 27 Ch. D. 309; 51 L. T. 83; 33 W. R. 132.

Applies to s. 92.]—Persons under disability, who can sell and convey under ss. 6 and 7 of the Lands Clauses Act, are able to sell and convey within the meaning of s. 92. St. Thomas's Hospital v. Charing Cross Ry., 1 J. & H. 400; 30 L. J., Ch. 395; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 256; 4 L. T. 13; 9 W. R. 411.

Lunatic Asylum.]—A contract for the sale of land to the committee of visitors of a lunatic asylum may be approved of by the court of quarter sessions before being actually signed by the parties, if it can be identified as the contract which was afterwards entered into. Derenish v. Brown, 26 L. J., Ch. 23; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1043; 4 W. R. 783.

Sect. 36 of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, incorporating the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, with respect to the purchase-money or compensation coming to parties having limited interests enables parties having limited interests to contract with the committee of visitors for the sale of land, although the committee of visitors has no compulsory powers of purchasing. Ib.

Trustees—Powers of Sale.]—A testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate (which comprised freehold lands, in respect of which a notice to treat was given by a railway company before the death of the testator) to the use of trustees and their heirs in trust for his wife for life, and after her death to pay and assure the same unto his two married daughters, in equal shares, for their separate use as tenants in common, with a gift over in favour of their respective issue in events which did not happen; "and for the purpose of division" he empowered his trustees to sell his residuary estate; and he declared that his trustees should be entitled to be paid for all business done by them in relation to his estate. The testator's wife, his two daughters and their husbands, all survived him; and after the death of the widow the trustees sold and conveyed the lands to a railway company for a price which had been determined by the valuation of two surveyors, as provided by s. 9 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845; the trustees having first, for the purpose of making such valuation, appointed one of themselves as the surveyor on their behalf. One of the testator's daughters disputed the validity of the sale, and brought an action to restrain the company from taking or using the lands:—Held, first, that whether the power of sale under the will was still in existence or not, the trustees did not exercise it, but professed to convey the land under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, and therefore the validity of the sale must be determined without reference to the power. Peters v. Lewes and East Grinstead Ry., 50 L. J., Ch. 839; 18 Ch. D. 429; 45 L. T. 234; 29 W. R. 875—C. A.

Secondly, that the trustees, being trustees of the land for femes covertes who were absolutely entitled for their separate use, were not persons competent to contract with a railway company for the sale of the land under s. 7 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and that the sale was for that reason invalid. Ib.

Appointment of Surveyor—Certificate.]—A sale by trustees is invalid by reason of the appointment by the trustees of one of themselves as surveyor to value the land under s. 9 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Ib.

The mere fact of trustees having the price fixed by two surveyors, and then agreeing to sell for that price, instead of first agreeing to sell for a certain price and then testing the price by the valuation of two surveyors, would not in itself invalidate a sale under s. 9 of the Lands Clauses Act—Per Jessel, M.R. But held by Hall, V.-C.:—That trustees cannot sell under the act at a price to be determined by valuation, but must first fix the price by agreement, and then ascertain its sufficiency by valuation. Ib.

The fact that the provisions of s. 9 of the Land Clauses Act have not been complied with, which require, in the case of a purchase from a person having a limited interest, that the value should be ascertained as therein provided, is no bar to the court decreeing performance of the contract, as it will itself, if necessary, ascertain that the price to be paid is sufficient. Baker v. Metropolitan Ry., 31 Beav. 504; 32 L. J., Ch. 7; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 61; 7 L. T. 494; 11 W. R. 18.

Where a railway company agreed for the purchase of lands from persons under disability, and the certificate of two surveyors, as to the adequacy of price, had not been obtained, the court refused to decree specific performance at the instance of the company. Wycombe Ry. v. Donnington Hospital, L. R. 1 Ch. 268; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 347; 14 L. T. 179; 14 W. R. 359.

A municipal corporation was, under a local waterworks act, which incorporated the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, empowered to take, use, divert and appropriate certain streams and sources of water, and also a stream which flowed to, and was essential to the working of, a mill, of which the plaintiff was tenant for life. The corporation accordingly gave him notice of their intention to divert the whole of the stream, and did take and divert a great portion of it. Subsequently, by an agreement, made under the powers of the special act, he and the corporation agreed to refer to two surveyors "the amount of compensation-money to be now paid by the corporation for the damage which the owner or owners for the time being of the premises may sustain by the abstraction of the whole of the streams," &c., which the corporation was empowered to take and divert. The surveyors were unable to agree, and a third surveyor was nominated under s. 9, who made his award, assessing a sum as compensation for the permanent damage and injury which the owner or owners for the time being of the mill, &c., may have sustained, or shall or may sustain by the abstraction of the whole of the streams," &c. The plaintiff sued the corporation to recover the sum so assessed, and filed his statement of claim setting out the facts, and claiming the amount, and a mandamus directing the corporation to pay it into the bank, under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845 :—Held, that the reference to valuation was not ultra vires ; that there had been a good valuation under s. 9 ; and that the plaintiff was entitled to compensation in respect of the whole of the streams which the corporation had given him notice of their intention to take, and not merely in respect of so much of the streams as had been already taken. Stone v. Yeovil Corporation, 46 L. J., C. P. 137 ; 2 C. P. D. 99 ; 36 L. T. 279 ; 25 W. R. 240—C. A.

Declaration by Surveyors.]—On a sale by agreement to a company by an owner under disability :—Held, that the requirements of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 9, must be strictly complied with, and that the absence of a declaration in writing annexed to the valuation and subscribed by the surveyors was fatal to a claim by the company for the specific performance of the contract, although the valuation was made by surveyors without formal appointment. Bridgend Gas and Water Co. v. Dunraven, 55 L. J., Ch. 91 ; 31 Ch. D. 219 ; 53 L. T. 714 ; 34 W. R. 119.

Common Lands.]—Sects. 101 to 106, inclusive, of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, with reference to the ascertaining of compensation for common lands, are not imperative so as to preclude the enforcement of specific performance of an agreement entered into otherwise than as mentioned in those sections. Bee v. Stafford and Uttoxeter Ry., 23 W. R. 863.

3. IN CONSIDERATION OF A RENT-CHARGE.

Presumption of Agreement.]—A canal company having power to purchase lands for gross sums or for annual rent-charges, to be determined by commissioners in cases of disability, took possession of the lands of an infant, on an agreement with his tenant, and after an award by the commissioners of the gross sum or annual rent-charge which ought to be paid, but which award was invalid, no one being party to it who had power to bind the infant's interest, the awarded gross sum was paid by the company to the steward on an agreement for its return if the land were not conveyed to the company on the infant attaining his majority. No conveyance was executed, and the purchase-money was returned, but the company continued in the use of the land for their canal, paying to the landowner for forty years after he attained his majority a rent of nearly the amount awarded by the commissioners. The company also with his knowledge purchased the interests of leaseholds in the land :—Held, that an agreement could not be presumed to have been entered into or ratified by the landowner for a sale of the fee in consideration of a rent-charge. Somersetshire Coal Canal Co. v. Harcourt, 2 De G. & J. 596 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 625 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 671 ; 6 W. R. 670.

Leave to Distrain.]—When land had been conveyed to a railway company in consideration of a rent-charge, and the deed gave the person entitled to the rent-charge a power to distrain on the land for arrears of the rent-charge, the court gave the owner of the rent-charge leave to distrain on the land, notwithstanding the appointment of a receiver of the tolls, profits and income of the undertaking of the company in a suit instituted by the owner of a similar rent-charge on behalf of himself and all the other owners of similar rent-charges who should come in and contribute to the expenses of the suit. Eyton v. Denbigh, Ruthin and Corwen Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 669 ; L. R. 6 Eq. 14 ; 16 W. R. 1005.

Lands were conveyed to a railway company by various persons in consideration of rent-charges. The company became unable to pay the rents, and a suit was instituted by the owner of one of the rent-charges on behalf of himself and all the other owners of rent-charges who should come in and contribute to the expenses of the suit for the payment of the rent-charges ; and a decree was made, and a receiver of the tolls, profits and income of the undertaking appointed. The company conveyed and assigned their superfluous lands and chattels to trustees upon trust for the benefit of the creditors of the company, and a suit was instituted by a creditor on behalf of himself and all other creditors entitled to the benefit of the trust deed for the administration of the trusts thereof : a decree was made, and a receiver appointed in this suit also. Upon the application of the owner of a rent-charge for leave in both suits to distrain for arrears of rent on land conveyed by him to the company :—Held, that he was entitled to such leave in the first suit, but not in the second. Eyton v. Denbigh, Ruthin and Corwen Ry., 38 L. J., Ch. 74 ; L. R. 6 Eq. 488 ; 16 W. R. 928.

Leave to Enter.]—When lands are sold to a railway company in consideration of a rent-charge, the parties may agree for its being secured by a power of entry ; and a conveyance made upon such an agreement, whereby the land was conveyed to uses that the grantor should take the rent-charge, and if it fell into arrear should enter until satisfaction, was held to entitle him to leave to enter against a receiver of the undertaking appointed by the court. Forster v. Manchester and Milford Ry., 49 L. J., Ch. 454.

Vendor's Lien.]—By an agreement dated in 1851, a company under powers conferred by the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, contracted, in consideration of the payment of a yearly rent-charge, to purchase land for the construction of docks. The company had entered, and completed the construction of the docks, but had not made any payment in respect of the rent-charge :—Held, that the vendors were not entitled to a lien for the unpaid arrears of the rent-charge. Jersey (Earl) v. Briton Ferry Floating Dock Co., L. R. 7 Eq. 409.

Priority—Debentures.]—The holders of rent-charges created by a railway company under the Lands Clauses Act, ss. 10 and 11, and charged on the undertaking of the company, have a first charge on the lands of the company comprised in the deeds of charge, and are entitled to have their rent-charges paid out of the net earnings of the undertaking in priority to debenture holders. Eyton v. Denbigh, Ruthin and Corwen Ry., L. R. 7 Eq. 439 ; 20 L. T. 388 ; 17 W. R. 546.

4. AGREEMENTS BETWEEN LANDOWNERS AND PROMOTERS.

Validity—To pay Purchase-money and buy off Opposition.]—A railway company, proposing to apply to parliament for an Extension Act, which a landowner, over whose estate the proposed railway was to pass threatened to oppose, made an unconditional agreement with him under the seal of the company, by which, after reciting that he agreed to withdraw his opposition, the company agreed to make the line and to pay 2,000*l.* for his land therein specified, required for the railway, and by clause 3, that they should pay him 2,000*l.* within three months from the passing of the act, as and for a personal compensation to him for the annoyance, inconvenience, damage, disturbance, loss and injury which he had sustained, or might or would sustain, in respect of the sporting and game upon his estate, by or in consequence of the construction of the intended works and of the parliamentary and other surveys and other works connected therewith or incidental thereto. The landowner agreed not to oppose the passing of the bill. The bill passed, and three months afterwards he brought an action to recover the money :—Held, that the contract was not ultra vires of the directors in the sense of being prohibited by the legislature, and was therefore a legal contract binding upon the company. Taylor v. Chichester and Midhurst Ry., 39 L. J., Ex. 217 ; L. R. 4 H. L. 628 ; 23 L. T. 657.

The directors of an existing railway company applied to parliament for an act to make a branch line and a diverging line, one of which would touch the property of a landowner, and the other pass through his house and garden. He opposed their bill. They entered into an agreement with him to buy his land at a certain price, and on this consideration he withdrew his opposition to the bill, which then passed, but which did not give the power to make the diverging line, but only empowered them to make the branch line. The landowner executed his part of the agreement ; the directors did not execute theirs, but after some time determined not to make the branch line, and gave the landowner notice that they should not want his land. He filed a bill for specific performance :—Held, that as the contract was one in furtherance of the general objects of the company (although the company was not at the time of making it empowered to execute the works for which the land was wanted), it was not a contract ultra vires of the directors, and that the person who had contracted to sell the land was entitled to specific performance. Eastern Counties Ry. v. Hawkes, 5 H. L. Cas. 331 ; 7 Railw. Cas. 188 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 601 ; 3 W. R. 609.

Promoters of a company proposing to make a line of railway, or persons standing in a similar situation, as directors of an existing company, applying to parliament for authority to make a new line, may lawfully enter into a contract for land that will be necessary for the proposed line should the bill pass, and when it has passed, such contract will be valid, and may be enforced. Ib.

The mere want of legal power to make the contract at the moment of entering into it, will not affect its validity afterwards. Secus, where the act itself illegal, and parliament is to be asked to legalise it. Ib.

Semble, that where the directors of a railway company, wanting part of a property, purchase more of it than is required, though that may become a question between them and the shareholders, they cannot on that account avoid the contract with the seller. Ib.

In a contract for the sale of land for the purposes of a projected railway, the vendor was described as having, so far as regarded one part of the land, no more than a mere life estate, and the projectors of the railway undertook to obtain from parliament powers to enable him to make a good title :—Held, that where they did not fulfil this stipulation, or but for their own default, the title might have been perfected, they could not set up his deficiency of title as an answer to a bill for specific performance. Ib.

—— Bona fides of Owner.]—Where an act creating a railway company, or giving new powers to an existing company, authorises the purchase of lands for extraordinary purposes, a person who agrees to sell his land to the company, is not bound to see that it is strictly required for such purposes ; if he does not know of any intention to misapply the funds of the company, but acts bonâ fide in the matter, he may enforce payment of the contract. Eastern Counties Ry. v. Hawkes, 5 H. L. Cas. 331 ; 7 Railw. Cas. 188 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 601 ; 3 W. R. 609.

Conditional on making Railway.]—Two projectors of a railway company entered into a treaty with a landowner, whereby the latter agreed not to oppose their bill in parliament, and an agreement was executed by them (as the executive directors of the company), by which the company, upon its incorporation, was to pay to him 1,000*l.* for land of which he was the freeholder, and which was required for the purpose of making the railway, and 4,000*l.* for residential damage. A stipulation was also made that the company was to make a tunnel through part of his property, and a station was to be erected on another part. The company was incorporated, but, not being able to raise sufficient funds, no attempt was made to make the railway, and the money subscribed was returned to the shareholders :—Held, that the contract was conditional upon the making of the railway, and therefore that the landowner was not entitled to the moneys payable thereunder. Preston v. Liverpool, Manchester and Newcastle-upon-Tyne Junction Ry., 5 H. L. Cas. 605 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 421 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 241 ; 4 W. R. 383.

By an agreement between the plaintiff and the promoters of a bill in parliament for making a railway, after reciting that the line of railway was proposed to be carried close to his park, and through some of his land, which bill he had opposed, he, in consideration of the covenants therein contained, acceded thereto. It was witnessed that, in consideration of the covenants on the promoters' part, the plaintiff covenanted that he would accede to the bill, provided it passed in the present or ensuing session of parliament ; and, in consideration of the assent given to the bill by the plaintiff, they covenanted that, in the event of the bill passing, the company should pay him, for so much land intersected by the line as might be required, at the rate of 120*l.* per acre; and that they should pay him 3,000*l.* in full compensation for the general damage which the line should or might do to the mansion, park and estate, including therein the crossing of the road near the entrance to the park, the obstruction of views, the expense of temporary residence during the progress of the works, the depreciation in value as a residence, the additional expense in the cultivation of the farms by the alteration of the road, and all other damage to be done to the mansion and park. And the plaintiff agreed, on tender of 120*l.* per acre, and 3,000*l.*, that he would convey:—Held, per Parke, B., and Platt, B., that the promoters thereby bound themselves that the company should pay the 3,000*l.* on the passing of the act, although the railway should not be constructed, or any actual damage be done; but, per Pollock, C. B., that the taking of the land and damage done were conditions precedent to the payment of the 3,000*l.* Bland v. Crowley, 6 Railw. Cas. 756; 6 Ex. 522.

Conditional on Obtaining Act—Amalgamation.]—Two railways, called A. and B., were projected by different parties to run from M. towards N. The line of A. passed through the centre of the plaintiff's estate, and the line of B. through a corner of it. The projectors of A. agreed with the plaintiff for the purchase of that portion of his land which they required, and they were to have power to vacate the agreement in case the act for making their railway should not pass. Two bills were brought into parliament for forming the railways, and were referred to a committee, at whose suggestion the two projects were amalgamated; and an act was passed incorporating the projectors of both railways into one company, and for making a railway partly in the line of A. and partly in the line of B., the latter being the line selected with respect to the plaintiff's estate. Pending the act, the promoters of the two railways agreed with each other that where either company should have entered into contracts with landowners, whose property might be affected by either line, though in a somewhat different mode, the contracts entered into by the company proposing the rejected line should be adopted by the united company. A copy of this agreement was subsequently sent to the plaintiff by the united company. The projectors of line A. afterwards vacated their agreement with the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff could not enforce that agreement against the united company. Greenhalgh v. Manchester and Birmingham Ry., 3 Myl. & C. 784; 1 Railw. Cas. 68; 8 L. J., Ch. 75; 3 Jur. 693.

The Birkenhead and Chester Railway Company agreed with the plaintiff to give him for fourteen acres and a half of land 20,000*l.*, to be paid by instalments. The Birkenhead and Chester Company, and a rival company, called the Chester and Birkenhead Railway Company, both went to parliament, and in committee it was agreed that it should be referred to two members of the committee, to choose between the two lines, and that the selected company should take the engagements with the landholders entered into by the other, and this agreement was signed by the agent of the plaintiff. The Chester and Birkenhead Company were selected, and obtained their act, and for their proposed line sixteen acres of plaintiff's land, in another part of the estate, would be required. The plaintiff filed his bill against the Chester and Birkenhead Company, alleging the above facts, and praying that the contract of adoption might be declared binding on the defendants, and that they might be decreed to perform the same, and be restrained from entering on his lands till the first instalment, then due, was paid. To this a demurrer was put in, which was overruled. Stanley v. Chester and Birkenhead Ry., 3 Myl. & C. 773; 1 Railw. Cas. 58.

—— Validity.]—It would not be ultra vires, a company wishing to alter one of the branches of its railroad, and about to apply to parliament for authority to do so, to enter into a contract for the purchase of lands required for the railway, if it should obtain an act. Scottish North Eastern Ry. v. Stewart, 3 Macq. H. L. 382; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 607; 7 W. R. 458.

Company not in Existence—Validity.]—An agreement by a landowner, with the promoters of a railway company, that in the event of their obtaining an act of parliament he will sell them such land as they require at a fixed rate, is binding, although the company has no existence at the time of the contract; and it is no objection on the ground of want of mutuality that the company is not bound to take the land. Bedford and Cambridge Ry. v. Stanley, 2 J. & H. 746; 32 L. J., Ch. 60; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 152; 7 L. T. 477; 11 W. R. 139; 1 N. R. 162. Contra Williams v. St. George's Harbour Ry., 5 W. R. 725.

Conditional on beginning to execute Branch.]—A railway company obtained an act for making a branch within seven years. They gave the usual notices. While their bill was before parliament, they agreed to purchase the land of a certain owner. It was a term of this contract that it should not be enforced against the company within the seven years, and the purchase-money was to be paid when the company, on obtaining their act, should have "begun to execute the branch." The company obtained their act, but never executed or began to execute the branch. The seven years expired:—Held, that permissive words in the act of parliament were not obligatory; that the company was not bound to execute or begin to execute the branch; and that as the company had not executed or begun to execute the branch, their obligation to pay the purchase-money did not arise. Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee Ry. v. Philip, 2 Macq. H. L. 514; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 249; 5 W. R. 377.

Conditional on breaking Ground.]—A railway company, previously to applying to parliament for an act for the formation of a branch line, entered into an agreement with a landowner, by which he agreed to grant leases, and to give the company possession of a portion of his land, required for the formation of the railway, to enable the company to proceed with the works before obtaining their act, and, out of the sums thereinafter agreed to be paid, to settle with his tenants the agricultural and other damages to which they might be entitled. The company bound itself to apply for an act, and in case it was not obtained, to restore the ground taken possession of, and to pay such damages for the injury done as should be determined by an arbitrator. The company also agreed, before breaking ground, to pay him for personal inconvenience and annoyance, such a sum as should be declared by B.; and a deed of submission to arbitration was to be entered into for determining what should be paid to him, as the proprietor of an entailed estate, for land to be taken, and for injury done to the grounds and place in a residential point of view, and for injury sustained by the tenants. B. fixed the sum to be paid before breaking ground at 14,500*l.*, subject to deductions in a certain event. The company gave a debenture bond for the amount, and the landowner gave a discharge, and also executed a bond to the company, by which he bound himself, that if the bill should not pass he would repay the amount. The company obtained their act, but never exercised its powers, nor made the branch railway, and the time limited for its formation had expired:—Held, that the payment by way of price for the land was to be made if the land should be broken for the railway, and not otherwise, and specific performance could not, therefore, be compelled. Scottish North-Eastern Ry. v. Stewart, 3 Macq. H. L. 382; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 607; 7 W. R. 458.

Conditional on entering Land.]—A railway company, promoting in parliament a bill for the extension of their line, which extended line would pass through the lands of the plaintiff, covenanted with him as follows: "In the event of the bill being passed in the present session of parliament, the company shall, before they shall enter upon any part of the lands of Sir T. R. G., pay to him, his heirs or assigns, 4,900*l.* purchase-money, for any portion of his lands, not exceeding forty-three acres, which the company may, under the powers of their act, require and take for the purposes of this undertaking. In addition to purchase-money the company shall pay to him, his heirs or assigns, before they shall enter upon any part of the land, 7,100*l.*, as landlord's compensation for the damage arising to his estate by the severance thereof, in respect of the lands, not exceeding forty-three acres, to be taken by them":—Held, that the company was not bound to pay either of these sums unless they entered upon some part of the lands. Gage v. Newmarket Ry., 7 Railw. Cas. 168; 18 Q. B. 457; 21 L. J., Q. B. 398; 16 Jur. 1136.

5. Specific Performance.

Parties.]—A railway company, having contracted with a party, who, under a contract made some years previously, was a purchaser of land which the company required for the railway, but who had not paid his purchase-money, and appeared for some time to have abandoned the possession of the land, filed their bill for specific performance against both the vendor and purchaser:—Held, that as the purchaser was not, after the lapse of time and under the circumstances, entitled in equity to a decree for specific performance of the contract against the vendor, the bill must be dismissed as against him, with costs; and as against the purchaser, without costs. S. E. Ry. v. Knott, 10 Hare, 122.

Claim for specific performance of agreement for a railway company to purchase land from trustees:—Held, that persons beneficially interested in the land were not necessary parties to the suit. Potts v. Thames Haven Dock and Ry., 15 Jur. 1004.

Intention of Legislature.]—If the legislature prescribes formalities to be observed by parties contracting inter se, and one of them endeavours to avail himself of the want of such forms to postpone or avoid the completion of a contract entered into, the court will itself ascertain whether the intentions of the legislature have, in substance, been complied with; and if they have, it will carry the contract into effect. Baker v. Metropolitan Ry., 31 Beav. 504; 32 L. J., Ch. 7; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 61; 7 L. T. 494; 11 W. R. 18.

Powers Expired—No Possession.]—The court of chancery will not, even in a suit for specific performance, compel a company who has not been in possession of the lands, and whose compulsory powers have expired, to pay the purchase-money, though the final award was made before their powers expired. The court, in such a case, will leave the seller to his remedy at law. Harnett, Ex parte, Cork and Youghal Ry., In re, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 268.

Construction of Agreement.]—A railway company contracted with the owner of lands to pay interest for the purchase-money, and compensation to be awarded, for so much of the lands as should be taken for the railway, and it was agreed that the money should be deposited in a certain bank until the completion of the purchase, and that the interest should be paid to the owner up to and inclusive of the day on which the purchase should be completed:—Held, that the reasonable construction of this agreement was, that it referred to the completion of the purchase by the purchaser, that, on the part of the purchaser, the purchase was completed by the payment of the purchase-money into court; and that it did not necessarily refer to the complete conveyance of the estate, and the final settlement of the purchase. Lewis v. South Wales Ry., 10 Hare, 113; 22 L. J. Ch. 209; 16 Jur. 1149; 1 W. R. 45.

The promoters of a railway company, in consideration of a landowner's opposition to the bill being withdrawn, agreed to pay him 4,500*l.* as the purchase-money of land, not exceeding eight acres, to be taken by the company for the formation of this railway, and for consequential damage. The act was obtained, and the agreement adopted by the company in consideration of the landowner releasing the promoters from their covenant. The agreement was so framed, as to render it doubtful whether it was not to be contingent on the formation of the railway. The railway was abandoned, and, after the expiration of the time limited for the acquisition of land for the purposes of the undertaking by the company, the landowner filed a claim for specific performance of the agreement:—Held, to be a case in which a decree would produce more injustice than justice, and a specific performance was therefore refused. Webb v. London and Portsmouth Ry., 3 De G. M. & G. 521; 21 L. J., Ch. 337; 16 Jur. 323.

A railway company contracted with A. to purchase not less than eight acres of his land, for which they were to pay at the rate of 1,000*l.* an acre over and above the compensation to be awarded to him for severing and otherwise injuring his estate. The company took more than the eight acres, for which they paid him the price agreed for, and also 2,660*l.*, being the amount awarded for injuring and severing his property. Some years after the railway was made A. alleged that by the true construction of the agreement he was entitled to receive payment at the above rate of 1,000*l.* an acre, for portions of his roads, amounting to about three roods, over which the railway company had thrown bridges :—Held, that, assuming the construction of the agreement to be as A. contended, it was such a contract as the court would not decree specific performance of, but would leave A. to his legal remedy. Ingram v. Midland Ry., 3 L. T. 553.

A company contracted to purchase the interest of a leaseholder in a piece of land for a given sum, and for the conveyance in fee of a piece of the land which they were to take under the compulsory powers of their act of parliament. The agreement contained a clause that the company was to be consulted on any buildings to be erected in the line of street, and that differences should be settled by two parties named, or their umpire. The company held the contract suspended, and after its compulsory powers expired, it refused to complete the contract. Upon a bill for specific performance :—Held, that the agreement respecting the buildings was vague, and that the court could not decree a specific performance of the contract. Tillet v. Charing Cross Bridge Co., 28 L. J., Ch. 863 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 994 ; 7 W. R. 391.

Held, also, that as the agreement was uncertain no compensation could be awarded ; but as there was a concluded agreement, the court dismissed the bill, without costs. Ib.

An agreement for the sale of leaseholds contained a stipulation that there should be an apportionment of the rents according to the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, if necessary. The necessity for an apportionment being clear, upon the lessor's refusal to agree to any apportionment, and the company's refusal to serve the lessor with notice to treat for the purchase of his interest (without which service no compulsory apportionment could be made), the lessee filed a bill for specific performance of the agreement, and prayed that the company might be ordered to serve his lessor with notice to treat :—Held, that, although the lessee was not entitled to a decree that the company should serve the lessor with a notice to treat for the purchase of his interest, the court would decree specific performance of the agreement, and direct that the lessee and the company should do and concur in all acts requisite to give effect to it. Williams v. East London Ry., 21 L. T. 524 ; 18 W. R. 159.

Mandatory Injunction.]—The court will not interfere by way of mandatory injunction to compel the specific performance of a contract against a railway company, where the works have been already erected, and the public convenience would be sacrificed by interfering so as to compel the removal or the alteration of the works already executed, the court being satisfied that the works had been executed "so as to interfere as little as possible with the plaintiff's convenience," an expression which occurred in the agreement. Raphael v. Thames Valley Ry., 35 L. J., Ch. 659 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 656 ; 14 L. T. 652 ; 14 W. R. 750.

Agent unauthorised—Possession.]—Objection taken to a bill for specific performance by a railway company, that the agent of the company not having been appointed under their corporate seal, there was no mutuality in the contract, overruled on the ground of possession taken, and acts done by them, which would have made them liable. London and Birmingham Ry. v. Winter, Cr. & Ph. 57.

Investigation of Title.]—The court will not, in a suit on the part of a landowner against a railway company for specific performance of an agreement to take lands, make a decree where there has been no investigation of title, but will refer it to chambers to see whether a good title can be made. Gunston v. East Gloucestershire Ry., 18 L. T. 8.

Where there has been great delay on the part of the company, the court will reserve costs specially. Ib.

Possession pending Action.]—The plaintiff, a lessee of premises required for a street improvement, contracted to sell a lease of the premises for twenty-one years to the Metropolitan Board of Works. The purchasers required an abatement on the ground that the lease was found to be determinable at the end of seven or fourteen years by the lessor. The plaintiff claimed specific performance. Pending the action the board applied to be let into possession on payment into court of the whole purchase-money claimed :—Held, that though the board could, by taking the steps prescribed by the Lands Clauses Act, have obtained immediate possession of the property, yet as they had not done so, they were in the same position as any other purchaser who was defendant to an action for specific performance, and were not entitled to have possession given to them pending the action. Bygrave v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 55 L. J., Ch. 602 ; 32 Ch. D. 147 ; 54 L. T. 889 ; 50 J. P. 788—C. A.

Undertaking relinquished.]—Where a company after getting their act had determined to abstain from executing the line which it sanctioned :—Held, that they could not be compelled specifically to perform an agreement for the purchase of land which they had contracted to purchase for the purposes of the line, but which as they had relinquished the undertaking, they no longer required. Scottish North-Eastern Ry. v. Stewart, 3 Macq. H. L. 382 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 607 ; 7 W. R. 458.

Want of Money.]—In 1862 lands were taken by a railway company under agreements stipulating for a price to be fixed by arbitration, for a deposit, and for interest in the meantime, to be increased in case of delay by the company in completing the purchase. The deposit was paid and possession taken by the company, which constructed its railway on the land. The company also accepted the vendors' titles, and approved draft conveyances, but it refused to complete the purchase on the ground of want of money. Suits having been commenced by the vendors for specific performance of the agreement in 1867, a motion made in the suits for payment of the balance into court was refused. Lewes v. Cambrian Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 565 ; L. R. 2 Ch. 444 ; 15 W. R. 604.

Payment of Purchase-money into Court.]—In a suit by a vendor for specific performance against a railway company, they, by their answer, having admitted the contract, their acceptance of the title, and that they had taken possession of the land, the court, on an interlocutory motion, ordered them to pay the purchase-money into court. Chapple v. L. C. & D. Ry., 34 L. J., Ch. 597.

Where a company enters into a special contract to purchase, payment into court of purchase-money, under s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, is not proper. Newton v. Metropolitan Ry., 8 Jur. (N.S.) 738. See also 1 Dr. & Sm. 583; 5 L. T. 542; 10 W. R. 102.

By an agreement, dated in June, 1847, a railway company contracted to purchase part of the estates in the cause, and it was stipulated that the purchase-money should be paid into a bank, in the names of the solicitors in the cause and the secretary of the company, there to remain till the approval of the contract by the master, when it was to be paid into court. The money was forthwith paid into a bank, and in 1848 the master made his report, approving of the contract. No application for the purpose having been made by the company, the plaintiffs, in March, 1850, moved for payment of the purchase-money into court, with interest at 5 per cent. from the date of the contract. Motion granted. Chambers v. White, 14 Jur. 1129.

A railway company, having entered into possession of land required for their undertaking under an agreement to pay the amount which should be fixed by arbitration for the purchase-money on the final settlement of the purchase, with interest thereon in the meantime, will, during the progress of a suit for specific performance of the contract, after the award, which remains unimpeached, has been made, and the title accepted, be ordered to pay the purchase-money, with interest thereon, into court, although they set up a case that the amount fixed by the arbitrator was fixed by him higher than it would otherwise have been in consequence of statements made by the other side, that the taking of their land would cause them the necessity of executing expensive works, which remain unexecuted at the date of the motion to bring in the purchase-money. *S. 1. GENERALLY.

Easement—Right to cross Line of another Company—Subscription of Capital.]—By the act incorporating the S. Railway Company, the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, except where expressly varied thereby, was incorporated therewith, and it was enacted that the words to which meanings were assigned by the Lands Clauses Act should in the special act have the same meanings unless there was something in the subject or context repugnant thereto. The S. Company, "subject to the provisions of this act," were empowered to purchase any of the lands in their deposited plans. By s. 8, which was inserted for the protection of the G. W. Railway Company, it was provided (sub-s. 1), that the S. company should not enter upon or interfere with or execute any work over or under the line of the G. W. Railway until plans had been approved by the engineer of the G. W. Company or an engineer appointed by the Board of Trade. Sub-s. 2 provided that the railway of the S. Company should be carried in one place over and in another under the G. W. Railway by a bridge and tunnel. By sub-s. 4 the bridge and tunnel were to belong to the G. W. Company. By sub-s. 8 the S. Company were not to interfere with the land of the G. W. Company except for the purposes of the above crossings, and it was enacted that the S. Company should not purchase or take any land of the G. W. Company, but that the S. Company might purchase and the G. W. Company should grant an easement or right of using the crossings in perpetuity. By sub-s. 9 every dispute between the two companies respecting the above matters or any of them was to be referred to arbitration. The S. Company were proceeding to make the crossings, and the G. W. Company brought their action to restrain them from doing so, on the ground that the capital of the S. Company had not been subscribed, and that under the 16th section of the Lands Clauses Act they could not proceed to put in force any of their powers for the compulsory purchase of land until it had been subscribed:—Held (Lord Watson diss.), that the right given by the special act was a right of taking easements, not the exercise of running powers, nor the right of compulsory taking of "lands" within the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 16, and that the notice to treat was good. G. W. Ry. v. Swindon and Cheltenham Ry., 53 L. J., Ch. 1075; 9 App. Cas. 787; 51 L. T. 798; 32 W. R. 957; 48 J. P. 821—H. L. (E.)

—— Notice to Treat—Under what Section.]—The notice to treat was good, because it was given not under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 18, but under s. 8, sub-s. 8, of the special act. Ib.—Per Lord Fitzgerald.

The notice was good, because even if given under s. 35 of the Lands Clauses Act and not under the above section of the special act, nevertheless the respondent company were entitled to proceed before their capital was subscribed, because under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 85, the land is not "taken" but only entered upon. Ib.—Per Lord Bramwell.

Conditions Precedent — Meaning of Word "take."]—By an act of 1877, with which the Lands Clauses Act was incorporated, the Metropolitan Board of Works were authorised to effect certain street improvements, and by s. 5 were authorised to "enter upon, take, use, and hold" any of the lands in the deposited plans and books of reference, with the exception of certain specified lands. By s. 33, after reciting that it was expedient to make provision for the accommodation of such of the labouring classes as would be displaced by the improvements, the board were directed to acquire or appropriate lands, and sell them or let them on building lease for the purpose of the erection of suitable houses for the labouring classes. And it was provided that before the board should, without the consent of one of the secretaries of state, "take for the purposes of this act" fifteen houses or more occupied at the passing of the act wholly or partially by persons of the labouring classes, they should prove to the satisfaction of such secretary of state that suitable accommodation had been provided elsewhere for the same number of persons as had been accommodated in the houses to be taken. The board served on the plaintiff notice to treat for the purchase of more than fifteen houses belonging to him, which were occupied at the passing of the act by the labouring classes. The plaintiff sent in his claim, without prejudice to any question as to the right of the board to exercise their powers before complying with the proviso of s. 33. The board then served notice of their intention to summon a jury. It was admitted that the conditions of the proviso had not yet been complied with. The plaintiff brought his action to restrain the board from proceeding on their notices till they had complied with the conditions:—Held, that as the conditions precedent to taking the plaintiff's land were conditions which the board were able and compellable to comply with, the land in question was land which the board were "authorised to purchase or take" within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 18, and that they were entitled to serve a notice to treat and summon a jury. Spencer v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 52 L. J., Ch. 249; 22 Ch. D. 142; 47 L. T. 459; 31 W. R. 347—C. A.

Effect of Deviation.]—The undertakers of the Aire and Calder Navigation were empowered by act of parliament to make a canal, and tramroad leading therefrom, and fifteen years were given to them to complete the works. At the expiration of nearly four years from the passing of the act, having completed part of the canal, and having marked out the tramroad, they gave notice, pursuant to the act, to the owners of a certain spot of land, of their intention to purchase it for the purposes of the tramroad. The landowners resisted the purchase on the ground that the undertakers had deviated from the parliamentary line in the construction of their canal:—Held, that as the deviation worked no injury to the objectors, and as the undertakers did not admit any intention to abandon the original line, and there remained ten years in which they might complete their works, this objection was untenable. Lee v. Milner, 2 Y. & Coll. 611.

Operation upon restrictive Covenants.]—A landowner who has covenanted that neither he nor his assigns shall build upon his land, is discharged from his covenant after selling the premises to a railway company under its compulsory powers, as the company becomes an assignee of the land, not by the voluntary act of the former owner, but by compulsion of law. Baily v. De Crespigny, 38 L. J., Q. B. 98; L. R. 4 Q. B. 180; 19 L. T. 681; 17 W. R. 494.

2. Notice to Treat.

When Necessary.]—Where parties agree to refer the amount of compensation to arbitration, it is necessary to go through the form of giving notice to treat. Collins v. South Staffordshire Ry., 7 Ex. 5; 21 L. J., Ex. 247; 16 Jur. 843. S. P., South Yorkshire, Doncaster and Goole Ry., In re, 7 D. & L. 36; 18 L. J., Q. B. 333; 14 Jur. 1093.

A railway company has no power to summon a jury to assess the value of lands, as to which they have given no previous notice to treat. Doe v. London and Croydon Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 257.

A railway company authorised to construct a line of railway under a public street is not bound to give notice to treat or to pay compensation to the owner of the land adjoining the street in respect of any part of the soil of such public street. A cul-de-sac dedicated to the public is for this purpose in the same position as a public street. South v. East London Ry., 42 L. J., Ch. 477; L. R. 16 Eq. 108; 21 W. R. 590. See S. C., 22 W. R. 566.

Form of.]—A notice to treat for part of a rope-walk in the line of railway, accompanied by a diagram, or a plan of the entire rope-walk, indicating by coloured lines the manner in which the railway would intersect it, and the portion required to be treated for, but having no scale or admeasurement appended to the diagram or plan, is sufficient. Sims v. Commercial Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 431.

Deposited plans and book of reference showed a small plot, No. 38, nearly surrounded by a large plot, No. 37. The schedule to the notice to treat mentioned 37 but not 38, and the accompanying plan omitted both the number and the boundary of 38. The painted area on the notice plan in fact covered the site of No. 38, and this fact was known to the plaintiff long before he pointed out the objection:—Held, that the notice was sufficient under the circumstances to entitle the company to take 38. Dowling v. Pontypool, Caerleon, and Newport Ry., 43 L. J., Ch. 761; L. R. 18 Eq. 714.

The W. railway company, which was empowered to make a railway, with all proper stations, works and conveniences connected therewith, to terminate by a junction with the L. railway, at a point marked on the parliamentary plan, gave the plaintiff notice that the line of the railway would pass through a piece of his land which lay beyond the point of junction, but within the line of deviation marked on the plan, and that such land was required for the purposes of the railway, and took the necessary steps under the Lands Clauses Act to acquire a right of entry thereon. Being about to erect a station on the piece of land, the W. company agreed with the L. company that the station so to be erected should be used by both companies, and the terms of this agreement were afterwards embodied in and confirmed by an act of parliament. The station was accordingly built at the joint expense of the two companies, the W. company prolonging their line, with a double set of rails, from the point of junction into the station, one line of rails being for the joint use of both companies, and the other for the exclusive use of the W. company:—Held, that the notice given by the W. company to the plaintiff was a sufficient notice, although it did not in terms state that the land was required for the purpose of a station; that the prolonging their line beyond the point of junction into the station was no excess of their powers, and that the arrangement with the L. company (who were not in a position to take the land themselves) for the joint use of the station did not vitiate the title which the W. company had already acquired to the land. Wood

v. Epsom and Leatherhead Ry., 8 C. B. (N.S.) 731 ; 30 L. J., C. P. 82 ; 2 L. T. 487.

A notice to treat given by a railway company for the purchase of the right or easement of making and for ever maintaining the railway by a bridge over a landowner's property, is a valid notice. Pinchin v. London and Blackwall Ry., 1 Kay & J. 34 ; 2 Eq. R. 1172 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 241 ; 3 W. R. 52.

Validity—Easement.]—Semble, a notice to treat for the purpose of a right or easement of a stratum of air over land belonging to a manufactory is not a notice warranted by the Lands Clauses Act, the word "hereditaments" used in the interpretation clause as a meaning of the word "lands" signifying corporeal hereditaments, and therefore not including a right of way. Pinchin v. London and Blackwall Ry., 5 De G. M. & G. 851 ; 3 Eq. R. 433 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 417 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 241 ; 3 W. R. 125. See G. W. Ry. v. Swindon and Cheltenham Ry., supra.

Two Notices.]—A railway company, empowered to take lands, is not restricted to one notice, but may, after a notice for taking certain lands, give a further notice for taking other lands within the prescribed limits, such additional lands being necessary for the works. Stamps v. Birmingham, Wolverhampton and Stour Valley Ry., 7 Hare. 251 ; 6 Railw. Cas. 123 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 431 ; 12 Jur. 720. Affirmed on appeal, 2 Ph. 673 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 431 ; 6 Railw. Cas. 132.

A railway company, being empowered by their act to take a close belonging to the plaintiff, gave him notice of their intention to take a part of it ; and, more than a year afterwards, the company gave him notice of their intention to take the remainder. The part first taken was intended for making the railway, and the remainder for making a station, both of which their act empowered them to make :—Held, that the power of the company with respect to the plaintiff's close was not exhausted by the first notice. Simpson v. Lancaster and Carlisle Ry., 15 Sim. 580 ; 4 Railw. Cas. 625 ; 11 Jur. 879.

A railway company having given the plaintiff notice that they should require twenty perches of his land, subsequently gave a notice that they should only require one perch, and also gave a notice withdrawing the former notice :—Held, that the first notice was binding, and that, without the consent of the plaintiff, another valid notice could not have been given. Tawney v. Lynn and Ely Ry., 4 Railw. Cas. 615 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 282.

Service on whom.]—By an act of parliament it was enacted, that a railway company should, within twelve months, give notice to an infant of the lands belonging to him which they might require to take ; and it was declared that by the Earl of Harrington should be meant, during his minority, his testamentary guardian. Other proceedings were pending in which the infant was represented by a next friend, and the notice was, within the limited time, served upon that next friend ; but it was not until after the expiration of twelve months that any notice was served upon the guardian :—Held, that no notice had been given under the act, and that the company must be restrained from taking the land. Harrington (Earl) v. Metropolitan Ry., 13 L. T. 583, 658—L.JJ.

By a clause in the special act of a railway company it was enacted that before the company entered upon or took any tenement under the powers of the act, they should give six months' previous notice of their intention to take to the occupier of such tenement :—Held, that a six months' notice of the company's intention to take certain premises given to the occupier in pursuance of that clause, was a good notice binding on the company. Morgan v. Metropolitan Ry., 38 L. J., C. P. 87 ; L. R. 4 C. P. 97 ; 19 L. T. 655 ; 17 W. R. 261—Ex. Ch.

Service on Tenant—Adoption by Owner.]—A corporation, three days before the expiration of their compulsory powers, without making any attempt to discover and serve the owner of the property, served a notice to treat on an occupier of part of the premises comprised in the notice to treat, who was the agent of the owner for the management of his property. The occupier took it the same day to the solicitor of the owner, and also wrote to the owner ; but it did not appear that, as a matter of fact, the notice came to the hands of the owner before the three days had expired. The owner, however, after the expiration of the three days gave a counter-notice under s. 92 requiring the corporation to take the whole of his property. This notice he subsequently withdrew, and required the corporation to proceed with the purchase of the land specified in their notice to treat, which they declined to do :—Held, that the service of the notice to treat was irregular and invalid, and that the owner could not, by his subsequent adoption of the notice, cure the irregularity and compel the corporation to proceed with it. Shepherd v. Norwich Corporation, 54 L. J., Ch. 1050 ; 30 Ch. D. 553 ; 53 L. T. 251 ; 33 W. R. 841.

Under what Act.]—A railway company, after the compulsory powers of their original act expired, and the railway was opened for traffic, obtained another act enabling them to widen their line and enlarge their stations, and to take additional pieces of land :—Held, that, under these circumstances the company could not proceed to take a piece of land subject to the compulsory powers of both acts under a notice to treat given under their original act. Richmond v. North London Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 273 ; L. R. 5 Eq. 352 ; 18 L. T. 8 ; 16 W. R. 449. Affirmed on appeal, 37 L. J., Ch. 886 ; L. R. 3 Ch. 679.

Before Act obtained.]—A corporation served the usual notice on a landowner before applying to parliament for power to take his land. The act, when obtained, gave the corporation power to take more of his land than was described in the notice :—Held, that the corporation was not prevented from taking more land than was described in the notice. Huddersfield Corporation and Jacomb, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 96 ; L. R. 10 Ch. 92 ; 31 L. T. 466 ; 23 W. R. 100.

Before Capital subscribed.]—It is no answer to an action against a railway company for not issuing their warrant for the assessment of compensation for land which they had given notice of their intention to purchase, that the undertaking was intended to be carried into effect by means of a certain capital, and that the whole amount has not been subscribed, as required by

s. 16,—the notice to treat not necessarily being an exercise of the powers of the act "in relation to the compulsory taking of land." Guest v. Poole and Bournemouth Ry., 39 L. J., C. P. 329; L. R. 5 C. P. 553; 22 L. T. 589; 18 W. R. 836.

Not an Attachable Debt.]—When a mere notice to treat under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, has been given, but the compensation has not been assessed, the compensation money is not a debt owing or accruing to the claimant within Ord. XLV. r. 2, which can be attached in the hands of the promoters of the undertaking to answer a judgment debt due from the claimant. Richardson v. Elmit, 2 C. P. D. 9; 36 L. T. 58.

Stamping Contract.]—In a suit for specific performance of a contract founded upon a notice to treat, the notice does not require to be stamped as an agreement. Rawlings v. Metropolitan Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 824; 18 L. T. 871.

Agreement superseded by.]—By an agreement entered into in September 1863, between the owners of lands and a railway company, under which the company purchased a certain portion of the lands, it was agreed that if the company should require any additional ground for any purpose they should pay for the same at a fixed rate. In May, 1865, the company served the owners of the lands in question with a notice to treat for the purchase of more land from them. Two years afterwards the company entered into possession of the lands:—Held, that the notice to treat had superseded the agreement, and that the value of the lands must be ascertained according to the Lands Clauses Act. Kemp v. S. E. Ry., 25 L. T. 622. S. P., Bedford and Cambridge Ry. v. Stanley, 2 J. & H. 746; 1 N. R. 162; 32 L. J., Ch. 60; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 152; 7 L. T. 477; 11 W. R. 139.

Where Interest changed since Service.]—An interest in property created by an agreement entered into by the owner after a notice to treat has been served on him, is not a subject for compensation. Edwards, Ex parte, 40 L. J., Ch. 697; L. R. 12 Eq. 389; 25 L. T. 149; 19 W. R. 1047.

Where, therefore, an owner of property after a notice to treat had been served on him entered into an agreement with a person who had for several years occupied part of the property as a weekly tenant for a lease of the same to him for a term of three years:—Held, that the tenant was not entitled to compensation in respect of the interest created by such agreement. Ib. See Carnochan v. Norwich and Spalding Ry., 26 Beav. 169.

After notice to treat for the purchase of houses, the owner granted leases for three years to his weekly tenants. The tenants sent in claims, which ultimately failed, but the promoters incurred considerable costs in adjudicating upon them. On a petition by the landowner for the payment out of his compensation, which had been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 76:—Held, that the court could not authorise any deduction from the purchase-money to reimburse the promoters for their loss, or order the petitioner to pay costs; but that the court had jurisdiction to refuse him his costs, and would do so. Topple, Ex parte, 25 L. T. 407; 19 W. R. 1058.

A railway company served notices to treat for the purchase of land on a landowner, and on the tenant of a farm, but before the company took possession of the land the tenancy expired, and another tenant entered into possession of the farm, and without notice, as alleged, of the construction of the intended railway. The new tenant and his solicitor having requested the company to serve the former with notice to enable him to send in a claim for compensation, and the company having refused to do so, he filed a bill for an injunction; the court ordered the matter to stand over to the hearing of the cause, the company undertaking to pay 500*l.* into court, and to serve the plaintiff with notice to treat within four days. Carter v. G. E. Ry., 9 Jur. (N.S.) 618; 8 L. T. 197.

Time runs from.]—Notice to treat for and take lands was served on the owner by the corporation of London under the City Improvement Act, which act incorporated the Lands Clauses Act. At the date of the notice the owner had, but at the expiration of six months he had not, a greater interest in the lands than an interest as tenant for a year or from year to year:—Held, in an action for a mandamus to the defendant to issue his precept for assessment of compensation, that the owner was entitled to judgment, because regard must be had to the date of notice in determining the interest. Tyson v. London Corporation, 41 L. J., C. P. 6; L. R. 7 C. P. 18; 25 L. T. 640; 20 W. R. 112.

Lapse of Time—Effect of.]—A railway company in 1856 took possession of a meadow, a large part of which belonged to one owner, and a small part to another who did not know the position or the exact extent of his land. The company, in 1859, took a conveyance of the large part, on which conveyance the extent of the small part was stated. The company did not pay for the small part, and the owner, in 1868, brought an ejectment against the company, obtained judgment, and was put into possession. His possession was disturbed by the company, and he filed a bill to restrain them. The company offered to pay the value of the land as in 1856, and interest thereon, which the landowner refused. The company then produced a notice to treat, given in 1856, and gave notice of their intention to proceed under that notice. The landowner filed a second bill to restrain them:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the company was not entitled to proceed under the notice to treat. Stretton v. Great Western and Brentford Ry., 40 L. J., Ch. 50; L. R. 5 Ch. 751; 23 L. T. 379; 18 W. R. 1078.

Laches of a company in not following up a notice to treat does not preclude them from taking advantage of entering on lands under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act. Willey v. S. E. Ry., 1 Mac. & G. 58; 1 H. & Tw. 56; 6 Railw. Cas. 108; 18 L. J., Ch. 201; 13 Jur. 241.

A railway company, incorporated by an act of parliament passed in July, 1864, limiting the time for the exercise of the compulsory powers to three years, and the time for the completion of the railway to five years, served a notice to treat for lands belonging to the plaintiff company on the 21st April, 1866. By an act of parliament passed in July, 1869 (against which the plaintiff company petitioned), the railway company was dissolved, and its undertaking was amalgamated with that of the defendant company, and by the same act the time for completing the works was extended for three years; but the period within which the compulsory powers given by the first act were to be exercised was not extended. On the 18th August, 1871, the defendant company took possession of the lands, whereupon the landowners filed a bill to restrain them from continuing in possession:—Held, that the time for completion of the works having been extended by the act of 1869 (of which the plaintiff company had notice) to July, 1872, the notice to treat was not invalidated by lapse of time. Ystalyfera Iron Co. v. Neath and Brecon Ry., 43 L. J., Ch. 476; L. R. 17 Eq. 142; 29 L. T. 662; 22 W. R. 149.

By a local act of 1863, a board of health was authorised to construct waterworks, and purchase and establish markets, and to exercise compulsory powers for the purchase of land for those purposes. These compulsory powers expired on the 13th of July, 1870, and on the 1st of August, 1870, a second act was passed to extend the time for the compulsory purchase of lands and completion of the waterworks, and to authorise the board to construct gasworks, and for other purposes not including the establishing of markets. On motion by the owner of property required for establishing a market to restrain the board from compulsorily taking the property under a notice to treat served on him in December, 1870, on the ground that the powers of the first act had ceased to exist and could not be extended, and that the second act must be read as creating new powers for the purposes of the second act only:—Held, that the powers were extended as well as the time for their exercise, and that the notice to treat was effectual. Bentley v. Rotherham Local Board, 46 L. J., Ch. 284; 4 Ch. D. 588.

Withdrawing, or Abandoning Notice.]—Commissioners having given notice to treat to an owner of lands proposed to be taken, cannot withdraw such notice. Birch v. St. Marylebone Vestry, 20 L. T. 697; 17 W. R. 1014.

The power to rescind a notice to treat for the sale of lands is not possessed by all trustees for public purposes, but is confined to commissioners acting on behalf of the executive government. Steele v. Liverpool Corporation, 14 W. R. 311.

Under an act incorporating a company for the erection of a market, and authorising them to purchase certain scheduled hereditaments, and to give a notice to parties interested to send in their claims, and directing that, in case of non-acceptance of the terms offered by the company, the value shall be assessed in a certain mode; the company cannot, after giving the notice, abandon the purchase. Rex v. Hungerford Market Co., 1 N. & M. 112; 4 B. & Ad. 327.

—— On Service of Counter-notice.]—A notice by a railway company to treat for a part of a manufactory was met by a counter-notice by the owners, requiring them to take the whole. The company then gave the owners notice of their intention to apply to the Board of Trade for the appointment of a surveyor to determine the value of the premises comprised in the notice to treat, and of the further lands and hereditaments which the owners could lawfully require and had required the company to purchase and take. The owners then filed a bill, praying for a declaration that the company could not take a part of the manufactory without taking the whole; whereupon the company gave notice of its intention to withdraw from the notice to treat, offering to pay the plaintiffs' costs of suit up to that date; but they declined the offer, and insisted on an answer, which was filed. The bill was then amended, and, as amended, prayed for a declaration that the company was bound to take the whole manufactory:—Held, that notice of its intention to apply for the appointment of a surveyor did not amount to a binding contract by them to take the property; hence that they were at liberty to withdraw their notice to treat; and specific performance as prayed by the amended bill was refused. Grierson v. Cheshire Lines Committee, 44 L. J., Ch. 35; L. R. 19 Eq. 83; 31 L. T. 428; 23 W. R. 68.

A railway company having given notice to take a part of a property, and being required to take the whole, may abandon their notice, and refuse to take any part. King v. Wycombe Ry., 28 Beav. 104; 29 L. J., Ch. 462; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 2 L. T. 107. S. P., Morrison v. G. E. Ry., 53 L. T. 384.

—— As to Part.]—A railway company having given the plaintiff notice that they should require twenty perches of his land, subsequently gave a notice that they should only require one perch, and also gave a notice withdrawing the former notice:—Held, that the first notice was binding; and that, without the consent of the plaintiff, another valid notice could not have been given. Tawney v. Lynn and Ely Ry., 4 Railw. Cas. 615; 16 L. J., Ch. 282.

—— Delay.]—Notices by railway companies to take land cannot be treated higher than contracts, and after great delay in proceeding on such notices, they will be considered as abandoned. Hedges v. Metropolitan Ry., 28 Beav. 109; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1275; 3 L. T. 643.

—— Expenses caused by.] — On the 22nd October, a tenant from year to year, whose holding began on the 1st May, received notice from the promoters of an undertaking requiring him to give up possession at the expiration of six months. Before the expiration of six months he was informed by the promoters of the company that they did not intend to take possession at the end of the six months:—Held, that he was entitled to compensation for any expenses which he had been put to by the notice. Reg. v. Rochdale Improvement Commissioners, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 861; 4 W. R. 643.

As between Landlord and Tenant.]—On the 15th of June, 1859, a lessor granted a lease to the lessees for twenty-one years, determinable at the option of either party at the expiration of the first seven or fourteen years. In February, 1866 (the first seven years of the term having elapsed), the lessees received notice from a railway company to treat for the purchase of their interest in the premises, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845; and the compensation payable to them by the company was assessed by an arbitrator on the 16th of April, 1867; on the 29th of July, 1870, judgment was signed for the amount, and an assignment was executed by the lessees, and the company took possession of the premises on the 21st of November, 1870. On the 19th of June, 1868, the company gave the lessor notice to treat in respect of his interest, and he sent in a claim on the 29th; but nothing further was done, the proposed line being abandoned. In 1871, the lessor brought an action against the lessees for breaches of their general covenant to repair, accruing as well before as since the assignment by the latter to the company. Upon a case stated by an arbitrator for the opinion of the court as to the principle upon which the damages were to be assessed:—Held, that there was nothing to prevent the lessor from recovering substantial damages in respect of breaches committed after the notice to treat, but before the assignment by the lessees to the railway company; and that the proper measure of damages was the amount by which the lessor's reversion had become deteriorated at the date when the company took possession under the assignment, viz. the 21st November, 1870. Mills v. East London Union, 42 L. J., C. P. 46; L. R. 8 C. P. 79; 27 L. T. 557; 21 W. R. 142.

The land of a lessee was required by a company under a lease, which provided that the lessor might resume such land for the purpose of building, planting, accommodation, or otherwise:—Held, that after the company had given notice to treat for the land, the lessor had no power to resume it by virtue of such proviso, and the company must pay compensation to the lessee. Johnson v. Edgware, Highgate and London Ry., 14 L. T. 77; 14 W. R. 416.

A railway company serves a notice on a lessee to take land held under a lease and arranges the price of his interest, there being a covenant in his lease not to assign without the consent of his landlord:—Held, that the covenant was abrogated, so as to enable the tenant to assign to the railway without the consent of the lessor. Slipper v. Tottenham and Hampstead Junction Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 841; L. R. 4 Eq. 112; 16 L. T. 446; 15 W. R. 861.

Variance between Notice and Precept.]—A variance in the description of the lands in a notice to treat, and in the precept to the sheriff, is an irregularity only, and is waived by appearing before the jury summoned to assess compensation and by proceeding on the trial after the objection taken and overruled. Bailey, Ex parte, 1 B. C. C. 66.

When a company has given notice to an owner of land to treat for the purchase of part of it, but the owner and the company cannot agree upon the terms, and the company, therefore, issues a precept to the sheriff to summon a jury to assess the value; the part of the land which is described in the precept as being that of which the jury is to assess the value, must be neither less nor more than that for the purchase of which the owner has already been required by the notice to treat. Stone v. Commercial Ry., 4 Mylne & C. 122; 1 Railw. Cas. 375.

Compelling Company to Complete Purchase.]—When a company has given a valid notice to take land, it is competent to the landowner to apply at once for a mandamus to compel the company to proceed to complete the purchase, and he cannot, therefore, at a subsequent time, urge delay on the part of the company as a ground for the interference of a court of equity with their taking proceedings to obtain the land. Pinchin v. London and Blackwall Ry., 5 De G. M. & G. 851; 3 Eq. R. 433; 24 L. J., Ch. 417; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 241; 3 W. R. 125.

A company gave notice to landholders to treat for certain lands. After some discussion, the question of compensation was referred to arbitration, which, however, was never completed:—Held, that the remedy of the landholders was by mandamus to compel the summoning of a jury, and not by bill in chancery. Lind v. Isle of Wight Ferry Co., 1 N. R. 13; 7 L. T. 416.

Where a notice to take land had been given by a company, had been followed by a claim for compensation on the part of the landowner, and a subsequent agreement between the parties, which claim and agreement were, however, ultimately abandoned and repudiated on both sides, the Court of Chancery refused to interfere to compel the company, who was in possession of the land, to summon a jury, holding that the notice per se did not give the court jurisdiction, and that the rights of the parties were to be regulated by ss. 68 and 85 of the Lands Clauses Act. Adams v. London and Blackwall Ry., 2 Mac. & G. 118; 2 Hall & T. 285; 19 L. J., Ch. 557; 14 Jur. 679.

Mere Notice — Specific Performance.]—A notice to treat for the sale of lands, given under the Lands Clauses Act, does not enable the givers of the notice to maintain a suit for specific performance against the landowner, or effect a conversion of the land as between the devisee and the residuary legatee of the landowner. Haynes v. Haynes, 1 Dr. & Sm. 426; 30 L. J., Ch. 578; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 595; 4 L. T. 199; 9 W. R. 497.

A bill filed against a railway company by the grantee of an annuity, charged on land taken by the company stated, that before the grant of the annuity, the land was subject to a mortgage in fee, which had since been paid off, but that there had been no reconveyance; that the defendants, under the powers of their act, had given the plaintiff notice to treat for the land charged with the annuity, but without any further proceedings had taken possession of the land. The prayer was, that the company might be decreed to pay the arrears of the annuity, and to secure the future payment of it. The defence made by the answer and evidence was, that the company had purchased from the prior incumbrancer under a power of sale:—Held, that the plaintiff could not on such pleadings enforce a specific performance of the notice to treat regarded as a contract to purchase the plaintiff's interest. Hill v. G. N. Ry., 5 De G. M. & G. 66; 23 L. J., Ch. 524; 18 Jur. 685; 2 W. R. 335.

Notice to treat by a railway company having compulsory powers to take land constitutes the company the equitable owner of the land. Bristol and North Somerset Ry. v. Somerset and Dorset Ry., 22 W. R. 399. Reversed, 22 W. R. 601—L. C.

A notice to treat for lands constitutes the relative situation of vendor and purchaser, as between a company and the owner of property. Doe v. London and Croydon Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 257.

Where a company gives notice to the owner of land that they require it for the purposes of their act, the relative situation of vendor and purchaser is from that moment constituted between them and the owner; and if, being unable to agree with him upon the terms of compensation, the company afterwards refuses or delays to get it assessed by a jury, a court of equity will entertain a bill for specific performance at the suit of the owner. Walker v. Eastern Counties Ry., 6 Hare, 594; 5 Railw. Cas. 469; 12 Jur. 787.

Notice creates Obligation to Buy or Sell.]—When a railway company gave a notice to treat for the purchase of property, and afterwards obtained an injunction ex parte, to restrain the owner from selling by auction, a motion to dissolve was refused, on the ground that after such a notice neither party could get rid of the obligation to buy and sell. Metropolitan Ry. v. Woodhouse, 34 L. J., Ch. 297 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 296 ; 12 L. T. 113 ; 13 W. R. 516.

Notice Given and Price Fixed.]—Notice by a railway company to take land under its compulsory powers, and the subsequent fixing of the purchase and compensation money by arbitration, together constitute a contract for sale and purchase, which the court will enforce at the instance of the vendor. Mason v. Stokes Bay Pier and Ry., 1 N. R. 84 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 110 ; 11 W. R. 80.

A railway company, after notice to treat for land has been given to the landowner, and the price of the land has been fixed by arbitrators under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is in the same position with regard to the landowner as an ordinary purchaser, and will be compelled by a court of equity to complete the purchase. Harding v. Metropolitan Ry., 41 L. J., Ch. 371 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 154 ; 26 L. T. 109 ; 20 W. R. 321.

When a company has given notice to take lands under its compulsory powers, and the price is fixed, the contract is complete, and the Court of Chancery will entertain a suit for specific performance. Regent's Canal Co. v. Ware, 23 Beav. 575 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 566 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 924 ; 5 W. R. 617.

W., by will, in 1859, bequeathed leaseholds to his sister A., and the residue of his estate to his sister E., and in 1865 was served with a notice on the part of a railway company to treat for the purchase under the provisions of its acts, of the leasehold for the purposes of the railway. Surveyors appointed by W. and the company, but not in writing, settled the value of the leaseholds, and the former verbally agreed to accept the sum named. W. died in February, 1869, the matter remaining in abeyance till April, 1870, when the sale was completed by his executor :—Held, that the notice to treat, followed by the valuation of the surveyors, was, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds, a valid contract ; and there had been an ademption of the bequest to A. ; but that she was entitled to the rents which had accrued between the death of the testator and the completion of the purchase by the company. Watts v. Watts, 43 L. J., Ch. 77 ; L. R. 17 Eq. 217 ; 29 L. T. 671 ; 22 W. R. 105.

A railway company having need of certain lands for the construction of their railway, served, in November, 1846, notice to treat upon the owners of the legal estate in the land ; but the parties not having come to any arrangement in pursuance of that notice, the company in May, 1847, proceeded by inquisition before the sheriff and a jury, and a verdict was then given for certain sums for purchase-money and compensation ; and afterwards, in the same month, the company went into possession of the lands. In March, 1848, an abstract of the title of the owners was furnished to the company, and from that period up to January, 1851, a correspondence took place between the respective parties, partly relating to title and partly to a claim made by the owners for interest upon the purchase and compensation moneys. Eventually, the company refused to pay interest, and in January, 1851, lodged the purchase-money in the Bank of Ireland, to the credit of all persons interested in the lands. A cause petition having been filed by the owners, praying a specific performance :—Held that the ordinary relation of vendor and purchaser, under the circumstances above detailed, existed between the parties. Blount v. Great Southern and Western Ry., 2 Ir. Ch. R. 40.

—— Vendor's Death before Completion.]—A railway company gave notice to purchase lands under its compulsory powers, but before a conveyance was executed the vendor died, having by his will, made before the contract was complete, devised his estate to his children, some of whom were infants. The company filed a bill for specific performance :—Held, that the company was justified in so doing, and was not liable to pay the costs of the suit. L. & S. W. Ru. v. Bridger, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 650 ; 10 L. T. 689 ; 4 N. R. 261 ; 12 W. R. 948.

Notice and Offer by Owner.]—Notice to take lands by a public body under their compulsory powers, and an offer by the owner to take a certain amount as compensation money, does not constitute a binding contract between the parties. Arnold, In re, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 883 ; 8 L. T. 623 ; 11 W. R. 793.

A landowner served by a company with a notice to treat sent in particulars of his claim, demanding a specified sum, and shortly afterwards served the company with the ordinary notice. The company not having summoned a jury within twenty-one days, the landowner brought an action for the sum specified against the company, upon which their solicitor wrote to the other solicitor saying, "The company will pay the amount claimed for the purchase of the landowner's interest in the land." The landowner having failed in the action, filed a bill in equity for a specific performance of the agreement :—Held, that the letter, together with the notice and claim, amounted to a binding agreement. Inge v. Birmingham, Wolverhampton and Stour Valley Ry., 1 Sm. & G. 347 ; 1 W. R. 300. Affirmed on appeal, 3 De G. M. & G. 658 ; 2 Eq. R. 80 ; 2 W. R. 22.

Notice by Commissioners acting in Public Capacity.] — The commissioners of woods and forests gave notices, under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 38, s. 15, that they intended to take land specified in the schedule to that act, for the purpose of forming Battersea Park. One of the landowners obtained a mandamus to the commissioners to cause a jury to be summoned to assess compensation for his land. On a return stating the proceedings at length (and showing that the commissioners in pursuance of the act, and on behalf of the crown, gave the notices in order to ascertain whether the lands could be purchased for the sum limited by the act, which by the claims sent in it appeared they could not) :—Held that the commissioners were acting in a public capacity, and that the notice given by them did not constitute a quasi contract enforceable by mandamus. Reg. v. Woods and Forests Commissioners, 15 Q. B. 761 ; 19 L. J., Q. B. 497 ; 15 Jur. 35.

3. What Lands or Interests.

a. Quantity Generally.

Discretion as to.] — When the legislature authorises railway directors to take, for the purposes of their undertaking, any lands specially described in their acts, it constitutes them the judges whether they will or not take these lands, provided that they act with the bonâ fide object of using the lands for the purposes authorised by the act, and not for any sinister or collateral purpose. Having provided for affording compensation to the owners of the lands, the legislature leaves it to the company to determine what lands are necessary to be taken. Stockton and Darlington Ry. v. Brown, 9 H. L. Cas. 246; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1168; 3 L. T. 131; 8 W. R. 708.

Under 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix. s. 80, the city commissioners of sewers have power, if they please, to take compulsorily part only of a house for the purposes of the act, as well as to take the whole. But before the commissioners can take compulsorily any premises for the purposes of the act, they must formally adjudge the taking of the premises to be necessary for those purposes; and therefore, where the commissioners had adjudged part of a house to be necessary:—Held, that they were not entitled, on this adjudication, to take the whole. Thomas v. Daw, 36 L. J., Ch. 201; L. R. 2 Ch. 1; 15 L. T. 200; 15 W. R. 113.

An adjudication of the commissioners that a certain property is required for the purpose of alterations cannot be supported if there are no grounds on which any reasonable person could come to the conclusion that it was so required. The commissioners cannot validly adjudicate that a property is required for the purposes of an improvement until they have determined what the improvement is to be, so far as to furnish materials for judging whether the property is required. Lynch v. Sewers Commissioners, 55 L. J., Ch. 409; 32 Ch. D. 72; 54 L. T. 699; 50 J. P. 548—C. A. Reversing 34 W. R. 226.

Engineer's Opinion.]—The opinion of the company's engineer, if bonâ fide, is the only evidence required by the court as to the necessity or propriety of any purchase, and the onus of proving want of bona fides rests upon the party opposing the purchase. Errington v. Metropolitan District Ry., 51 L. J., Ch. 305; 19 Ch. D. 559; 46 L. T. 443; 30 W. R. 663.

A railway company will be restrained from compulsorily taking land which does not appear to be wanted for making their line, unless the company produces more proof that it is really wanted than the mere affidavit of their engineer. Flower v. L., B. & S. C. Ry., 2 Drew. & Sm. 330; 6 N. R. 200; 34 L. J., Ch. 540; 11 Jur. (N.S.), 406; 12 L. T. 10; 13 W. R. 518.

A dispute arose between a company and a landowner as to the right of the former to take some of his land alleged to be necessary for its purposes. The court referred the question to an engineer, whose opinion was in favour of the landowner:—Held, that neither the opinion of the engineer nor of the court could curtail the power of the company in respect to the quantity of land which the company, bonâ fide acting under its statutory powers, sought to obtain. Stockton and Darlington Ry. v. Brown, 9 H. L. Ca. 246; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1168; 3 L. T. 131; 8 W. R. 708.

The court will accept as conclusive the evidence of the engineer in the service of the company as to the quantity of land required for the purposes of the railway, if the statement has a reasonable appearance of accuracy. Kemp v. S. E. Ry., 41 L. J., Ch. 404; L. R. 7 Ch. 364; 26 L. T. 110; 20 W. R. 306.

b. For What Purposes.

Sanctioned by Act.]—Semble, that the court will not allow bodies to whom parliament has given powers of making compulsory purchases of land, to avail themselves of their parliamentary powers, by taking land which they do not require for a bonâ fide purpose sanctioned by their act of parliament. Semble, also, that although an attempt to obtain possession of land has been, in the first instance, made under colour of the powers of the act of parliament, when not really required for the bonâ fide purposes of the act, yet if the land afterwards becomes really necessary or desirable for such bonâ fide purposes, the court will not interfere to prevent its being taken. Webb v. Manchester and Leeds Ry., 4 Myl. & C. 116; 1 Railw. Cas. 576.

Ownership acquired in land by a public company, under their compulsory powers, for the purpose of their works, is a qualified ownership, to be restricted to the purposes expressed in the act, those purposes being of the essence of the contract, and therefore the landowner, whose comfort and enjoyment of the remainder of his estate are affected by the company applying the ownership for other purposes not contemplated by the act, is entitled to an injunction to restrain the use of the land for such purposes. Bostock v. North Staffordshire Ry., 3 Sm. & G. 283; 25 L. J., Ch. 325; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 245; 4 W. R. 336.

The defendants, in 1846, obtained an act of parliament for the construction of branch railways, called the W. and H. branches, in which were the usual compulsory powers for the purchase of land, but they were not to be exercised after the expiration of three years from the passing of the act, and the undertaking was to be completed within five years. The term limited for the exercise of the compulsory powers was subsequently enlarged until 1851. The defendants purchased of the plaintiff portions of his land for the purposes of the W. railway, an undertaking particularly advantageous to the plaintiff, and commenced constructing the line. It was, however, never completed, and in 1850 was entirely abandoned. In 1858 the defendants introduced a bill to construct another line of railway, and for that purpose intended to use the lands purchased of the plaintiff. On demurrer to a bill for want of equity:—Held, that although a landowner has been compelled to part with his land to a railway company, however beneficial it may be to him that the railway should be made, no obligation is thrown on the company to complete their undertaking, and no right exists in the landowner to compel them to do so; nor, if the company should altogether abandon the undertaking, and apply the land taken under the powers of the act to a different purpose than the making of the railway, has the landowner any new right, arising from the state of things, which can be enforced in a court of equity. Astley v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Ry., 2 De G. & J. 453; 27 L. J., Ch. 478; 4 Jur. (N.S.), 567; 6 W. R. 561. See Dover Harbour v. S. E. Ry., 9 Hare, 489; 21 L. J., Ch. 886; Norton v.

A railway company empowered by act of parliament to construct "a railway and works" within certain limits as to space and time, is authorised under s. 16 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, within such limits, without the consent of the owner, to take land for the purpose of constructing the various works mentioned in that section, although the line be opened, and the works be not necessary, but only convenient for the purposes of the line. Sadd v. Maldon, Witham and Braintree Ry., 6 Railw. Cas. 779.

A railway company obtained an act of parliament in 1864 for extending their operations, containing compulsory powers to take additional lands in connection with their undertaking. The plaintiff's land was included in the deposited plans referred to in the act. It was provided by the act that a street called Albert Street should not be stopped up by the company without the consent of the vestry of the parish of Islington. In 1865, the company, having been unable to obtain the consent of the Islington vestry to the stopping up of Albert Street, obtained another act for the improvement of their Highbury station, and for other purposes, by which it was recited that it was expedient that the company should be empowered to stop up Albert Street, and also to acquire, by compulsion or otherwise, additional lands in connection with their undertaking, and the company was empowered to take the lands included in the deposited plans: and it was also enacted that they might stop up Albert Street, provided that they made another street in a prescribed direction. None of the plaintiff's land was included in the plans referred to in this act. The company, before the expiration of the compulsory powers of the act of 1864, gave notice to him to take some of his land included in the plans referred to in that act: although it was admitted that the land was wanted to form the new street under the provisions of the act of 1865. The plaintiff filed a bill in equity for an injunction:—Held, that he was entitled to an injunction, the stopping up of Albert Street not being one of the purposes of the act of 1864. Lamb v. North London Ry., L. R. 4 Ch. 522; 21 L. T. 98; 17 W. R. 746.

Subsidiary Object.]—Compulsory powers to take land are given to railway companies, and must be exercised, for the sole purpose of constructing the railway and works; therefore where a railway company endeavoured by means of their compulsory powers to construct a road, so as to accomplish a subsidiary object, they were restrained, at the instance of the landowner whose property would be affected, though the proposed works were within the scope of their act. Dodd v. Salisbury and Yeovil Ry., 1 Giff. 158; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 782.

A railway company, having taken land belonging to V., and completed the railway, after negotiating, gave a notice to V. to treat for other land, for the purpose of enabling them to carry out an agreement with L.:—Held, that they must be perpetually restrained from so doing. Vane v. Cockermouth, Keswick, and Penrith Ry., 12 L. T. 821; 13 W. R. 1015.

The company, in order to avoid the necessity of completely blocking up the plaintiff's entrance, took land of his to divert a road so as to diminish the obstruction:—Held, that such land was necessary for the purposes of the act, though the plaintiff did not desire the diversion of the road, and objected to his land being taken for the purpose. Dowling v. Pontypool, Caerleon, and Newport Ry., supra.

Waterworks — Surface Works.] — Where a waterworks company authorised to take certain lands by a special act, incorporating the Waterworks Clauses Act of 1847 and 1863, proposed to construct an aqueduct by means of a tunnel through a field, and deposited plans which gave no indications of surface works, and it afterwards appeared that they intended to sink a shaft to obtain additional water from the springs beneath the field, and to erect pumping-engines and other works on the surface:—Held, that the company was not authorised by the several acts referred to to construct such additional works, and that, save for the temporary purpose of construction their power over the land was limited to making a tunnel, in conformity with the plans deposited. Simpson v. South Staffordshire Waterworks, 4 De G. J. & S. 679; 34 L. J., Ch. 380; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 453; 12 L. T. 360; 13 W. R. 729. 908.

Colourable Proceeding.]—The plaintiff was owner of six adjacent houses, five in G. Place, and one in Butler's Alley. Four of the houses in G. Place adjoined Butler's Alley. On the 2nd of December, 1884, the commissioners of sewers resolved to alter, widen, and extend Butler's Alley, and adjudicated that the plaintiff's six houses were required for that purpose. Shortly afterwards they served the plaintiff with a notice to treat, which stated that the houses were required for altering and widening Butler's Alley. It appeared from a plan sent to the plaintiff that the part of Butler's Alley which lay at the back of the four houses in G. Place was only to be widened by a strip tapering from the width of twelve inches to a point, and it appeared that considerable alterations were to be made in the level of G. Place and Butler's Alley. The plaintiff moved for an injunction:—Held, that it was a question to be tried at the hearing whether the only real object of the commissioners as to the part of Butler's Alley adjoining the plaintiffs' houses was not to lower its level, and whether the minute widening of that street was not merely colourable, and proposed in order to give them power to purchase under their act, which gave them a power of compulsory purchase for the purpose of widening streets, but not for the purpose of altering levels; and that, therefore, the commissioners ought to be restrained, till the hearing or further order, from proceeding to assess the value of the plaintiff's houses. Lynch v. Sewers Commissioners, 55 L. J., Ch. 409; 32 Ch. D. 72; 54 L. T. 699; 50 J. P. 548—C. A. Reversing 34 W. R. 226.

For Purposes of Excavation, &c.]—A railway act empowered the company to make and maintain the works mentioned in it, and to enter upon, take and use such of the lands specified in the plans as should be necessary for such purposes:—Held, that the provision did not authorise the company to take compulsorily and permanently land required only for the purpose of excavating materials therefrom, although within the limits of deviation; and they were restrained from taking steps to have the value of such land assessed. Eversfield v. Mid-Sussex Ry., 3 De

G. & J. 286 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 107 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 776 ; 7 W. R. 102.

An estuary company was empowered to make and maintain certain cuts and works, and to enter upon, take and use such of the lands delineated in the deposited plans as might be necessary for that purpose :—Held, that the company was not entitled to take compulsorily land which was required, not for the site of the cuts or works, but to supply materials for the execution of works on other land. Bentinck v. Norfolk Estuary Co., 8 De G. M. & G. 714 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 404 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 345 ; 5 W. R. 327.

A railway company required a landowner to sell them certain lands, which they were empowered by their act to take for the purposes of their railway. Their engineer stated that they intended to use the land for the purpose of depositing spoil and materials during the construction of the railway, and that it was uncertain whether they would require the land after the completion of the railway. A motion by the landowner for an injunction to restrain the company from taking the land was refused. Lund v. Midland Ry., 34 L. J., Ch. 276.

Where Corporation cannot make Profit.]—A corporation, being the local board of health for the town, was empowered by an order of the secretary of state, confirmed by act of parliament, to take certain lands and houses specified in the schedule, for the purpose of widening and improving a street ; and served the usual notices to treat under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, upon the owner. The owner filed a bill to restrain the corporation from taking more of the property comprised in the schedule than was actually required for the purpose of widening the street :—Held, that as the corporation required this property for the improvement of the town, from which no profit or compensation was obtained, it was not confined, like a railway company, to the narrow limits of the property actually required for the purpose specified, but was at liberty to purchase all the property included in the schedule. Quinton v. Bristol Corporation, 43 L. J., Ch. 783 ; L. R. 17 Eq. 524 ; 30 L. T. 112 ; 22 W. R. 434.

A public body intrusted by the legislature to construct a public work for the public advantage, and with no profit to themselves, was authorised to take compulsorily more land than was required for the purpose of effecting the improvements specified in their act, with certain powers of disposing of superfluous lands :—Held, that they were entitled to take the whole of the lands scheduled in their act, even though with the avowed object of reselling a portion of such lands to a railway company ; one of the purposes of their act being to obtain money for the improvements. Galloway v. London Corporation, 35 L. J., Ch. 477 ; L. R. 1 H. L. 34 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 747 ; 14 L. T. 865.

Held, also, that they were not incapacitated from taking the whole of the lands comprised in the schedule, although, before they obtained their power to take land, they had contracted conditionally upon their obtaining such power to sell the lands for a certain sum. Ib.

"Street."]—The word "street" means a thoroughfare with houses on both sides, not merely a road or a footway. Ib.

Though the word "street" may include the houses abutting or fronting upon a public thoroughfare, as well as the actual roadway or footways, yet the strict and primâ facie meaning of the word "street" is confined to the roadway and footways ; and therefore, in the construction of the Holborn Valley Improvement Act, 1864, which gave the corporation of London powers to construct a viaduct or raised way over Holborn Valley, and to make certain new streets, and to acquire lands for the purposes of the act ; and which enacted that in any case in which the corporation might require to take any lands already purchased by the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company, and that company was unwilling to dispose of the same, or required the same for the purposes of their railway, it should be referred to arbitration in manner thereinbefore provided ; provided always, that this provision should not be construed to prevent the corporation taking all such lands of the railway company as might be required for the construction of the viaduct or raised way of the line of the new streets authorised by the act :—Held, that the latter provision did not apply to a case where the corporation required to take a piece of land already purchased by the railway company, but did not require the same for the construction of the actual roadway or footways of the viaduct or new streets. L., C. & D. Ry. v. London Corporation, 19 L. T. 250.

Taking not necessary — Object attained in another Way.]—When a railway company has given notice to take land for some object which is clearly within their compulsory powers, a court of equity will not interfere to restrain them merely on the ground that they might obtain the same object in some other way without taking the land. Lamb v. North London Ry., L. R. 4 Ch. 522 ; 21 L. T. 98 ; 17 W. R. 746.

Question for Jury.]—A. was owner of a field, the whole of which was contained in the books of reference of a railway company, but fifteen perches of it lay beyond the limits of deviation laid down in the plans. The company served a notice upon A., requiring part of the field for the purposes of the railway. A. gave notice to the company that if they took part they must take the whole, to which they agreed. A. afterwards receded from his notice. The company entered upon the whole :—Held, that the question whether the fifteen perches were necessary for the works was for the jury, and also that A. having required the company to take the whole, could not object that their entry on that portion was unlawful. Doe d. Armistead v. North Staffordshire Ry., 16 Q. B. 526 ; 20 L. J., Q. B. 249 ; 15 Jur. 944.

Restraining Proceedings—Estoppel by Conduct—Negotiations.]—The plaintiff was owner of six adjacent houses, five in G. Place, and one in Butler's Alley. Four of the houses in G. Place adjoined Butler's Alley. On the 2nd of December, 1884, the commissioners of sewers resolved to alter, widen, and extend Butler's Alley, and adjudicated that the plaintiff's six houses were required for that purpose. Shortly afterwards they served the plaintiff with a notice to treat, which stated that the houses were required for altering and widening Butler's Alley. The plaintiff sent in a claim for 2,500*l.* The parties could not agree about the price, and in October, 1885, the negotiations having come to an end, the commissioners proceeded to summon a jury. The plaintiff then made inquiry as to their plans, and commenced this action to prevent them from taking the property. It appeared from a plan sent to the plaintiff in November, 1885, which was the first information he had as to the nature of the alterations proposed by the commissioners, that the part of Butler's Alley which lay at the back of the four houses in G. Place was only to be widened by a strip tapering from the width of twelve inches to a point, and it appeared that considerable alterations were to be made in the level of G. Place and Butler's Alley. The plaintiff moved for an injunction:—Held, that Thomas v. Daw (2 L. R. Ch. 1) was inapplicable, as in that case the plaintiff knew all along what the plans of the commissioners were, whereas in the present case the plaintiff did not know them till after the negotiations were at an end, and was justified in believing the representation in the notice that his houses were required for altering and widening Butler's Alley, and that the plaintiff's conduct had not been such as to debar him from asserting his rights. Lynch v. Sewers Commissioners, 55 L. J., Ch. 409; 32 Ch. D. 72; 54 L. T. 699; 50 J. P. 548—C. A. Reversing 34 W. R. 226.

Trifling Excess.]—Where a railway company takes land in excess of its powers, semble, the court will not grant relief by injunction if the quantity and value of the land are extremely small. Dowling v. Pontypool, Caerleon and Newport Ry., 43 L. J., Ch. 761; L. R. 18 Eq. 714.

c. Limits of Deviation.

Powers of Company.]—By an act of parliament, authorising an extension of a line of railway and the construction of a station, which act incorporated the Lands Clauses Act and the Railways Clauses Act, it was enacted, that, subject to the powers of deviation in the said Railways Clauses Act contained, it shall be lawful for the said company to make and maintain the said extension and the said station, and the works connected therewith, in the lines, &c., and upon the lands delineated upon the said plans, &c., and to enter upon, take, and use such of the said lands as shall be necessary for the purpose. Plaintiff's lands were delineated upon the plans, and marked 1 and 4, and the line of deviation passed through both lots. The company required the entire of lots 1 and 4 for the purpose of extension and the station:—Held, dissolving an injunction obtained by plaintiff, that the company were empowered to take all or any part of the lands delineated on the plans, although beyond the line of deviation, and although they were not so entitled under the powers of deviation contained in the Railways Clauses Act. Crawford v. Chester and Holyhead Ry., 11 Jur. 917.

It is not necessary, in order to entitle a railway company to take lands for the purposes of their works, that the particular works should appear on the deposited plans. It is sufficient that the lands should be within the limits of deviation delineated on the plan. Weld v. L. & S. W. Ry., 32 Beav. 340; 1 N. R. 415; 33 L. J., Ch. 142; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 510; 8 L. T. 13; 11 W. R. 448.

A corporation, previously to an application to parliament for an act, served the usual parliamentary notice of its intention to apply for power to take certain land. In the margin of the schedule the property proposed to be taken was referred to as "property in the line of the proposed work as at present laid out (including property any part of which is within eleven yards or thereabouts of the centre line of such proposed work as delineated upon the plan)":—Held, that the corporation was not by this statement restricted from taking a greater total breadth than twenty-two yards, provided that what it took was within the limits of deviation prescribed by its act. Huddersfield Corporation and Jacomb, In re, L. R. 17 Eq. 476; 30 L. T. 78. Affirmed, 44 L. J., Ch. 96; L. R. 10 Ch. 92; 31 L. T. 466; 23 W. R. 100.

Held, also, that, if necessary, the words "or thereabouts" might be considered to extend the limit to an entire breadth of one-third more than the specified quantity of twice eleven yards. Ib.

A railway act empowered the company to take lands delineated on the deposited plans and described in the book of reference:—Held, that where the boundary of a plot was left unclosed outside the limits of deviation, the company might at any rate take up to the limits of deviation. Dowling v. Pontypool, Caerleon and Newport Ry., 43 L. J., Ch. 761; L. R. 18 Eq. 714.

The deposited plans and book of reference showed a small plot, No. 38, nearly surrounded by a large plot, No. 37. The schedule to the notice to treat mentioned 37 but not 38, and the accompanying plan omitted both the number and the boundary of 38. The painted area on the notice plan in fact covered the site of No. 38, and this fact was known to the plaintiff long before he pointed out the objection:—Held, that the notice was sufficient under the circumstances to entitle the company to take 38. Ib.

Held, also, that the word "delineated" could not be limited to mean surrounded on every side by lines, but that it meant sketched or represented, or so shown that landowners would have notice that the land might be taken. Ib.

A railway company served an occupier with notice to treat for part of a property described on a plan annexed to a schedule to their notice, and which showed a plot of ground partly within and partly without the limit of deviation, and bounded at the extremity by a road. The deposited plans had marked upon them a field, which the proposed line of railway would not touch, but through which the limit of deviation would pass. The boundaries of the field outside the limit of deviation were not marked on the plan, but the boundaries which were within that line were. The court restrained the company from taking the land beyond the limits of deviation on the undefined side, though the name of the owner of the whole field was described in the book of reference. Wrigley v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., 4 Giff. 352; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 710; 8 L. T. 267.

A market company obtained a special act, the preamble of which recited that a convenient site might be obtained between certain streets on the east and certain other streets on the west, and which enacted that the Market and Fairs Clauses Act was incorporated therewith. Sect. 24 authorised the erection of a market-house on land described in the deposited plans, and by s. 25 the company were enabled to alter and widen streets in the way pointed out on the deposited plans, and by s. 30 to buy additional lands, not exceeding two acres. A. B. was the owner of land on the west side of one of the streets on the western boundary of the area spoken of in the preamble, and his land was described in the deposited plans, but it did not thereby appear that more was intended to be taken than enough to widen one of the streets named in s. 25. The company proceeded to take the whole land of A. B. compulsorily, and to build upon it a covered building, in addition to the market-house authorised by s. 24; whereupon A. B. filed his bill for an injunction, which was granted, the Master of the Rolls deciding that the company could only erect one market-house and not two, and that on the east side; and that although the preamble could not control the enactments, it might be resorted to to remove obscurity. The company appealed:—Held, that as the land of the plaintiff was described in the plan, and as therefore it might be wanted, the company was authorised to take it; and as by the general act "the singular may mean the plural," the company were not restricted by the word "market-house;" that the enactments of the special act did not require a reference to the preamble to explain them, and the injunction must be dissolved, the company being the proper judges of what lands were necessary for the works. Richards v. Scarborough Public Market Co., 23 L. J., Ch. 110.

The plaintiffs were tenants of a nursery-ground, through the S.W. part of which ran the central line of an intended railway, as shown on the deposited plans. Only the S.W. boundary and part of the S.E. boundary of the nursery-ground were delineated on the plans, the latter being carried to a point a little to the N.E. of the N.E. limit of deviation, and the paths in the ground were carefully delineated, and carried on to short unequal distances beyond the same limit. The company gave the plaintiffs notice to treat for a strip of land bounded on the N.E. by an imaginary line beyond, and distant about a chain and a half from, the N.E. limit of deviation. If this line had been traced on the plan, the tracings of the outer boundary of the nursery-ground, and those of nearly all the paths, would have stopped short of it. The plaintiffs applied for an injunction to restrain the company from taking any ground to the N.E. of the N.E. limit of deviation, as not being delineated on the plans:—Held, that nothing to the N.E. of the limit of deviation could be considered to be "delineated" on the plan, and that the company could not take compulsorily anything beyond that limit. Protheroe v. Tottenham and Forest Gate Ry., [1891] 3 Ch. 278; 65 L. T. 323—C. A.

When a company seek to obtain power to acquire a limited portion only of a piece of land of great extent which is not broken up into closes, they must frame their deposited plans in such a way as to show how much of it they mean to acquire power to take. Dowling v. Pontypool, &c., Ry. (L. R. 18 Eq. 714) discussed. Ib.

Land reasonably Required.]—A railway company, authorised by its special act to take such of the lands shown and described in the deposited plans and books of reference as might be required for the purposes mentioned in the special act, has power to take lands outside the limits of deviation, if such lands are reasonably required for the construction of the line of railway within the limits of deviation, provided such lands have been properly shown and described in the deposited plans and books of reference. Wrigley v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry. (4 Giff. 352) explained. Dowling v. Pontypool, &c., Ry. (L. R. 18 Eq. 714) approved. Finck v. L. & S. W. Ry., 59 L. J., Ch. 458; 44 Ch. D. 330; 62 L. T. 881; 38 W. R. 513—C. A.

The deposited plans and books of reference showed two tenements of land (numbered thereon as Nos. 122 and 123), which consisted of two houses with their respective curtilages. One of the houses, and part of the other house, as well as parts of the curtilages of both, were within the limits of deviation, but the remaining parts of the two tenements were outside those limits. The tenant of the house partly within and partly without the limits required the company to take the whole of his tenement, but the plaintiff, the landlord, refused to sell the whole of the two tenements to the company:—Held, that, under such circumstances, it became reasonably necessary for the company to take the whole of the two tenements numbered 122 and 123, and that, as they were shown and described in the deposited plans and books of reference, the company were entitled to take them. Pulling v. L., C. & D. Ry. (3 De G. J. & S. 661) distinguished. Ib.

For Siding.]—Land within the limits of deviation in the deposited plans and sections, but not actually taken in the first instance by the company, may be taken for the purposes of making a siding, so as to give local traffic an ingress on to the main line. Dylar's Estate, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 975. See Cother v. Midland Ry., 17 L. J., Ch. 235; 2 Ph. 453; 5 Railw. Cas. 187, and cases sub tit. RAILWAY.

Admissibility of Evidence.]—Evidence (not before the committee of parliament) was admitted to prove boundaries beyond those shown on the deposited plans, and was used in determining the extent of the "lands delineated." Dowling v. Pontypool, Caerleon and Newport Ry., supra.

Evidence of engineers as experts on the construction of the plans and of the act will not be admitted. Ib.

d. Houses, Buildings and Manufactories.

i. In General.

"House."]—The word "house" in s. 92 comprises everything which would pass by that word in a conveyance. King v. Wycombe Ry., 28 Beav. 104; 29 L. J., Ch. 462; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 2 L. T. 107.

The word "house," in s. 92, includes only what would pass by a conveyance of a house, and does not include a field occupied with the house, which is not necessary to the occupation of the house. Fergusson v. L., B. & S. C. Ry., 3 De G. J. & S. 653; 33 L. J., Ch. 29; 9 L. T., 134; 11 W. R. 1088; 2 N. R. 566.

The word "house" includes all that would pass by a devise of the house; but that does not include land which is not necessary for the convenient use and occupation of the house, but only for the personal use and convenience of the owner and occupier. Steele v. Midland Ry., L. R. 1 Ch. 275; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 218; 14 L. T. 3; 14 W. R. 367.

The word "house" in s. 92 must be interpreted as used in the general, if not universal, sense in which the law understood it. Grosvenor

v. Hampstead Junction Ry., 1 De G. & J. 446; 26 L. J., Ch. 731; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1085; 5 W. R. 812.

The term "house" in s. 92 includes everything that would pass under an ordinary conveyance of a house. Hewson v. L. & S. W. Ry., 2 L. T. 369; 8 W. R. 467.

Upon a compulsory purchase of a house under the powers of the Lands Clauses Act, the promoters are bound to take only the entire property which, as a matter of legal construction, would pass under a grant or devise simpliciter of the particular house in question in each particular case. Kerford v. Seacombe, Hoylake, and Deeside Ry., 57 L. J., Ch. 270; 58 L. T. 445; 36 W. R. 431; 52 J. P. 487.

Form of Claim.]—The words "house or other building or manufactory," in s. 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, refer to three distinct things; and it is sufficient that the owner of premises, part of which is required by a company, should specify the premises which he requires them to take without stating whether he makes the claim on the ground that they are a house, or a building, or a manufactory. Richards v. Swansea Improvement and Tramways Co., 9 Ch. D. 425; 38 L. T. 833; 26 W. R. 764.

Compelling Company to take less than Whole.]—When a railway company takes lands forming part of a house, the owner can compel the company to take the whole of the other property comprised in the word "house," but not a portion only of it. Pulling v. L., C. & D. Ry., 3 De G. J. & S. 661; 33 L. J., Ch. 505; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 665; 10 L. T. 740; 12 W. R. 969.

Leasehold Interest.]—Sect. 92 is applicable although the landowner may have only a leasehold interest. Ib.

Garden and Orchard.]—A railway company, under the compulsory powers of the 8 & 9 Vict., c. 18, cannot take a portion of a garden and orchard essential to the enjoyment of a mansion and premises; it must take the entire house and curtilage. Where, therefore, a mansion and premises were surrounded by a brick wall, and a railway company took a portion of the garden and orchard, and divided one part of the premises from another, and destroyed all internal communication:—Held, that the company was bound to take the whole estate. King v. Wycombe Ry., 28 Beav. 104; 29 L. J., Ch. 462; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 2 L. T. 107.

A railway company proposing to take part of the garden attached to a dwelling-house, thereby cutting off the end of the garden and the summer-house, is bound to take the whole property. Cole v. West London and Crystal Palace Ry., 27 Beav. 242; 28 L. J., Ch. 767; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1114; 1 L. T. 178.

A man, with his dwelling-house situate in a piece of ground two and one-eighth acres in extent and surrounded by brick walls, using part of the land as a nursery garden for trade purposes, is entitled to compel a railway company proposing, without actually touching the house, to take the greenhouses and a part which has been planted and used for ornamental purposes, to take the whole of the land. Salter v. Metropolitan District Ry., 39 L. J., Ch. 567; L. R. 9 Eq. 432.

A house had attached to it a shrubbery and a series of gardens, separated by walls, but all connected by a gravel walk passing through the dividing walls:—Held, that the garden farthest from the house, and inclosed at a more recent period than the others, was part of the house within the meaning of the act; so that a railway company could not take it without taking the whole house. Hewson v. L. & S. W. Ry., 2 L. T. 369; 8 W. R. 467.

Meadow Land.]—A field, separated from the garden of a house by a ha-ha, traversed by a gravel walk leading to a coachman's house at the farthest end, and used occasionally for purposes of pleasure (as archery and dancing), though chiefly as pasture for cows, is not part of the house within s. 92. Pulling v. L., C. & D. Ry., supra.

A. was, under one and the same instrument, lessee of a house and garden, and also of a piece of meadow land, separated from it by a road originally made for the convenience of himself and the lessees of the adjoining houses, but afterwards thrown open to the public. Each of the other lessees had also a strip of land on the other side of the road; and these strips were all thrown into one piece, and were used by the lessees in common as cricket and pleasure ground. It was let by them to a butcher for grazing purposes. A railway company required this piece of land for its line; but A. insisted that the company must take his house and garden as well:—Held, that this strip of land was not included in the word "house," inasmuch as it was of pleasure only, and not of necessity to the enjoyment and occupation of A.'s residence. Fergusson v. L., B. & S. C. Ry., 33 Beav. 103; 3 De G. J. & S. 653; 2 N. R. 566; 33 L. J., Ch. 29; 9 L. T. 134; 11 W. R. 1088.

Meadow land, not being appurtenant to a house at the time of a notice, does not form part of the house and garden. Chambers v. L., C. & D. Ry., 1 N. R. 517; 8 L. T. 235; 11 W. R. 479.

S. was owner and occupier of a house and six acres of meadow land on the west of the Edgware-road. He had a large family, and the ground he had being insufficient for the horses and cows which he kept for their use, he bought six and a quarter acres on the other side of the road, the nearest point being distant 120 yards from his entrance gate. At the nearest point of this land were a cow-house, loose box, and a cottage which was occupied by his grooms, because he had no accommodation for them on his own side of the road, and he for a number of years occupied the land for the purpose of feeding the horses and cows requisite for his establishment:—Held, that the six and a quarter acres could not be considered part of the house. Steele v. Midland Ry., L. R. 1 Ch. 275; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 218; 14 L. T. 3; 14 W. R. 367.

The plaintiff, in the year 1853, acquired land on the north side of a road, on which he built a residence for his own occupation. In the year 1864 he acquired a plot of land on the south side of the same road immediately opposite his residence, whereon he built stables and formed a kitchen garden, and this property had since been continuously occupied by him as an adjunct to his residence. The defendants gave notice to exercise their compulsory powers in respect of the stables and garden only:—Held, that the property included in the notice was not part of the plaintiff's "house" within s. 92 of the act, and the defendants could not be compelled to take the plaintiff's residence itself. Quære, whether under such circumstances a piece of land detached from a residence may not be part of the "house" within the meaning of the section. Kerford v. Seacombe, Hoylake and Deeside Ry., 57 L. J., Ch. 270; 58 L. T. 445; 36 W. R. 431; 52 J. P. 487.

The owner of a property consisting of a strip of land about 100 yards long by 30 yards wide, with a road at each end, containing front garden, house, back garden and paddock, the latter abutting on the back road, and with private roads from the house to the front road, and from the house along the side of the paddock to the back road, received notice from a railway company of their intention to take the whole of the end of the paddock and private road, so as to cut him off from the back road:—Held, that they must take the whole property. Barnes v. Southsea Ry., 27 Ch. D. 536; 51 L. T. 762; 32 W. R. 976.

House and Warehouse.]—A. was lessee for years of a house and of a warehouse, between which was a yard, over which he had a right of way granted by the same demise. B. was the occupier as under-lessee. A railway company proposed to take the warehouse, and gave notice, and paid a sum into court, and gave a bond conditioned to pay compensation-money to A., the lessee, "her heirs, executors, or administrators," and then took possession of the warehouse, which they began to pull down. A., the lessee, filed her bill against the company, and moved for an injunction to restrain the company from continuing in possession, and from proceeding to pull down the warehouse, contending that, under the Lands Clauses Act, the defendants were bound to take the whole of the premises. B., the under-lessee, was no party to the suit. The court refused to interfere by injunction, and directed a case for the opinion of a court of law. Dakin v. L. & N. W. Ry., 3 De G. & Sm. 414; 13 Jur. 579.

Strip in front of House.]—A small piece of ground was situated in front of a public-house, and had always been occupied with it. On one side it was open to a narrow public street, and customers frequently left their horses and carts standing on it while they were inside the public-house. A strip immediately in front of the public-house was paved, and formed part of a public footway between two streets:—Held, that this piece of ground was part of the house. Marson v. L., C. & D. Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 483; L. R. 6 Eq. 101; 18 L. T. 319.

Two Demises.]—Where a proprietor of a house and garden held them under two demises, the house and part of the garden being comprised in one, and the other part of the garden in the other demise, the company must take the whole, and make compensation. Macgregor v. Metropolitan Ry., 14 L. T. 354.

Part of House within Limit.]—A railway act enacted, that if "any house which shall be situated within fifty feet from the railway shall be deteriorated in value, and the owner shall require them to purchase the same, it shall be lawful for them to treat for such purchase, or for the amount of compensation to be paid for damage, and in case of disagreement, the amount of compensation to be settled by a jury: provided, that no party shall be entitled to receive compensation unless the jury determine that the property has been deteriorated: provided, that in no case shall the company be compellable to purchase any portion of any house which portion is situate at a greater distance than fifty feet from the railway: and provided, that the company, whenever called on to take part of such house, may at their option take the whole":—Held, that a house of which a very large proportion was within fifty feet of the railway, was a house within fifty feet, and that the compensation was claimable for the whole at the owner's option; the company also having an option to take the whole, if called on to take part. Walker v. London and Blackwall Ry., 3 Railw. Cas. 396; 3 Q. B. 744; 3 G. & D. 549; 12 L. J., Q. B. 88: 7 Jur. 323.

By a railway act it was enacted, that, if the company wished to purchase any part of certain property, they should not be authorised to compel the sale of, or to take less than the whole of such property. The owner of any "house, manufactory, ground or building," situate within fifty feet of the railway, might require the company to purchase his rights and interests in such houses, manufactories, ground or buildings. A piece of ground, held under one lease, contained a principal dwelling-house, yard, and garden, occupied by a manufacturer, and a manufactory, and five smaller dwelling-houses, in the occupation of under-tenants. The principal dwelling-house and garden only were within the fifty feet of the railway, and the company did not wish to purchase any part of the property:—Held, that the owner could not compel the company to buy more than the dwelling-house, yard, and garden. Reg. v. London and Greenwich Ry., 3 Railw. Cas. 138; 2 G. & D. 444; 3 Q. B. 166; 11 L. J., Q. B. 187; 6 Jur. 892.

Two Houses — Internal Communication.]—Where a man used two houses with internal communication as one house for the purpose of one business, holding them under separate leases of even date from the same lessor, the court held that the two houses constituted one entire house within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 92, so that, if the company took the premises comprised in one lease, they were bound to take those comprised in the other. Siegenberg v. Metropolitan District Ry., 49 L. T. 554; 32 W. R. 333.

The plaintiff was the lessee of two semi-detached villas under one continuous roof. The party-wall between them was only carried up to the ceilings of the bedrooms, so that the space between those ceilings and the roof formed one continuous space, through which a person might creep from one end of the roof to the other, but with this exception, there was no internal communication between the two villas. The party-wall was so ineffective that if one of the villas was to be pulled down, the other villa would become uninhabitable. Each villa had its own distinct garden. A railway company, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, gave notice to treat for a strip of the garden of one of the villas, and received a counter-notice requiring them to take the two villas. The company deposited only the assessed value of the strip of garden comprised in their notice to treat. The plaintiff filed a bill to compel the company to take the two villas, and thereupon they agreed to take the whole of one of the villas:—Held, that the two villas did not constitute one house within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 92, and that the company could take one villa without taking the other. Harvie v. South Devon Ry., 32 L. T. 1; 23 W. R. 202.

Where House Unfinished.]—Trustees of a charity purchased land, and covenanted to erect upon it buildings, consisting of a hall in the centre, with almshouses (some on each side of the hall, and others forming wings of the main building), with a garden in the centre. A portion was to be built within a specified time, and the rest as funds were subscribed. Before more than the centre was completed, a railway company required to take a portion of the land which, when the design was completed, would be part of the garden in front of one of the intended almshouses :—Held, that the land was part of a house. Grosvenor v. Hampstead Junction Ry., 1 De G. & J. 446 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 731 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1085 ; 5 W. R. 812.

A. had erected and covered in three new houses : but while they were in an unfinished state, a railway company required a portion of the land intended to be attached to them as gardens :—Held, that the company was bound to purchase the whole of the property, although the houses had never been completed, and had fallen into a state of great dilapidation. Alexander v. West End and Crystal Palace Ry., 30 Beav. 556 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 500 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 833.

Special Act—Power to take Part only.]—Under 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix. s. 80, the city commissioners of sewers have power, if they please, to take compulsorily part only of a house for the purposes of the act, as well as to take the whole. And in this respect s. 80 is to be taken as making no distinction between houses and land. But before the commissioners can take compulsorily any premises for the purposes of the act, they must formally adjudge the taking of the premises to be necessary for those purposes ; and, therefore, where the commissioners had adjudged part of a house to be necessary :—Held, that they were not entitled, on this adjudication, to take the whole. Thomas v. Dare, 36 L. J., Ch. 201 ; L. R. 2 Ch. 1 ; 15 L. T. 200 ; 15 W. R. 113.

Counter-notice.]—A landlord is not compelled to sell a part of his house, if, before the company has begun to put its compulsory powers in motion, he gives them notice to take the whole. Gardner v. Charing Cross Ry., 2 Johns. & H. 248 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 181 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 151 ; 5 L. T. 418 ; 10 W. R. 120.

A landowner, who, upon being served by a company with notice to treat for part of his property, replied by claiming a given sum for the part, is not thereby precluded, if that sum is refused, from asserting his right to require the company to take the whole. Ib.

The defendants gave notice to treat in respect of E. Villa and a strip of land at the back thereof that formed part of the garden of W. Villa. The owner gave a counter-notice requiring the defendants to take the whole of W. Villa ; the defendants then abandoned their notice to treat. The owner contending that he was entitled to treat the notice as applicable to E. Villa without the strip of land at the back, proceeded ex parte by arbitration, and compensation was assessed in respect of E. Villa ; in an action to recover the amount awarded :—Held, that there was only one notice to treat and that the owner could not treat the notice as two notices applicable to E. Villa and part of W. Villa, and therefore that he was not entitled to recover. Thompson v. Tottenham and Forest Gate Ry., 67 L. T. 416 ; 57 J. P. 181. And see also COUNTER NOTICE, post, col. 1347.

In Case of Tunnel.]—A piece of land two and a half acres in extent, with a small cottage built upon it, was occupied by a market gardener, and used for the purposes of trade ; a company ran its tunnel under the house, and so that the line of the tunnel severed a portion of the land from the rest :—Held, that the owner of the land was not entitled, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 92, to compel the company to take the whole of the land, but that he was entitled to compel it to take the whole cottage, with so much of the land as was used for ornament or otherwise in immediate connection with the cottage, and also the severed portion of the land, notwithstanding that the tunnel did not interfere with access. Falkner v. Somerset and Dorset Ry., 42 L. J., Ch. 851 ; L. R. 16 Eq. 458.

"Town."]—Where premises were within the municipal boundaries of a town, but not surrounded by houses :—Held, that they were not in a town within the meaning of s. 93. Ib. See INTERSECTED LANDS, post, col. 1356.

"Buildings"—Additions to Hospital.]—A wing of a hospital, joined to a main building by a wall only, but used for the like purposes as the main building, and the garden of the hospital, are parts of the "house or other building" forming the hospital, within s. 92, although both wing and garden are modern additions to an ancient edifice. St. Thomas's Hospital v. Charing Cross Ry., 1 Johns. & H. 400 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 395 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 256 ; 4 L. T. 13 ; 9 W. R. 411.

—— Agreement, whether ousting s. 92.]—Clauses were inserted, upon the requirement by counsel for the trustees of the hospital before a parliamentary committee, making provision for preventing passing trains from interfering with the conduct of the hospital :—Held, that such clauses were intended to meet the case of the trustees not requiring the company to take the entire building, and that they did not by implication, or as matter of agreement before the committee, interfere with the trustees' rights. Ib.

"Manufactories"—What are.]—When land is employed for the purpose of a business not involving manufacture, but portions of it are used for auxiliary manufacturing processes, the whole is not a manufactory within the Lands Clauses Act. Reddin v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 4 De G. F. & J. 532 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 660 ; 7 L. T. 6 ; 10 W. R. 764.

Where, therefore, a dust contractor used a large piece of land for the purpose of collecting and disposing of the contents of dust-heaps, one portion being used as a sorting-place, another for the conversion of parts of the heap into cement, and another for converting other parts into manure :—Held, that the first-mentioned portion might be taken compulsorily without the rest. Ib.

B. & Sons, tea merchants, carried on their business at P. House and also in houses in G. Street in the immediate vicinity. In the houses in G. Street the tea was stored, blended, and milled, and by those and similar processes special teas of a distinct quality were produced and sold in the market under B. & Sons' trade mark.

In P. House the packing requisites were prepared and made, and the tea packed, and thence it was delivered to customers. The Metropolitan Board of Works desired to take P. House under their compulsory powers :—Held, that manufacture meant producing something new from raw material, which was not the case here; but that, even supposing a manufacture was carried on at G. Street, there was no manufacture carried on at P. House, and as the business and manufacture were carried on in distinct premises, it was not incumbent on the board to take the premises as a whole. Consequently, B. & Sons were not entitled to an injunction restraining the board from taking P. House without taking the whole. Benington v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 54 L. T. 837; 50 J. P. 740.

The plaintiff was the owner of a leasehold house in High Street, Swansea, and of five freehold cottages in Bethesda Row, which run parallel to High Street, the yards at the back of the cottages abutting on the back yard and buildings held with the house in High Street. The plaintiff used the house in High Street as a dwelling-house and shop, and the buildings behind it as a candle manufactory, candle store, bread store, and provision store. One of the cottages in the row was turned into a store house, and was made to communicate with the High Street premises, and was used as a back entrance to them. A tramway company gave notice to treat for the five cottages in the row and the yards behind them. The plaintiff gave a counter-notice that the land proposed to be taken was part of premises occupied by him as a manufactory, and calling upon the company to take the whole of the premises; and on the company's refusal he brought an action asking for a declaration that he might not be compelled to sell the part only of his "manufactory building and land" which was comprised in the notice to treat; and for an injunction :—Held, that the whole block of buildings constituted one "manufactory" within s. 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, and that the company was bound to take the whole. Richards v. Swansea Improvements and Tramways Co., 9 Ch. D. 425; 38 L. T. 833; 26 W. R. 764—C. A.

—— Part or Whole.]—A railway company, having given notice of their wish to purchase part of premises used as a manufactory, cannot be compelled to purchase the whole of such premises, under s. 92, which although it protects owners from being obliged to sell a part only, if willing and able so sell the whole, contains no words making it obligatory on the company, under notice of their wanting part, to take the whole. Reg. v. L. & S. W. Ry., 5 Railw. Cas. 669; 12 Q. B. 775; 17 L. J., Q. B. 326; 12 Jur. 973.

Therefore, where a company has given a notice requiring part of a manufactory, a mandamus, directing them to summon a jury to assess compensation for the whole, cannot be sustained. Ib.

Where a mandamus requires the company to take the whole manufactory, the writ cannot go for a part only. Ib.

Land included in the same wall with tin-plate works, and used for the deposit of ashes from the works, is part of a manufactory, although the two portions of the property were separated by a road over which a stranger had a right of way. Sparrow v. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry., 2 De G. M. & G. 94; 21 L. J., Ch. 731; 16 Jur. 703.

A railway company gave notice to S. of their intention to take his dwelling-house and cottages, all separated from a manufactory carried on by S. only by a road, which cottages were used as warehouses, and were the only warehouses used in connection with the manufactory :—Held, that the cottages were part of the manufactory, and that the company could be compelled to take the whole manufactory. Spackman v. G. W. Ry., 1 Jur. (N.S.) 790.

Where a railway company propose to take part of a building, a portion of which building is used as a manufactory, they are taking part of the manufactory within the meaning of s. 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Brook v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., 64 L. J., Ch. 890; [1895] 2 Ch. 571; 13 R. 798; 73 L. T. 205; 43 W. R. 698.

—— In Case of Tunnel.]—A railway company having given notice to take the surface of land which constituted part of a manufactory, and which they were restrained from taking by an interim injunction :—Held, that they could not on the hearing set up the case that they could avoid taking part of the manufactory by making a tunnel underneath it. Sparrow v. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry., 9 Hare, 441.

—— Bridging over.]—Throwing a railway bridge over a yard belonging to a manufactory, and used for the preparation of colours, a process which required air and light, is taking a part of the manufactory, notwithstanding that no part of the soil itself is actually taken or touched. Pinchin v. London and Blackwall Ry., 1 Kay & J. 34; 2 Eq. R. 1172; 3 W. R. 52. See S. C., on appeal, 5 De G. M. & G. 851; 24 L. J., Ch. 417; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 241; 3 W. R. 125; 3 Eq. R. 433.

A special act of a company incorporated so much of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, as was not inconsistent with it. It also provided that such parts of the line as passed through a piece of land should be arched over, so as to afford to the owner a communication between the severed portions :—Held, that this provision was not inconsistent with, and therefore did not exclude the operation of s. 92, that no party shall be required to sell part of a manufactory if he shall be able and willing to sell the whole. Sparrow v. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry., 2 De G. M. & G. 94; 21 L. J., Ch. 731; 16 Jur. 703.

A manufactory sometimes worked, or in part worked, by water power, had a reservoir, which was supplied by a goit, into which water was turned out of a natural river at some distance off. At the point where the goit commenced there was a weir in the river; there were shuttles for regulating the flow of water into the goit, and a mill-house for the occupation of a man whose duty it was to attend to the shuttles. A railway company gave notice to treat for certain parcels of land, including the weir, shuttles, mill-house, and parts of the bed of the river (which was included in the proprietor's lease, though not forming part of the manufactory), and of the goit. They proposed to pass over the shuttles, weir, mill-house, river and goit by bridges :—Held, that they were bound to take the whole manufactory. Furniss v. Midland Ry., L. R. 6 Eq. 473.

—— Includes Trade Fixtures.]—A company taking a manufactory is bound to take, as part thereof, the trade fixtures therein. Gibson v. Hammersmith and City Ry., 2 Dr. & Sm. 603 ; 1 N. R. 305 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 337 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 221 ; 8 L. T. 43 ; 11 W. R. 299.

Yard—What is.]—By a railway act it was enacted, that, if the railway company should be desirous of purchasing part of any house, garden, yard, warehouse, building or manufactory, and the owner should signify his inclination to sell the whole of such house, yard, &c., he should not be compelled to sell to the company part only or less than the whole of such house, garden, yard, &c. :—Held, that a yard for bonding foreign timber, in which there were a deal shed and two buildings, containing saw-pits, was not a yard within the meaning of the enactment. Stone v. Commercial Ry., 9 Sim. 621 ; 1 Railw. Cas. 375 ; 4 Myl. & C. 122.

Persons under Disability.]—Persons under disability, who can sell and convey under ss. 6, 7, of the Lands Clauses Act, are able to sell and convey within the meaning of s. 92. St. Thomas's Hospital v. Charing Cross Ry., 1 Johns. & H. 400 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 395 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 256 ; 4 L. T. 13 ; 9 W. R. 411.

Termor.]—A termor is entitled to the benefit of s. 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, although his option would not affect the owner of the fee. Pulling v. L. C. & D. Ry., 3 De G. J. & S. 661 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 505 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 665 ; 10 L. T. 741 ; 12 W. R. 969.

ii. Counter Notice.

Construction of s. 92.]—The proper construction of s. 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, which enacts, that "no party shall at any time be required to sell or convey to the promoters of the undertaking a part only of any house or other building or manufactory if such party be willing and able to sell and convey the whole," is that a landlord shall not be compelled to sell a part of his house, if, before the company have begun to put their compulsory powers in motion, he gives them notice to take the whole. Gardner v. Charing Cross Ry., 2 Johns. & H. 248 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 181 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 151 ; 5 L. T. 418 ; 10 W. R. 120.

Form of.]—A railway company gave notice to B. of their intention to take a part of his property. The surveyors of both parties met, and it was verbally agreed that the company would take the whole of the property. There was no written notice on the part of the landowner, requiring the company to take the whole. The company proceeded to have part of the property valued, to pay the money into court, and to take compulsory possession of that part of the property ; and thereupon B. filed a bill for an injunction to restrain them, and to compel them to take the whole :—Held, that the course which B. had taken was that to which he had a right, and that he was entitled to all the costs of the suit. Binney v. Hammersmith and City Ry., 9 Jur. (N.S.) 773 ; 8 L. T. 161.

The defendants gave notice to treat in respect of E. Villa and a strip of land at the back thereof that formed part of the garden of W. Villa. The owner gave a counter-notice requiring the defendants to take the whole of W. Villa, the defendants then abandoned their notice to treat. The owner contending that he was entitled to treat the notice as applicable to E. Villa without the strip of land at the back, proceeded ex parte by arbitration, and compensation was assessed in respect of E. Villa ; in an action to recover the amount awarded :—Held, that there was only one notice to treat and that the owner could not treat the notice as two notices applicable to E. Villa and part of W. Villa, and therefore that he was not entitled to recover. Thompson v. Tottenham and Forest Gate Ry., 67 L. T. 416 ; 57 J. P. 181.

It is quite sufficient, if, when the company have proposed to take a piece of land, the landowner has given them notice that he is able and willing to sell, and desires them to take the whole of a certain defined property ; whether or no he describes it inaccurately as a "manufactory," when he ought to have described it as a "house," or as a "building," when he ought to have described it as a "house," is immaterial. Richards v. Swansea Improvements and Tramways Co., 9 Ch. D. 425 ; 38 L. T. 833 ; 26 W. R. 764.

In what Cases.]—A notice to treat in respect of a right of way does not confer on the owner a right to give a counter-notice requiring the company to take the whole of the manufactory, because a right of way could not be considered as part of the manufactory. Pinchin v. London and Blackwall Ry., 5 De G. M. & G. 851 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 417 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 241 ; 3 Eq. R. 433 ; 3 W. R. 125.

A termor is entitled to the benefit of s. 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, although his option would not affect the owner of the fee. Pulling v. L. C. & D. Ry., 3 De G. J. & S. 661 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 505 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 665 ; 10 L. T. 741 ; 12 W. R. 969.

Time for giving.]—In 1847 the G. W. Railway Company gave notice to S. of their intention to take his dwelling-house and certain cottages, all separated from a manufactory carried on by S. only by a road, which cottages were used as warehouses, and were the only warehouses used in connection with the manufactory. The company not having taken active steps on the notice of 1847, S. sued out a mandamus to compel them, but did not prosecute it. The compulsory powers of the act of 1847 expired, and were renewed by an act of 1852, under which the company again issued a new notice respecting the premises in question. The plaintiff's solicitor afterwards verbally informed the defendants' solicitor, at a casual meeting, that the plaintiff wished to part with the whole, and not a part only, of the premises. The company thereafter, without communication with the plaintiff, procured their surveyor to be appointed by two justices under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, who valued that portion which they wished to take. The company then paid that sum into court, and executed a bond under the Lands Clauses Act, and entered and commenced work :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to give the defendants now, by his bill, notice of his intention to part with the whole, and not a part only, of the premises ; and an injunction was granted accordingly, restraining the company from entering on the premises until the value should be properly ascertained. Spackman v. G. W. Ry., 1 Jur. (N.S.) 790.

Effect of, on Notice.]—Semble, where a valid notice has been given to take part of a house or manufactory, and on that a valid counter-notice has been given to take the whole, the notice and counter-notice will be treated as constituting one notice, for the purpose of enabling the jury to assess the value of the property forming the subject-matter of the notice and counter-notice. Pinchin v. London and Blackwall Ry., supra.

The effect of the counter-notice to take the whole does not operate to destroy, but only to suspend the original notice to take a part of the property. Schwinge v. London and Blackwall Ry., infra.

Effect of Claiming given Sum.]—A landowner, who, upon being served by a company with notice to treat for a part of his property, replied by claiming a given sum for the part, is not thereby precluded, if that sum is refused, from asserting his right, under s. 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, to require the company to take the whole. Gardner v. Charing Cross Ry., supra.

Assent—Expiration of Compulsory Powers.]—On the 30th June, 1853, the L. and B. Railway Company gave the plaintiff notice that they should, under the provisions of their acts for widening the railway, require the messuage in which he resided, and such portions of the yard as would be requisite for the sites of the piers, and for the right or easement of making and maintaining the widening over the intermediate spaces. On the 11th July following the plaintiff gave the railway company notice, under s. 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, that he was willing and able to sell the whole, but declined to sell a part of his property. On the 27th July, 1853, the compulsory powers of the company, which had been extended from 1849, expired. Negotiations for the settlement of the terms having failed, nothing more was done by either party until the 2nd November, 1854, when the railway company gave the plaintiff notice that they intended to issue their warrant to the sheriff for summoning a jury to assess the price or compensation to be paid to the plaintiff for the whole of his property. On motion for an injunction to restrain the railway company from summoning a jury, from taking any proceedings at law against the plaintiff, and from taking possession of the property: —Held, that as the railway company, before the expiration of their compulsory powers, gave notice to take part of the plaintiff's property, and as the plaintiff, within the time limited, gave notice to the company to take the whole of his property, it was not necessary that the company should, upon the construction of the acts of parliament, signify their assent to take the whole before the expiration of their compulsory powers; and therefore a letter written on the 9th September, 1854, was a sufficient assent by the company of their disposition to treat for the purchase of the whole of the property. Schwinge v. London and Blackwall Ry., 3 Sm. & G. 30; 3 Eq. R. 536; 24 L. J., Ch. 405; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 368; 3 W. R. 360.

Appointment of Surveyor — Contract.] — A notice by a railway company to treat for a part of a manufactory was met by a counter-notice by the owners, requiring them to take the whole. The company then gave the owners notice of their intention to apply to the Board of Trade for the appointment of a surveyor to determine the value of the premises comprised in the notice to treat, and of the further lands and hereditaments which the owners could lawfully require and had required the company to purchase and take. The owners then filed a bill praying for a declaration that the company could not take a part of the manufactory without taking the whole; whereupon the company gave notice of its intention to withdraw from the notice to treat, offering to pay the plaintiff's costs of suit up to that date; but they declined the offer, and insisted on an answer, which was filed. The bill was then amended, and, as amended, prayed for a declaration that the company was bound to take the whole manufactory:—Held, that notice of its intention to apply for the appointment of a surveyor did not amount to a binding contract by them to take the property; hence that they were at liberty to withdraw their notice to treat; and specific performance as prayed by the amended bill was refused. Grierson v. Cheshire Lines Committee, 44 L. J., Ch. 35; L. R. 19 Eq. 83; 31 L. T. 428; 23 W. R. 68.

Compelling Proceedings to ascertain Value.]—A railway company gave to the plaintiffs a notice to treat for the purchase of a portion of a piece of land: and the plaintiffs gave the company a counter-notice to take the whole. The company paid into court the value of the portion of the piece of land described in its notice to treat, gave to the plaintiffs the usual bond for the amount, and went into possession of the portion. In a suit for a declaration that the company was bound to purchase the whole of the premises comprised in the counter-notice, and for an injunction, it was declared that the company was so bound, and an inquiry was directed as to title, reserving further consideration. The title having been found to be good, but the company not having gone into possession of the rest of the premises described in the counter-notice, or taken any further steps:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an order compelling the company forthwith to take all necessary and proper proceedings for the purpose of ascertaining the amount to be paid by them to the plaintiffs as the value of the premises. Marson v. L. C. & D. Ry., 38 L. J., Ch. 371; L. R. 7 Eq. 546; 20 L. T. 773.

—— Delay of Owner.]—A railway company having served upon a landowner notice to treat for a part of his premises, he served the company with a counter-notice, requiring them to take the whole of his premises. The company thereupon withdrew their notice to treat, and the landowner after lying by for three months, withdrew his counter-notice, and applied for a mandamus to compel the company to take the part according to their original notice:—Held, that he had lain by for an unreasonable time, and that the writ must be refused. Quicke, Ex parte, 12 L. T. 580; 13 W. R. 924.

Notice before summoning Jury.] — After a notice to take part of a manufactory, and a counter-notice under s. 92, it is not necessary that there should be a formal notice by the company, under s. 18, before summoning a jury under s. 23; but, under s. 21, the company must give a reasonable opportunity to the landowner to agree with them before causing a jury to be summoned. Schwinge v. London and Blackwall Ry., 3 Sm. & G. 30; 3 Eq. R. 536; 24 L. J., Ch. 405; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 368; 3 W. R. 260.

Semble, that the term of twenty-one days mentioned in s. 21, and included in the original notice, does not apply to the case of a notice, given under s. 92, to take the whole of the property. Ib.

Entry—Amount of Deposit.]—The plaintiff was the lessee of two semi-detached villas under one continuous roof. The party wall between them was only carried up to the ceilings of the bedrooms, so that the space between those ceilings and the roof formed one continuous space, through which a person might creep from one end of the roof to the other, but with this exception, there was no internal communication between the two villas. The party wall was so ineffective that if one of the villas was to be pulled down, the other villa would become uninhabitable. Each villa had its own distinct garden. A railway company, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, gave notice to treat for a strip of the garden of one of the villas, and received a counter notice requiring them to take the two villas. The company deposited only the assessed value of the strip of garden comprised in their notice to treat. The plaintiff filed a bill to compel the company to take the two villas, and thereupon they agreed to take the whole of one of the villas:—Held, that the company was right in proceeding on their own notice, and not depositing the value of the two villas, as the counter-notice was not good, and that the bill must be dismissed with costs. Harvie v. South Devon Ry., 32 L. T. 1; 23 W. R. 202.

Right of Company to Assess Value of whole.]—A railway company, having obtained an act of parliament authorising them to widen their line of railway, gave notice, in July, 1853, to the proprietors of a manufactory which lay at each side of the railway (passing through on arches) of their intention to widen the railway by means of beams not resting in any manner upon the land belonging to the manufactory, and that they were willing to treat for the purchase of the right or easement (a stratum of air over the land belonging to the manufactory). That notice was given only three days before the expiration of the compulsory powers. Immediately upon the receipt of that notice the owners gave a counter-notice, under s. 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, requiring the company to purchase the whole manufactory. Nothing was done on these notices until May, 1854, when the company gave the owners notice of their intention to summon a jury to assess the amount to be paid for the easement. Thereupon the landowners filed their bill for an injunction, which was granted, restraining the company from proceeding on their notice unless and until the company would purchase the manufactory, the plaintiffs undertaking to sell and make a good title thereto. The company then abandoned their first notice, and gave notice of their intention to summon a jury to assess the value of the whole manufactory:—Held, that by the owners having given their counter-notice to the company to take the whole manufactory, an equity was created in favour of the company's right to give their last notice. Pinchin v. London and Blackwall Ry., 5 De G. M. & G. 851; 24 L. J., Ch. 417; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 241; 3 Eq. R. 433; 3 W. R. 125.

Bad Counter Notice—Acceptance by Company's Solicitor — Authority to bind Company.]—A railway company served the plaintiff with notice to treat for the purchase of certain property, and the plaintiff served the company with a counter-notice requiring them to take certain other property as well as that comprised in the notice to treat. The solicitors of the company wrote accepting the counter-notice, but the company afterwards insisted on their right to take only the property comprised in the notice to treat. It having been found as a fact that the properties were separate and distinct, and that therefore the counter-notice was bad:—Held, that the acceptance of the bad counter-notice by the solicitors could not bind the company to take land which they were not otherwise compellable to take. Treadwell v. L. & S. W. Ry., 54 L. J., Ch. 565; 51 L. T. 894; 33 W. R. 272.

Abandonment of Notice.]—A company on receiving a counter-notice to take the whole of certain premises cannot be deprived of their right to abandon their notice to treat. Morrison v. G. E. Ry., 53 L. T. 384. S. P., Grierson v. Cheshire Lines Committee, 44 L. J., Ch. 35; L. R. 19 Eq. 83; 31 L. T. 428; 23 W. R. 68. King v. Wycombe Ry., 28 Beav. 104; 29 L. J., Ch. 462; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 2 L. T. 107.

e. Lands Omitted by Mistake (s. 124).

What is "Mistake."]—A corporation was empowered by special acts, which embodied the Lands Clauses Act, to construct waterworks and to take certain lands belonging to A. and B., the boundary between which was improperly described in their plans and books of reference. In consideration of B.'s withdrawing his opposition to its bill in committee, they agreed to settle the value of the land required from, and the compensation due to him, by arbitration under the above act, and to fix the exact quantity of land within six months after the passing of the bill. In the proceedings under the reference to arbitration, the mistake of the boundary was pointed out; but the award fixed a value, in terms only, for the land within the boundary so inaccurately delineated, and the corporation took that land accordingly, leaving between it and the true boundary line a narrow strip of land belonging to B., but which the corporation had agreed to purchase from A. as part of his land, and for which they paid a sum of money to A., and of which they took possession as part of the land purchased from A. B. recovered the strip of land afterwards from the corporation in ejectment, and a rule for a new trial was refused. The corporation thereupon proceeded, within six months from such refusal, to make themselves legal owners of the strip of land in question under the compulsory powers given in case of mistake by s. 124 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. B. filed a bill for an injunction to restrain them from so doing, which, upon motion, was refused with costs :—Held, that the circumstances amounted to mistake within the meaning of s. 124. Held, also, that that section applied to land altogether omitted to be purchased, by mistake, as well as to an outstanding interest therein so omitted to be purchased. Hyde v. Manchester Corporation, 16 Jur. 180.

A railway company in 1856 took possession of a meadow, a large part of which belonged to one owner, and a small part to another who did not know the position or the exact extent of his land. The company, in 1859, took a conveyance of the large part, on which conveyance the extent of the small part was stated. The company did not pay for the small part, and the owner, in 1868, brought an ejectment against the company, obtained judgment, and was put into possession. His possession was disturbed by the company, and he filed a bill to restrain them. The company offered to pay the value of the land as in 1856, and interest thereon, which the landowner refused. The company then produced a notice to treat, given in 1856, and gave notice of their intention to proceed under that notice. The landowner filed a second bill to restrain them :—Held, that under the circumstances there had been no mistake or inadvertence so as to bring the case under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 124. Stretton v. Great Western and Brentford Ry., 40 L. J., Ch. 50 ; L. R. 5 Ch. 751 ; 23 L. T. 379 ; 18 W. R. 1078.

A railway company, requiring possession of land which was subject to an equitable mortgage by deposit, proceeded to pay into court the amount of a valuation, and to enter into the usual bonds with the landowner and the equitable mortgagees. It afterwards assessed the purchase-money and compensation before a jury, as between themselves and the landowner, without giving notice to the mortgagees, who, however, were aware of, though they took no part in, the inquiry. The amount fixed by the jury was not enough to pay the mortgagees their debt, and was, moreover, less than the sum paid into court by the company. The mortgagees then filed a bill against the company and the landowner :—Held, that the company was not, under the circumstances, entitled to proceed under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 124, which provides for the purchase of interests, omitted to be purchased by mistake or inadvertence. Martin v. L. C. & D. Ry., 35 L. J., Ch. 795 ; L. R. 1 Ch. 501 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 775 ; 14 L. T. 814 ; 14 W. R. 880.

Effect of s. 124.]—Semble, that the true effect of s. 124 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is not to prevent a claimant from bringing ejectment to establish his title, but merely to authorise the court to stay execution upon the judgment, when obtained. Salisbury (Marquis) v. G. N. Ry., 5 C. B. (N.S.) 174 ; 28 L. J., C. P. 40 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 70 ; 7 W. R. 75.

A railway company, in July, 1858, entered upon lands of which the mortgagor had been in possession ; and although the purchase-money was not paid to him, the parties were treating for arrangement, and the entry was with the knowledge and consent of the mortgagor. A mortgagee in fee of those lands subsequently gave notice of his interest, but the mortgage was not known by the company to exist until his attorney, having discovered the entry by the company, sent a letter in August, 1859, to their attorney, asserting his rights. A correspondence ensued, in which the mortgagee gave no information of his title, and the company did not dispute his title, but asked for a short delay while their legal advisers were absent from London. In October the mortgagee brought ejectment :—Held, that ejectment could not be maintained, inasmuch as the title not being in dispute, s. 124, gave the company a right of possession for six months after notice of his claim. Jolly v. Wimbledon and Dorking Ry., 1 B. & S. 807 ; 31 L. J., Q. B. 95 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1037 ; 5 L. T. 615 ; 10 W. R. 253—Ex. Ch.

Omission—Intermediate Lessees.]—The Railways Clauses Act, 1845, s. 7, providing a mode of correcting "any omission, misstatement or erroneous description of any lands described on the plans or books of reference," is intended to meet the case of any omission of land in the plan, or of description of any owner of it in the book of reference, or the omission of the number, or the misstatement of the acreage, or a mistake in the names of the owners, &c., as from an error in copying or the like ; but the section was not intended to apply to the case of the names of intermediate lessees for a long term being entirely omitted from the book of reference. Kemp v. West End and Crystal Palace Ry., 1 Kay & J. 681 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1012 ; 3 W. R. 607.

Costs.]—"Full costs and expenses" of any proceedings at law or in equity, mentioned in s. 126 of the Lands Clauses Act, which the promoters are to pay in respect of any litigation for taking the lands therein mentioned, mean costs as between attorney and client. Hyde v. Manchester Corporation, 12 C. B. 475.

f. By Companies with Conflicting Powers.

Rights arising.]—A railway company having acquired a legal right to and possession of land, and constructed their railway over the same, under the provisions of their act, another railway company, to whom the legislature had given power to purchase the same land for the purposes of their undertaking, was restrained by injunction from exercising such power pending the trial of the legal question of the effect of such conflicting powers. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Ry. v. G. N. Ry., 9 Hare, 284.

A railway company had power to make and maintain the railway and works on the line and upon the lands delineated in the parliamentary plan, and described in the books of reference, and to enter upon, take, and use the said lands, or such of them as should be necessary for that purpose, but they were not to enter upon, take, or use any of the land or property of a certain pre-existing railway company, or in any manner to alter, vary, or interfere with that railway, or any of the works appertaining thereto, save only for the purpose of effecting the junction thereby authorised, in manner in the said act authorised, and not otherwise, one of the clauses of the act giving certain powers to the company for effecting a junction with the pre-existing railway :—Held, that there being nothing to shew that it was absolutely necessary for the company to take, as owner, certain lands which the line of the pre-existing railway actually passed, in order to effect the junction, it had no power to do so, but there was a right to enter upon such land by way of easement for the purpose of effecting the junction. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry. v. South Staffordshire Ry., 1 Drew. 255 ; 1 W. R. 75.

The defendants, a railway company, were by their act restrained from interfering with the plaintiffs, and other railway companies previously established, except as to the compulsory purchase of lands within certain limits. The plaintiffs had power, by their act, to take some lands compulsorily and others by consent. The defendants had power to take certain lands, part of which had been purchased by plaintiffs' consent subsequently to the defendants' act :—Held, that the plaintiffs, having occupied the ground before the defendants, were entitled to hold so much of it as was not actually wanted for the formation of the defendants' railway, and an injunction was granted. Lancaster and Carlisle Ry. v. Maryport and Carlisle Ry., 4 Railw. Cas. 504.

It is not competent to a later railway company, in the absence of a power for that purpose given in express terms by their special act, to require compulsorily the soil and freehold in lands already vested in, and actually used by, an earlier railway company for the purposes of their undertaking, although the land lies within the limits of deviation shewn by the parliamentary plans of the later company, and the special act confers upon them the general power to enter and take such of the lands delineated upon the plans as may be required for the purposes of their railway. Dublin and Drogheda Ry. v. Navan and Kingscourt Ry., Ir. R. 5 Eq. 393.

The words in the Railways Clauses Act, 1863, s. 10—"unless otherwise provided in the special act"—are not satisfied by anything less than an express and definite provision in the special act authorising the compulsory purchase of land already vested in, and actually used by, another railway company for the purposes of their undertaking. Ib.

The words in the Railways Clauses Act, 1863, s. 10—"for the purposes of the junction"—are not be confined to the actual union of the lines, but include the formation of all works necessary for effecting the junction. Ib.

Where both the plaintiff and defendant companies had parliamentary powers to take the same land, and each had given notice to treat, without more, but the landowner had not come to an agreement with either company, nor had any other step required by the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, been taken :—Held, that assuming parliament to have given a preference to the plaintiff company, the court would not, after the plaintiff company's powers had expired, restrain the defendant company by interlocutory injunction from entering and commencing works on the land. Bristol and North Somerset Ry. v. Somerset and Dorset Ry., 22 W. R. 601—L.JJ.

Held, also, that the plaintiff company, in taking possession without an agreement, and without taking the steps required by the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, were transpassers ; and that their act of parliament did not apply till they had got a title. Ib.

The South Wales Company having power to take and purchase lands, and to construct a railway according to the plans and books of reference deposited, gave notice to the Llanelly Railway and Dock Company that the South Wales Company required to purchase a small piece of land on part of which the Llanelly Railway was actually constructed, such piece of land being set out in the plans and books of reference as part of the proposed line of the South Wales Railway, but they afterwards refused to issue their warrant to the sheriff to assess the amount of purchase-money on the ground that the Llanelly Railway and Dock Company had no power under their act to sell any portion of land on which their railway was constructed :—Held, that as there was no express clause in any special or general act of parliament which authorised either the Llanelly Railway and Dock Company to sell any part of their actual line of railway, or the South Wales Company to purchase it, the authority was not to be implied from the general power given to the South Wales Company to make their line, and to purchase lands according to their deposited plans and books of reference. Reg. v. South Wales Ry., 14 Q. B. 902 ; 6 Railw. Cas. 489 ; 19 L. J., Q. B. 272 ; 14 Jur. 828.

g. Intersected Lands.

What are.]—The word "such" in s. 94 is not confined to "lands not being situate in a town," as described in s. 93, but applies to the words in the general heading, "small portions of intersected lands." Eastern Counties Ry. v. Marriage, 9 H. L. Cas. 32 ; 31 L. J., Ex. 73 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 53 ; 3 L. T. 60 ; 8 W. R. 748.

A railway company, in making their line, cut off a small portion of the land of A., not situate in a town, and he required them to make a communication between the severed parts :—Held, that the operation of s. 94 was not confined to lands not situate in a town, or not built upon, but applied also to land situate in a town, and that therefore the company could compel A. to sell the severed parts of his land, and was not bound to make the communication required. Ib.

"Town."]—Where premises were within the municipal boundaries of a town, but not surrounded by houses :—Held, that they were not in a town within the meaning of s. 93. Falkner v. Somerset and Dorset Ry., 42 L. J., Ch. 851 ; L. R. 16 Eq. 458.

Tunnel.]—A piece of land two and a half acres in extent, with a small cottage built upon it, was occupied by a market gardener and used for the purposes of trade ; a company ran its tunnel under the house, and so that the line of the tunnel severed a portion of the land from the rest :—Held, that the owner of the land was not entitled, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 92, to compel the company to take the whole of the land, but that he was entitled to compel it to take the whole cottage, with so much of the land as was used for ornament or otherwise in immediate connection with the cottage, and also the severed portion of the land, notwithstanding that the tunnel did not interfere with access. Falkner v. Somerset and Dorset Ry., 42 L. J., Ch. 851 ; L. R. 16 Eq. 458.

h. Charity Lands.

Where a railway company under its compulsory powers had taken a certain house belonging to a city ward :—Declared, on adjourned summons, that neither the consent of the charity commissioners nor of the lords of the treasury was necessary, and that it was not necessary for the sale to be completed under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts, 1845, 1860, and 1869. Finnis to Forbes, Finnis, Ex parte, 24 Ch. D. 587; 48 L. T. 813; 32 W. R. 55.

Where a railway company under its compulsory powers took a certain house belonging to a charity school:—Held, that being supported by voluntary contributions the school came within the exemptions of s. 62 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, and s. 48 of the act of 1855; that the consent of the charity commissioners was not necessary, and that it was not necessary that the sale should be completed under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts, 1845, 1860, and 1869. Finnis to Forbes, Tower Ward Schools Trustees, Ex parte, 24 Ch. D. 591; 48 L. T. 814; 32 W. R. 55.

Payment of Purchase Money to Persons absolutely entitled.]—See post, col. 1406.

i. Lands belonging to Lunatics.

Lunatic not so found—Real or Personal Representatives.]—Sect. 7 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, does not authorise a person of unsound mind to sell land to a company or public body who have statutory power to take it; the section only authorises the committee of a lunatic to sell. A public body having given notice under their statutory powers to take land belonging to a lady of unsound mind not so found, the value of the land was ascertained by two surveyors, one appointed by an uncle of the lady, who purported to act on her behalf, and the other by the public body; the sum thus ascertained was paid into court, and the public body took possession of the land. The lady afterwards died intestate, being still of unsound mind, and her heir-at-law petitioned for payment of the money to him:—Held, that the land had never been converted into personalty, and that the heir was entitled to the money. Flamank, Ex parte (1 Sim. (N.S.) 260), dissented from. Tugwell, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 1006; 27 Ch. D. 309; 51 L. T. 83; 33 W. R. 132.

Money paid into court by a railway company for land taken under the Lands Clauses Act, from a person who was in a state of mental imbecility, and who continued in that state until his death, but was not the subject of a commission of lunacy, ordered, after his death, not to be reinvested in or considered as land, but to be paid to his executors. Flamank, Ex parte, East Lincolnshire Ry., In re, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 260.

Investment of Money.]—The purchase-money of a lunatic's land taken by a public body under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 69, was, under the circumstances, ordered to be invested in guaranteed railway stock; but the name of the public body was directed to be omitted from the title of the account, an investment of this nature being treated as equivalent to a reinvestment in land. Buckingham, In re, 2 Ch. D. 690—C. A.

Release of Rent-Charge—Annuity.]—Lands which were subject to a rent-charge in favour of a lunatic during his life were taken by a corporation acting under the Lands Clauses Act. The court authorised the committee of the lunatic to release the lands from the rent-charge upon the corporation purchasing in the name of the lunatic a government annuity of the same yearly amount for his life. Brewer, In re, 1 Ch. D. 409; 34 L. T. 466; 24 W. R. 465—C. A.

Payment to Credit of Lunatic.]—Land belonging to a lunatic having been purchased by a railway company under the powers of its act, an order was made for payment of the purchase-money to the credit of the lunacy, and for its investment to the joint account of the lunatic and the company, without its being first paid into court, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 69. Milnes, In re, 1 Ch. D. 28; 34 L. T. 46; 24 W. R. 98—C. A.

The application for such an order must not be made in the Lunacy only, but also in the Chancery Division. Ib.

——Appointment of New Committee—Payment of Dividends.]—The dividends arising from a sum of stock in court, to the credit of H. D. R., a lunatic, ex parte the Metropolitan Board, which represented the purchase-money of land belonging to the lunatic taken by the board under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, were ordered to be paid to the joint committees of the estate of the lunatic. Upon the death of one of the joint committees the survivor was appointed sole committee, but the master declined to order the dividends to be paid to him, and a petition intituled in Lunacy and in the Chancery Division was presented for that purpose:—Held, that the dividends ought to be transferred to the lunacy and paid to the committee, and that upon the appointment of a new committee the order appointing him ought to direct payment to him of the dividends, and that the Metropolitan Board need not be served with the application, and that the board ought to pay the costs of the petition. Ryder, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 459; 37 Ch. D. 595; 58 L. T. 783—C. A.

4. Time for Purchase.

Where no Time Specified.]—When a special act contained no clause limiting the time for purchase of land for the accommodation works of a railway company:—Held, that the period of three years, specified in s. 123 of the Lands Clauses Act, applied. Seymour v. L. & S. W. Ry., 5 Jur. (N.S.) 753.

Where an act of parliament creates a company for the execution of certain works, but does not specify any time for their completion, no limitation of time will be presumed, and the works may be completed at any period. Thicknesse v. Lancaster Canal Co., 4 M. & W. 472; 8 L. J., Ex. 49.

The powers for the compulsory purchase and taking of lands referred to in s. 123 of the Lands Clauses Act are powers given to the several promoters of the several special acts in which that act might be incorporated, and not several powers given to the promoters of each special act. Sparrow v. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry., 9 Hare, 436. And see S. C., 2 De G. M. & G. 94; 21 L. J., Ch. 731; 16 Jur. 703.

Sect. 123 of the Lands Clauses Act refers to the powers given by the act for the purchase and taking of land, and not to the powers thereby given for carrying into effect a purchase already made. Ib.

Cambridge Commissioners.]—The commissioners appointed under the local acts of parliament for improving the town of Cambridge have, upon the true construction of those acts.

a continuing right to exercise from time to time the power thereby vested in them, of taking property for the purposes of the acts, and of referring the assessment of the price to a jury, so long as may be required for carrying into full effect the purposes contemplated by the acts. Salman v. Randall, 3 Myl. & C. 439.

Extension of Time by subsequent Acts.]—By a local act of 1863, a board of health was authorised to construct waterworks, and purchase and establish markets, and to exercise compulsory powers for the purchase of land for those purposes. These compulsory powers expired on the 13th of July, 1870, and on the 1st of August, 1870, a second act was passed to extend the time for the compulsory purchase of lands and completion of the waterworks, and to authorise the board to construct gasworks, and for other purposes, not including the establishing of markets. On motion by the owner of property required for establishing a market to restrain the board from compulsorily taking the property under a notice to treat served on him in December, 1870, on the ground that the powers of the first act had ceased to exist and could not be extended, and that the second act must be read as creating new powers for the purposes of the second act only:—Held, that the powers were extended as well as the time for their exercise, and that the notice to treat was effectual. Bentley v. Rotherham Local Board, 46 L. J., Ch. 284; 4 Ch. D. 588.

A railway company, incorporated by an act of parliament which passed on the 29th July, 1864, limiting the time for the exercise of the compulsory powers to three years, and the time for the completion of the railway to five years, served a notice to treat for lands belonging to the plaintiff company on the 21st April, 1866. By an act of parliament of the 26th July, 1869 (against which the plaintiff company petitioned), the railway company was dissolved, and its undertaking was amalgamated with that of the defendant company, and by the same act the time for completing the works was extended for three years; but the period within which the compulsory powers given by the first act were to be exercised was not extended. On the 18th August, 1871, the defendant company took possession of the lands, whereupon the landowners filed a bill to restrain them from continuing in possession:—Held, that the time for completion of the works having been extended by the act of 1869 (of which the plaintiff company had notice to the 29th July, 1872), the notice to treat was not invalidated by lapse of time. Ystalyfera Iron Co. v. Neath and Brecon Ry., 43 L. J., Ch. 476; L. R. 17 Eq. 142; 29 L. T. 662; 22 W. R. 149.

The time within which a railway company were authorised to take lands expired on the 4th of August, 1848. Long before this period they gave notice to a landowner to treat, and afterwards delivered to the plaintiff, to whom the lands had been in the meantime devised, a bond, and paid the estimated value of the lands comprised in the notice into the bank under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 85. Under an amendment act, the powers of which extended beyond 1848, the company were authorised to take the land included in the notice; and on August 3rd, 1848, they gave a notice to the plaintiff that, in pursuance of the powers of both those acts, they intended to take the lands. After the 4th of August, 1848, but without taking any further steps under the acts, the company entered upon the land. On a motion for an injunction, the court declined to interfere, on the ground that, although the company might not be then entitled to take possession under their compulsory powers, they were able, by some proceedings under the second act, to obtain the land; and the motion was ordered to stand over, with liberty to the plaintiff to bring an action. Williams v. South Wales Ry., 3 De G. & Sm. 354; 13 Jur. 443.

A railway company were empowered to take lands, and to deviate to the extent of 100 yards from the line laid down in their map, provided such deviation was made before the 4th of July, 1838. In January, 1837, a deviation in the line, within the prescribed limits, was made. A subsequent act, passed in May, 1837, enacted that the time by the first act limited for the compulsory purchase of lands should be enlarged for the term of one year, but providing that no deviation from the line laid down should be made after the expiration of the period by the first act limited. The railway company, subsequently to the 4th of July, 1838, gave notice to certain owners of lands on the line to which they had deviated in January, 1837, of their intention to take the lands under the powers given by the acts. On a motion for an injunction to restrain the railway company from so proceeding to obtain possession, on the ground that the company, having allowed the time limited by the first act to expire, had no power to take the lands by the compulsory process:—Held, that the company having, previously to the expiration of the time limited by the first act, and previously also to the passing of the second act, deviated within the authorised limits from the line laid down in the map, the second act must be construed to give them an enlarged period of one year in which to exercise the power of taking the land in the line to which they had so deviated. Dun River Navigation Co. v. North Midland Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 135.

Agreement to purchase Lands.]—An agreement between a railway company and landowner provided that in case the company should require additional land for the purpose of their railway and works, they should pay for it at the rate of 200*l.* per acre, without further payment in respect of severance or other damages:—Held, that the company was thereby authorised to take land for the purpose of diverting a footway within the time for completing their works, which had not expired although the time for compulsory taking of land had expired. Rangeley v. Midland Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 313; L. R. 3 Ch. 306; 18 L. T. 69; 16 W. R. 547.

A landowner agreed with a railway company to sell them ten acres of land and one acre for a station, at a certain price, and that if the company should require more land for the station, or for any purpose, they should pay for the same at the rate of 100*l.* per acre, and the agreement was to be supplemental to the Lands Clauses Act. The ten acres were paid for and conveyed. Before the compulsory powers of the company had expired they gave (apparently by mistake) notice to treat for three acres more, and before the time for completion expired they took possession of these three acres, alleging that they required the land. They also took possession of some small pieces of land which were covered by earth slipped from the railway:—Held, that, under the agreement, the company had power, until the expiration of the time limited for the completion of the railway, to take such land as they required for the purpose of a station or for slips of earth at 100*l.* an acre. Kemp v. S. E. Ry., 41 L. J., Ch. 404; L. R. 7 Ch. 364; 26 L. T. 110; 20 W. R. 306.

Companies having compulsory powers of purchase cannot contract to purchase lands and insist on a custom to defer completion to the extreme period of time allowed for taking lands and for completing the works. No such custom exists, and they are bound to complete their contract within a reasonable time. Baker v. Metropolitan Ry., 31 Beav. 504; 32 L. J., Ch. 7; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 61; 7 L. T. 494; 11 W. R. 18.

Possession taken—Notice to Treat.]—A railway company in 1856 took possession of a meadow, a large part of which belonged to one owner, and a small part to another who did not know the position or the exact extent of his land. The company, in 1859, took a conveyance of the large part, on which conveyance the extent of the small part was stated. The company did not pay for the small part, and the owner, in 1868, brought an ejectment against the company, obtained judgment, and was put into possession. His possession was disturbed by the company, and he filed a bill to restrain them. The company offered to pay the value of the land, as in 1856, and interest thereon, which the landowner refused. The company then produced a notice to treat, given in 1856, and gave notice of their intention to proceed under that notice. The landowner filed a second bill to restrain them:—Held, that under the circumstances the company was not entitled to proceed under the notice to treat. Stretton v. Great Western and Brentford Ry., L. R. 5 Ch. 751; 23 L. T. 379; 18 W. R. 1078.

Compulsory Powers shortly Expiring—Notice to Treat given within Time limited.]—A railway company served a landowner with notice to treat for part of his property before the period of three years limited for the exercise of its compulsory powers had expired. The landowner served a counter-notice requiring the company to take the whole property, and nothing further was done towards ascertaining the compensation. Thirteen days before the expiration of the period of five years allowed for the completion of the works, the company entered upon the land under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, having previously made a deposit and given a bond as required by that section. After the five years had expired without the railway having been made on the land, the landowner brought his action for an injunction to restrain the company from executing works on the land and from continuing in possession of it:—Held, that whether the railway could or could not have been completed within the thirteen days, the entry of the company under s. 85 was lawful, and that they were entitled to retain possession, and that the compensation must be assessed under s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act; that the company could not be restrained by injunction, but were entitled to remain and complete the railway after the expiration of the five years. Loosemoore v. Tiverton and North Devon Ry., 53 L. J., Ch. 812: 9 App. Cas. 480; 50 L. T. 637; 32 W. R. 929—H. L. (E.)

By an act of parliament, with which the Lands Clauses Act was incorporated, it was enacted that the power of taking land compulsorily for the purpose of making a certain railway should not be exercised after the expiration of three years from the period of the passing of the act. The company gave notice to a landowner of their intention to take a part of his land; but took no other step until three days before the expiration of their compulsory powers, when they delivered a bond, and proceeded to take possession under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act. The landowner thereupon filed his bill, praying an injunction to restrain the company from proceeding further with the purchase, on the ground that their compulsory powers had ceased. The vice-chancellor directed the interim injunction, but directed a case for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer. Kinnersly v. North Staffordshire Ry., 6 Railw. Cas. 662.

A railway company having given notice of their intention to purchase lands for the undertaking, deposited the purchase-money and delivered the bond (according to the provisions of s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act) before the expiration of the period prescribed for the exercise of their compulsory powers, neither their power to purchase the land, nor their power to enter, is gone by the subsequent expiration of that period. Sparrow v. Oxford, Worcester and Wolverhampton Ry., 9 Hare, 436. And see S. C., 2 De G. M. & G. 94; 21 L. J., Ch. 731; 16 Jur. 703.

On an application for a mandamus against a railway company by a landowner over whose land the line was authorised to be made, but to whom no notice had been given by the company requiring his land to complete the line, and to purchase the necessary land for that purpose:—Held, that it was no answer to the rule, that the prescribed period for the compulsory purchase of the necessary land had nearly expired, if there was still a period during which the company might take the requisite initiatory steps. Reg. v. York, Newcastle and Berwick Ry., 6 Railw. Cas. 648; 16 Q. B. 886; 20 L. J., Q. B. 503. S. P., Reg. v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., 6 Railw. Cas. 654; 20 L. J., Q. B. 507, n.

Notice within Time limited—Other steps after Expiration.]—Where within the prescribed period the promoters of a company gave notice to a landowner on the intended line of railway that they required to purchase his lands, and the landowner served them with a notice to treat, and demanded that the amount of compensation should be settled by a jury, and no further steps were taken to complete the purchase until after the expiration of the period prescribed for the exercise of the powers of the company for the compulsory purchase of lands:—Held, that the company might, on the application of the landowner, notwithstanding the lapse of time, be compelled by mandamus to issue their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury to assess the amount of compensation. Birmingham and Oxford Junction Ry. v. Reg., 15 Q. B. 647, n.; 20 L. J., Q. B. 304—Ex. Ch.

If, within the period prescribed by their special act for the exercise of all the powers of compulsory purchase given to them by the Lands Clauses Act, a company gives notice to a landowner that his land is required for the purpose of the undertaking, they have exercised within the prescribed period all the powers of compulsory purchase given them by that act, and they may, after the expiration of the prescribed period, take all the other steps necessary to complete their purchase, and may enter upon and take possession of the land. Salisbury (Marquis) v. G. N. Ry., 17 Q. B. 840; 21 L. J., Q. B. 185; 16 Jur. 740.

The entry on the land is not the exercise of any of the powers of compulsory purchase, but the exercise of a power for carrying that purchase into effect. Ib.

On an application for an injunction to restrain a railway company from taking proceedings to summon a jury, under the compulsory clauses of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the court thought that the plaintiff would have been entitled to an injunction but for the circumstance that the time limited for the exercise of the compulsory powers was on the point of expiring; but that the doubt as to the validity of such proceedings after that period, although the usual notice had been given of the intention of the company to take the land, was sufficient ground for declining to grant the injunction, on the company undertaking not to act on the result of the jury process without the leave of the court, and bringing into court 200*l.* to answer the plaintiff's costs and charges by reason of the process, without prejudice to any question. Wood v. North Staffordshire Ry., 3 De G. & Sm. 368.

The time allowed to a railway company for the exercise of their power to take lands was three years from the passing of their act. During that time they gave the plaintiff notice of their intention to take his lands, and summoned a jury to assess the value of them; but the three years expired before the jury gave their verdict, and on that account the vice-chancellor held, that the company were not entitled to take steps for obtaining possession of the plaintiff's lands; but the Lord Chancellor did not agree with his honour, and directed the opinion of a court of law to be taken on the point. Brocklebank v. Whitehaven Junction Ry., 15 Sim. 632; 5 Railw. Cas. 373; 16 L. J., Ch. 471; 11 Jur. 663.

Arbitration after Period Expired.]—Where the time limited for making a line had expired, and where consequently the powers of the company under their act had expired:—Held, that the company could not be called upon to enter into an arbitration under a contract which had assumed them to be in full possession of their authority. Scottish North Eastern Ry. v. Stewart, 3 Macq. H. L. 382; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 607; 7 W. R. 458.

Proceedings by Attorney-General.] — The attorney-general may properly take proceedings on behalf of the public, when acts tending to the injury of the public are being done without lawful authority, even though no evidence be produced of actual injury having been inflicted. After the expiration of the parliamentary powers of a bridge company the company continued to carry on their operations on and off their own lands, intending to apply for a new act to revive and extend the powers conferred by their original act. An action having been commenced by the attorney-general, on the information of two of the shareholders, for the purpose of restraining the company from proceeding with their works without due authority, and from using the moneys of the company for such works, or for other unauthorised purposes, the company obtained their new act, and the plaintiffs thereupon obtained leave to discontinue so much of their claim as related to matters other than the claim to have the company restrained, before the passing of the new act, from executing works off their own lands. The action being brought to a hearing:—Held, that the action was justifiably commenced, and that the company must pay the costs of the action, other than those relating to the part of it which had been discontinued. Att.-Gen. v. Shrewsbury (Kingsland) Bridge Co., 51 L. J., Ch. 746; 21 Ch. D. 752; 46 L. T. 687; 30 W. R. 916.

5. Subscription of Capital.

Certificate of Justices.]—A certificate of two justices under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 17, or of one police magistrate under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 14, that the capital of a company is all subscribed, being made sufficient evidence by the Lands Clauses Act, is conclusive on all landowners with whom the company deals, unless it is proved to have been obtained by fraud. Ystalyfera Iron Co. v. Neath and Brecon Ry., 43 L. J., Ch. 476; L. R. 17 Eq. 142; 29 L. T. 662; 22 W. R. 149.

Sects. 16 and 17 of the Lands Clauses Act, requiring the whole capital to be subscribed and a certificate obtained from justices to that effect before proceeding to take lands compulsorily, do not apply to a case of a branch railway authorised to be made by an already existing company. Weld v. L. & S. W. Ry., 32 Beav. 340; 1 N. R. 415; 33 L. J., Ch. 142; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 510; 8 L. T. 13; 11 W. R. 448.

Assessment of Compensation.]—It is no answer to an action against a railway company for not issuing their warrant for the assessment of compensation for land which they have given notice of their intention to purchase, that the undertaking was intended to be carried into effect by means of a certain capital, and that the whole amount has not been subscribed, as required by s. 16—the notice to treat not necessarily being an exercise of the powers of the act "in relation to the compulsory taking of land." Guest v. Poole and Bournemouth Ry., 39 L. J., C. P. 329; L. R. 5 C. P. 553; 22 L. T. 589; 18 W. R. 836.

The inquisition of a jury is sufficient in form, though it does not set out that the whole capital has been subscribed. In an ejectment by the landowner against the company, this fact must be pleaded by the plaintiff. Doe d. Payne v. Bristol and Exeter Ry., 6 M. & W. 320; 9 L. J., Ex. 232.

Right to cross Line of another Company.]—By the act incorporating the S. Railway Company the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, except where expressly varied thereby, was incorporated therewith, and it was enacted that the words to which meanings were assigned by the Lands Clauses Act should in the special act have the same meanings unless there was something in the subject or context repugnant thereto. The S. Company, "subject to the provisions of this act," were empowered to purchase any of the lands in their deposited plans. By s. 8, which was inserted for the protection of the G. W. Railway Company, it was provided (sub-s. 1) that the S. Company should not enter upon or interfere with or execute any work over or under the line of the G. W. railway until plans had been approved by the engineer of the G. W. Company or an engineer appointed by the Board of Trade. Sub.-s. 2 provided that the railway of the S. Company should be carried in one place over and in another under the G. W. railway by a bridge and tunnel. By sub-s. 4, the bridge and tunnel were to belong to the G. W. Company. By sub-s. 8 the S. Company were not to interfere with the land of the G. W. Company except for the purposes of the above crossings, and it was enacted that the S. Company should not purchase or take any land of the G. W. company, but that the S. Company might purchase and the G. W. Company should grant an easement or right of using the crossings in perpetuity. By sub-s. 9 every dispute between the two companies respecting the above matters or any of them was to be referred to arbitration. The S. Company were proceeding to make the crossings, and the G. W. Company brought their action to restrain them from doing so, on the ground that the capital of the S. Company had not been subscribed, and that under the 16th section of the Lands Clauses Act they could not proceed to put in force any of their powers for the compulsory purchase of land until it had been subscribed:—Held, that, as under their act the S. Company had the right of taking an easement over the land of the G. W. company, the word "land" in s. 16 of the Lands Clauses Act as incorporated in this act must be held to include this easement, and that the S. Company must be restrained from taking steps to acquire such easement until their capital had been subscribed. But held, on appeal, that as the provisions of the special act for referring disputes to arbitration provided a better means of ascertaining the compensation to be paid for crossing the line of the G. W. Company than the verdict of a jury, and the powers of the Lands Clauses Act as to compulsory purchase were therefore not necessary for the purpose of assessing the compensation, there was no necessity for giving to the word "land" in the Lands Clauses Act as incorporated with the special act a more extensive meaning than it had in the Lands Clauses Act standing alone, which did not include a new easement, that what the S. Company were proceeding to do was therefore not a compulsory taking of land within s. 16 of the Lands Clauses Act, and that the decision below could not be sustained. G. W. R. v. Swindon and Cheltenham Extension Ry., 52 L. J., Ch. 306; 22 Ch. D. 677; 47 L. T. 709; 31 W. R. 479—C. A. S. C., in H. L., 53 L. J., Ch. 1075; 9 App. Cas. 787; 51 L. T. 798; 32 W. R. 957; 48 J. P. 821.

6. Vendor's Title.

"Owner"—Who is.]—A railway company took possession of land under a contract for a sixty years' title. The vendor failed to shew more than a possessory title for thirty-six years:—Held, that he could not compel the company to deposit the purchase-money in the bank, under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 76. Douglas v. L. & N. W. Ry., 3 Kay & J. 173; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 181.

By the term "owner" in that section, the legislature meant a person having some title; and in providing for the event of an owner failing to make out a title to the satisfaction of the promoters of the undertaking, the legislature had in contemplation the possibility of the land being subject to dower or jointure, or some other independent estate or interest outstanding in a third party, who is under no legal or equitable obligation to concur in the sale, but which does not displace the owner's title. Ib.

A surviving partner selling partnership lands in discharge of his duty as survivor, to wind up the partnership, is an "owner," within s. 76; and by virtue of that section and s. 77, the promoters of an undertaking depositing the purchase-money in the bank to the credit of the vendor, and of the representatives of his deceased partner, would acquire all the estate and interest of both. Ib.

A person in possession, but shewing a bad title, is not the "owner," within s. 76, and where the lands are in such possession, and the true owner cannot be found, the promoters must have recourse to the jury clauses of the act. Ib.

The plaintiffs contracted to sell land to the defendants, but failed to make any title to a small strip thereof. Thereupon the defendants paid the purchase-money of the whole land into court under s. 76 of the Lands Clauses Act, and executed a deed-poll under s. 77, purporting to vest the whole of the land in themselves:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not "owners" of the strip of land with the meaning of ss. 76 and 77, and that under the circumstances the defendants could not acquire the land under those sections. Wells v. Chelmsford Local Board, 49 L. J., Ch. 827; 15 Ch. D. 108; 43 L. T. 378; 29 W. R. 381; 45 J. P. 6.

The "owner" of land taken by a railway company, for which compensation had been made by them, and the money paid into court in the usual way, must be the owner at the time when the land is so taken. Sunderland (Freemen), Ex parte, 1 Drew. 184; 16 Jur. 37.

Investigation of Title.]—When a railway company, without giving a landowner any notice to treat with him, takes his land under their compulsory powers, makes no subsequent agreement with him, but pays into court a deposit as security for duly-ascertained compensation-money, the parties are not in the position of ordinary vendor and purchaser; and the company cannot call upon the landowner to produce his title for their investigation. Martin v. L. C. & D. Ry., 17 L. T. 487.

The court will not, in a suit on the part of a landowner against a railway company for specific performance of an agreement to take lands, make a decree where there has been no investigation of title, but will refer it to chambers to see whether a good title can be made. Gunston v. East Gloucestershire Ry., 18 L. T. 8.

An act enacted, with reference to the purchase of lands by the company, that if the owner of any such lands should "fail to make out a title to the lands in respect whereof such purchase-money or compensation should be payable," the company should deposit the purchase-money in the bank; and that thereupon all interest in the lands in respect whereof such purchase-money should have been deposited should vest in the company:—Held, that, in order to enable the company to avail themselves of this provision, they must have previously applied to the owner of the lands to furnish them with an abstract of his title thereto. Hutchinson v. Manchester Ry., 2 Car. & K. 162; 15 M. & W. 687; 15 L. J., Ex. 293; 9 Jur. 949.

Declaration of Title—Jurisdiction of High Court.]—A., in possession of land under a building agreement, which required the houses to be erected by November, 1885, was in 1882 informed by a railway company of their intention to obtain a special act to extend their railway system, which scheme would affect his land. A. thereupon arranged with his landlord for an extension of the time limited by his agreement—no definite period being fixed—and suspended his building operations. The company obtained their special act in 1883, and in 1884 gave A. the usual notice to treat for part of the land comprised in his building agreement, but A. sent in no claim under the notice. In 1886 the company took adverse possession of the land in question, treating the building agreement as at an end, and insisting that A. had no interest whatever in the land. On action brought by A. against the company for a declaration that the building agreement was still subsisting, and that he was entitled to have his interest thereunder assessed in the usual way: —Held, that the jurisdiction of the court was not ousted by the procedure under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and that A. was entitled to the declaration he claimed. East and West India Docks Co. v. Gattke (3 Mac. & G. 155), and London and Blackwall Ry. v. Cross (31 Ch. D. 354), distinguished. Birmingham and District Land Co. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 40 Ch. D. 268; 60 L. T. 527—C. A. Affirming, 57 L. J., Ch. 121; 36 W. R. 414.

Ascertainment of Parties entitled.]—Where under private acts, &c., the court has jurisdiction to proceed in a summary way by petition, it is not usual, on directing a reference to ascertain the parties entitled, to direct the production of deeds and documents, and to examine the parties. London Dock Co., In re, 11 Beav. 78; 17 L. J., Ch. 111; 12 Jur. 405.

Semble, that where money is paid into court under the usual provision in a railway act for payment into court of the purchase-money for lands held by disputed titles, the respective interests of the parties claiming title to the money so paid into court may be adjusted on a petition presented in the matter of the act. Issanchard, Ex parte, 3 Y. & Coll. 721.

Where money is paid into court to the account of certain classes of persons, and one of those classes of persons petitions for payment out, the court cannot, without the consent of all parties, send the question, whether the claimants have the right they claim, to be tried by a jury or an arbitrator, but is bound to decide the question by its own machinery. Brandon v. Brandon, 2 Dr. & Sm. 305; 34 L. J., Ch. 333; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 30; 11 L. T. 658; 13 W. R. 251.

Where, in such a case, the claimant can only establish his title to a lesser interest than that represented by the money paid in, the court will determine the value of such interest, pay that sum to the claimant, and repay the rest of the money to the party who paid it in. Ib.

Where a sum of money has been paid into court by a railway company, under s. 76 of the Lands Clauses Act, as representing the value of the interest claimed by the occupier of lands taken, and the claimant, on petitioning for payment out to him, can only shew a title to a less valuable interest, the court will ascertain, by a reference to chambers, the value of his actual interest, pay that to the petitioner, and repay the balance to the company which paid it in. Cooper, Ex parte, North London Ry., In re, 3 Dr. & Sm. 312; 34 L. J., Ch. 373; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 103; 11 L. T. 661; 13 W. R. 364.

When the person in possession of lands taken by a railway company produced his abstract of title, it appeared that a will under which he claimed was susceptible of, and had received from four eminent conveyancers, four different interpretations:—Held, that it was not the duty of the court, on a petition by the person claiming as tenant in possession, to examine into the title of the person so claiming; and payment of the income ordered to the petitioner accordingly. Perry's Estate, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 917; 3 W. R. 561. And see Alston, In re, 5 W. R. 189.

It is, however, the duty of the company, like as of a trustee, to state to the court the difficulties which come to its knowledge; not, however, to argue on the case. Ib.

Where compensation-money was paid into court by a railway company on an agreement with tenant for life for purchase of the fee simple, but, on investigating the title, part of the land was found to be copyhold, with a defective title as to one undivided moiety, the court ordered an apportionment of the money, so as to carry over the amount representing the price of that part of the land to which a good title was made, and the dividends to be paid to the tenant for life, but the capital not to be paid out without notice to the company. Perk's Estate, In re, 1 Sm. & G. 545; 7 Railw. Cas. 705; 2 W. R. 24.

There being two adverse claimants to money assessed for compensation in respect of land injuriously affected within the Lands Clauses Act, the parties by whom the compensation-money was payable filed a bill for an inquiry as to which of the two claimants was entitled to such money. But the court, holding the real question at issue to be the title to the land, refused to order a reference to chambers to inquire into that title, and directed the question to be tried by an action of ejectment. Metropolitan Board of Works v. Sant, 38 L. J., Ch. 7; L. R. 7 Eq. 197; 19 L. T. 260; 17 W. R. 25.

When land had been taken compulsorily under an act of parliament, and the value assessed by a jury, and the party afterwards turned out to have only a partial interest, the court refused to stay proceedings in his suit for specific performance, as they would have done in the case of an ordinary purchase. Gedye v. Public Works Commissioners, 19 L. T. 82; 16 W. R. 1106.

Doubt as to Ownership—Determining Value.]—When there is a doubt as to the true ownership of land taken by a railway company, but neither claimant is absent nor prevented from treating, the value of the land should not be determined by a surveyor appointed under the Lands Clauses Act, ss. 58, 59, but by the verdict of a jury, or by an award under s. 23; and when the wrong course has been adopted the compensation-money so deposited will not be paid out till the value has been ascertained in the proper manner and paid into court. L. & S. W. Ry., Ex parte, 38 L. J., Ch. 527.

—— Repayment of Purchase-money.]—A railway company had, under the compulsory powers of their act, taken land from a corporation, and the price had been agreed on but was not paid, and the company entered into the possession of the land and constructed their works. The abstract of title was sent to the company, and a conveyance was prepared and engrossed, and a plan of the ground indorsed thereon, and the engrossment with plan thereon was sent to the solicitor of the corporation and remained with him for two or three years, but was not executed, on account of the purchase-money not having been paid. It turned out that part of the land alleged to be purchased by the company was claimed by the Crown, and it certainly formed part of the plan sent by them to the corporation. While a negotiation was going on between the parties respecting this claim, against which the company asked the corporation to indemnify them before completing the purchase and paying the purchase-money, the corporation brought an action of ejectment to recover the possession of the land, and the company having let judgment go by default, execution was issued, and the company were obliged to pay the purchase-money to get the sheriff out of possession. They accordingly did pay it, but under protest as to their rights in respect of the conveyance, and, as they alleged (but this was denied by the corporation), on an undertaking by the corporation to pay the same into the bank, in accordance with the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act. The corporation kept the money in their own hands, and lent part thereof to the Board of Health of Lancaster (they themselves being, in fact, the Board of Health). The company filed their bill to compel payment of the purchase-money into the bank, according to the provisions of the act, in order to relieve the company from responsibility, and for an injunction. By the answer it was admitted that a part of the money was still in the hands of the corporation, and the company moved for an order to pay the money into court. It was ordered that the part of the money in hand must be paid in, but not that lent to the Board of Health. But, quære, on the principle of preserving the property during the litigation, ought not the latter to be paid in also. L. & N. W. Ry. v. Lancaster Corporation, 15 Beav. 22; 16 Jur. 677.

7. Conveyances.

Parties to.]—Where a railway company has given notices to treat to a legal tenant for life under a settlement and to the trustees of the settlement who have a bare power of sale with his consent, and the purchase-money for the life estate is fixed as between the company and the tenant for life by award under a reference to arbitration under the Lands Clauses Act in the usual way, the trustees taking no part in the reference, the company cannot require the sale to be completed as a sale by the trustees, but it must be completed as a sale by the tenant for life under the act. Pigott and G. W. Ry., In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 679; 18 Ch. D. 146; 44 L. T. 792; 29 W. R. 727.

Construction of—Private Way—"Rights, Members, &c."]—In a conveyance to a railway company of a piece of land on which was a stable, the words, "rights, members and appurtenances," used in the form given in schedule A., appended to the Lands Clauses Act, were inserted. The vendor had many years previously made a private road from the highway to the stable over his own land, for his own convenience, and had used it ever since. The soil of the road was not conveyed to the company, and no express mention of it was made in the conveyance:—Held, that the right of way passed to the company. Bayley v. G. W. Ry., 26 Ch. D. 434; 51 L. T. 337—C. A.

Assignment of Lease to Company—Usual Covenants.]—A railway company which, after giving notice to treat, has paid the purchase-money for leaseholds, and has, with the consent of the lessee, been admitted into possession, will, at the suit of the lessee within a reasonable time, be compelled to accept an assignment containing the usual covenants. Harding v. Metropolitan Ry., 41 L. J., Ch. 371; L. R. 7 Ch. 154; 26 L. T. 109; 20 W. R. 321.

Stamping—Compensation for Loss of Trade.]—The schedule of the Stamp Act of 1870, prescribes an ad valorem duty on every "conveyance or transfer on sale of any property." By s. 70 the term "conveyance on sale" includes every instrument whereby any property upon the sale thereof is transferred to or vested in the purchaser. By deed of conveyance S. & Co. conveyed business premises to a railway company. The deed stated that the jury in a compensation trial under the Lands Clauses (Scotland) Act, 1845, had found that S. & Co. were entitled to 28,586*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.*, as the value of the premises which had been taken by the company under the powers of their special act; 14,572*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* for the value of the buildings, &c., upon the premises, and 9,499*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.* as compensation for loss of business, and that the company had paid the three sums so assessed to S. & Co.:—Held, that the 9,499*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.* allowed by the jury as compensation for loss of business was part of the "consideration for the sale" of the premises, and liable to an ad valorem duty accordingly. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Glasgow and South Western Ry., 56 L. J., P. C. 82; 12 App. Cas. 315; 57 L. T. 570; 36 W. R. 241—H. L. (Sc.)

1. Vendor's Lien.

Jurisdiction of Court—Subsequent Statute.]—On a bill by unpaid vendors of land taken possession of by a railway company, specific performance of an agreement and of an award determining the value of the land and binding the company to construct a bridge was decreed, payment of the unpaid purchase-money ordered, and the right of the vendors to a lien declared. The money was not paid, and the bridge not constructed, and the vendors accordingly presented a petition for sale of the land and for a reference to chambers to assess the damages in respect of the non-construction of the bridge:—Held, that they were entitled to the order prayed for, and an objection that the court had no jurisdiction, from the fact that the company's line was, under an act of parliament passed subsequently to the decree, being worked by another company as an integral portion of its own undertaking, and that all matters and disputes in which that company was interested were, by the same act, referred to the decision of arbitrators, was overruled, on the ground that the act did not contemplate any interference with the previously-existing and paramount rights of the vendors. St. Germans (Earl) v. Crystal Palace and South London Junction Ry., L. R. 11 Eq. 568; 24 L. T. 288; 19 W. R. 584.

Ordinary Rights of Vendor when Land taken.]—A vendor of land to a railway company which has entered and used it for the purpose of its railway is entitled to the same lien on the land for the unpaid purchase-money, and the same remedies for enforcing it, as an ordinary vendor. Wing v. Tottenham and Hampstead Junction Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 654; L. R. 3 Ch. 740; 16 W. R. 1098.

A railway company having taken possession of land for their railway without the consent of the landowner, an agreement was come to for a certain sum payable on a certain day. The money was not paid, and the railway was completed and was in operation. The landowner filed a bill for specific performance, and moved for payment on a fixed day or delivery up of the land:—Held, that a railway company was exactly in the same position as an individual, and the money must be paid within six months or the land delivered up. Sutton v. Hoylake Ry., 20 L. T. 214.

The owners of land taken by public companies under their compulsory powers have the ordinary vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money, and they are entitled to enforce that right by a sale of the land. Walker v. Ware Ry., 35 Beav. 52; 35 L. J., Ch. 94; L. R. 1 Eq. 195; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 18; 13 L. T. 517; 14 W. R. 158.

Arrears of Rent-charge.]—A company, under the powers conferred by the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, contracted, in 1851, in consideration of the payment of an annual rent-charge, to purchase land for the construction of docks. The company entered upon the land, and completed the construction of the docks, but had made no payments in respect of the rent-charge:—Held, that the vendor was not entitled to a lien on the land for the unpaid arrears of the rent-charge. Jersey (Earl) v. Briton Ferry Floating Dock Co., L. R. 7 Eq. 409.

Costs of Arbitration and Award.]—And when land is taken by a railway company under the Lands Clauses Act, and the price is settled by arbitration, the costs of the arbitration and award payable to the vendor do not stand on the same footing as the purchase-money, and the vendors have no lien on the land for such costs. Ferrers v. Stafford and Uttoxeter Ry., 41 L. J., Ch. 362; L. R. 13 Eq. 524; 26 L. T. 652; 20 W. R. 478.

Amount of Compensation.]—This lien extends not only to the value of the land, but also to the amount of compensation for damages. Walker v. Ware Ry., supra.

Money Deposited by Company.]—This right of lien is unaffected by the deposit under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 85, and by a deposit, by agreement, before the amount payable has been ascertained. Ib.

Priority.]—The rights of the public, and of debenture creditors and others claiming under the company, are subordinate to the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money. Ib.

A landowner has no claim against a fund deposited as security under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 85, for his costs under the act. Neath and Brecon Ry., Ex parte, 43 L. J., Ch. 277; L. R. 9 Ch. 263; 30 L. T. 3; 22 W. R. 242.

—— Surplus Lands — Debenture Stock — Charge.]—Sect. 23 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, does not give to the holders of debenture stock in a railway company any lien or charge on the surplus lands, or on the proceeds of the sale of surplus lands of the company, nor does that section give debenture-holders any priority in payment over judgment creditors of the company in proceedings taken by such creditors under the Judgments Law Amendment Act, 1864, for the sale of surplus lands of the railway company. The right to priority in payment given to debenture-holders by s. 23 arises in the following cases at all events—(1) in the distribution of moneys collected under s. 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, by the receiver appointed under that section; (2) in the winding-up of an abandoned railway under the joint provisions of the Abandonment of Railways Acts, 1850 and 1869, and of the Companies Acts, 1862 and 1867; and (3) in the working out of a scheme of arrangement under the provisions of the Railway Companies Act, 1867. Hull, Barnsley and West Riding Ry., In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 205; 40 Ch. D. 119; 59 L. T. 877; 37 W. R. 145—C. A.

Enforcing Lien—Crown.]—Where the Crown, as vendor in a suit for a specific performance against a railway company, had obtained a decree directing payment by the company of a sum of money due by way of purchase-money, compensation, damages and costs, in respect of Crown land taken by the company, but not declaring any lien in favour of the Crown upon the land, and in another suit by incumbrancers against the company, a receiver of the tolls had been appointed; a petition presented on behalf of the Crown in the first-mentioned suit, for the purpose of enforcing a lien upon the land, was dismissed, and with costs as against the incumbrancers. Att.-Gen. v. Sittingbourne and Sheerness Ry., 35 L. J., Ch. 318; L. R. 1 Eq. 636; 14 L. T. 92; 14 W. R. 414.

—— Declaration of Lien.]—When a decree for specific performance had been obtained by a vendor against a railway company of a contract for sale, and the company afterwards became insolvent:—Held, on a petition subsequently presented by the vendor, that he was entitled to a declaration of lien for his unpaid purchase-money. Heriot v. L. C. & D. Ry., 16 L. T. 473.

—— Sale when Ordered.]—Where a landholder has sold land to a railway company, on some of which it had entered under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 85, and on the rest under an agreement with the vendor, and the vendor had obtained a decree for specific performance and for payment of the purchase-money within three months:—Held, that, in default of payment, the vendor was entitled to a sale of the land, although the railway was actually made and ready for traffic. Wing v. Tottenham and Hampstead Junction Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 654; L. R. 3 Ch. 740; 16 W. R. 1098. S. P., Keane v. Athenry and Ennis Ry., 19 W. R. 43.

When a decree has been made against a railway company as purchaser, decreeing specific performance and declaring a lien for unpaid purchase and compensation-money, the court will, on petition, direct a sale in default of payment by a short day. Williams v. *G. A decree for an immediate sale of a leasehold interest in lands, over which a railway had been completed, was made against a railway company in a suit instituted by the vendor to enforce his lien for the unpaid purchase-money. Sedgwick v. Watford and Rickmansworth Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 379.

The court, in a landowner's suit to enforce his lien, will order a sale of land over which the railway is carried. Raper v. Crystal Palace and South London Ry., 18 L. T. 8; 16 W. R. 413.

An unpaid vendor of land who has obtained a declaration of lien in his favour for purchase-money, interest and costs, is entitled, in default of payment, to an order in the cause for sale of the land, and need not file another bill to enforce his lien. Vyner v. Hoylake Ry., 17 W. R. 92.

On a bill by unpaid vendors of land, taken possession of by a railway company, specific performance of an agreement and of an award, determining the value of the land, and binding the company to construct a bridge, was decreed, payment of the unpaid purchase-money ordered, and the right of the vendors to a lien declared. The money was not paid, and the bridge not constructed, and the vendors accordingly presented a petition for sale of the land, and for a reference to chambers, to assess the damages in respect of the non-construction of the bridge:—Held, that they were entitled to the order as prayed. St. Germans (Earl) v. Crystal Palace and South London Junction Ry., L. R. 11 Eq. 568; 24 L. T. 288; 19 W. R. 584.

Parties to Proceedings.]—Bill by unpaid vendors against two railway companies—the purchasers and their lessees—in possession of the land for specific performance of the contract, for the payment of the purchase-money, for an injunction against both companies, for a declaration of lien, and that it might be enforced by a sale, and that a receiver might be appointed of the rents and profits of the purchasers' estate:—Held, that the lessees were properly made parties, and the court decreed specific performance and payment of the purchase-money within three months, declared a lien as against both companies, and gave leave, in case the money should not be paid, to apply for an injunction, and for the appointment of a receiver to enforce the lien. Winchester (Bishop) v. Mid-Hants Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 64; L. R. 5 Eq. 17; 17 L. T. 161; 16 W. R. 72.

In a suit for specific performance of an agreement entered into between the plaintiff and a railway company for the purchase of land belonging to the plaintiff, two holders of mortgage debentures on the undertaking of the company (who had in a suit instituted by them on behalf of themselves and all other mortgagees of the undertaking of the company obtained an account and the appointment of a receiver) were made parties:—Held, following Winchester (Bishop) v. Mid-Hants Ry., supra, that they were properly made parties, and their costs were directed to be added to their securities. Drax v. Somerset and Dorset Ry., 38 L. J., Ch. 232 ; 19 L. T. 626.

A railway company agreed to purchase land, and they had constructed their line of railway over it, but had not paid the whole of the purchase-money. The line was worked by another company under a traffic agreement, and the net profits were divided between the two companies. The vendor filed a bill against both companies for specific performance, for a declaration of lien, and an injunction against both companies for continuing in possession of the land or interfering with it, and for a receiver:—Held, that the second company was properly made a defendant. Marling v. Stonehouse and Nailsworth Ry., 38 L. J., Ch. 306 ; 17 W. R. 484.

A railway company working the line of another company under parliamentary powers is a proper and necessary party to a bill for specific performance, filed against that other company by an unpaid vendor, and must bear its own costs of the suit. Goodford v. Stonehouse and Nailsworth Ry., 38 L. J., Ch. 307 ; 20 L. T. 137 ; 17 W. R. 515.

Sale free from all Claims.]—When land purchased by a railway company is sold to enforce the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money, it is sold free from all claims of the public to use it as a highway. Munns v. Isle of Wight Ry., 39 L. J., Ch. 522 ; L. R. 5 Ch. 414 ; 23 L. T. 96 ; 18 W. R. 781.

Injunction or Receiver not Granted before Judgment.]—When an unpaid vendor of land taken by a railway company has commenced an action against the company to enforce his lien, the court will not grant an injunction or a receiver against the company before judgment has been obtained in the action, even though the company admits its liability. Latimer v. Aylesbury and Buckingham Ry., 9 Ch. D. 385 ; 39 L. T. 460 ; 27 W. R. 141—C. A.

Appointment of Receiver—Injunction Refused.]—A person who had sold to a railway company some land, over which the railway had been made and opened, obtained a decree ordering specific performance and declaring his lien for the balance for purchase-money. The company having become insolvent, an order was made, on the petition of the vendor, for sale of the land and payment of the deficiency, and for an injunction restraining the company until payment from running any engine over or otherwise using or continuing in possession of the land:—Held, that an injunction was not the proper form of relief, as it would make the land useless to both parties. The order for an injunction was therefore discharged, and an order made for a receiver, with a direction to the company to give him immediate possession. Munns v. Isle of Wight Ry., 39 L. J., Ch. 522 ; L. R. 5 Ch. 414 ; 23 L. T. 96 ; 18 W. R. 781.

A railway company, by agreement with a landowner, were let into possession of land which they required for part of their line, and made their railway over it, giving a bond for payment of the purchase-money on a future day. Default was made in payment of the bond:—Held, that the landowner was not entitled to an injunction to restrain the company from continuing in possession until the purchase-money was paid. Pell v. Northampton and Banbury Junction Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 319 ; L. R. 2 Ch. 100 ; 15 L. T. 169 ; 15 W. R. 27.

Whether the landowner might not be entitled to a receiver or to have the money paid into court—quære. Ib.

Second Receiver, when Appointed.]—When an unpaid vendor to a railway company has obtained an order in a suit, declaring his lien, but the company has failed to pay, an order for sale by public auction or private contract will be made on petition ; and when a receiver has already been appointed in another suit against the same company, liberty will be given to apply to appoint another receiver without prejudice to the former appointment, and to obtain any surplus after satisfying all claims in such other suit. Ware v. Aylesbury and Buckingham Ry., 28 L. T. 893 ; 21 W. R. 819.

Restraining Company from continuing in Possession.]—A railway company agreed to purchase lands required for the purposes of the undertaking. The purchase-money was ascertained, and the company took possession and constructed the railway, but no part of the purchase-money was paid, nor was a conveyance executed. The vendor brought a suit to obtain payment, in which suit a receiver was appointed, and he afterwards obtained a decree ordering specific performance and declaring his lien for the purchase-money, with liberty in default of payment to apply in chambers as to enforcing his lien by a sale. Default having been made, the lands were put up for sale, but no person bid ; whereupon the plaintiff moved that the order for sale might be discharged, that the company might be ordered to give up possession to the plaintiff, and in the meantime be restrained from running any engine over or otherwise continuing in possession of the land:—Held that an injunction to restrain the company from continuing in possession ought not to be awarded, at all events, until after another attempt had been made to sell the land. Williams v. Aylesbury and Buckingham Ry., 28 L. T. 547 ; 21 W. R. 819.

But the Court of Chancery will not, for the purpose of enforcing the lien of an unpaid vendor against a railway company for his purchase- and compensation-money, interest and costs, restrain the company from running trains or engines over the land until the sale (directed by the order) of the land agreed to be taken. Lycett v. Stafford and Uttoxeter Ry., 41 L. J., Ch. 474 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 261 ; 25 L. T. 870.

Where the unpaid vendor of land taken by a railway company has commenced an action against the company to enforce his lien, and an order has been made in such action that the defendants should, on or before a day named, pay the purchase-money and interest, with a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to a lien on the lands in respect of the purchase-money, interest and costs, and that in default of payment the plaintiff was to be at liberty to apply to enforce such lien, such order containing no order for sale, the court will on default in payment, there being evidence that the land is unsalable, grant an injunction to restrain the defendants from running trains over the railway and from continuing in possession of the land. Williams v. Aylesbury and Buckingham Ry. (21 W. R. 819) and Munns v. Isle of Wight Ry. (L. R. 5 Ch. 414), discussed. Allgood v. Merrybent and Darlington Ry., 55 L. J., Ch. 743 ; 33 Ch. D. 571 ; 55 L. T. 835 ; 35 W. R. 180.

Effect of levying Execution.]—A railway company gave a bond to a vendor of land to them for the purchase-money. The vendor brought an action and levied execution upon the bond. By reason of interpleader proceedings he did not recover the full amount of the purchase-money by the execution:—Held, that he was not deprived of his lien for the remainder of the purchase-money, and was entitled to a decree for specific performance. Pell v. Northampton and Banbury Ry., 16 W. R. 1077.,

A landowner sold land to a railway company by an agreement under which the company were to pay him "2,000*l.* to be paid in cash or at the option of the company in such securities as should be agreed upon between the parties." The company took possession of the land, and opened their line upon it. Under the agreement they elected to give security in lieu of cash payment, and a bond was accordingly settled and given. The company made default on the day for payment mentioned in the bond, and the landowner sued them on the bond at law, and recovered a part of his money by a sheriff's sale:—Held, that this was not a contract to take securities instead of cash, and that he had a lien for the balance of his purchase-money, and was entitled to an injunction restraining the company from continuing in possession of the land, and to a sale in default of payment. Pell v. Midland and South Wales Ry., 20 L. T. 288; 17 W. R. 506.

Statute restraining Actions against Company.]—An unpaid vendor to a railway company may have leave to work out a decree for specific performance against the company, notwithstanding the passing of an act of parliament to restrain the continuance of suits without the leave of the court. Griffith v. Cambrian Ry., 21 L. T. 290; 17 W. R. 979.

Unpaid Vendors—Winding-up—Petition.]—Where land has been compulsorily taken by a company under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the court held that the owners of such land were not, as their title had not been made out and accepted, creditors of the company in respect of the unpaid purchase-money (the amount whereof had been determined by arbitration), so as to enable them to support a petition for a winding-up order under the Companies Act, 1862. Lister, Ex parte, Milford Docks Co., In re, 23 Ch. D. 292; 48 L. T. 560; 31 W. R. 715.

2. Interest on.

a. Generally.

Express Contract.]—Where a purchaser knowingly enters into a definite contract to pay interest on his purchase-money, and in certain events a higher rate of interest, and those events occur, it is not open to him afterwards, and in the absence of fraud, to complain of the contract into which he has so entered. Specific performance decreed according to the terms of the contract, with payment of the higher rate of interest. Herbert (Lady) v. Salisbury and Yeovil Ry., 14 L. T. 507.

Conveyance executed—Subsequent Demand for Interest.]—An owner of lands taken by a railway company, under its compulsory powers, executed a conveyance to the company of his interest in the lands in consideration of 80*l.*, the amount of compensation awarded by a jury. No claim for interest was made at the time of the execution of the conveyance:—Held, that the execution of the conveyance did not estop the owner from afterwards claiming interest on the amount awarded from the time of entering on the lands down to the date of payment of the amount awarded. Baltimore Extension Ry., In re, Daly, Ex parte, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 169.

Acquiescence.] — A railway company gave the usual notice to a tenant for life of settled estates, that they required a portion of the estates for their line, and afterwards made an offer for the fee-simple. The solicitor for the tenant for life accepted the offer, stipulating that interest at 5 per cent. should be paid from the time of the company taking possession, and proposing that, as the title was well known, the company should be satisfied without the production of the deed. To this the company objected, and proposed to pay the money into a banker's in the names of the respective solicitors pending the investigation of the title. The tenant for life's solicitor thereupon suggested that, as the money must be paid into court, it had better be so at once. The company thereupon paid the money into court to the account of the railway act only, and communicated to the tenant for life's solicitor that they had paid the money into court under s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act. The solicitor for the tenant for life thereupon reminded them that interest at 5 per cent. would continue to be payable till the purchase was completed. To this the company's solicitor returned no answer; and although several other communications passed between the solicitors respecting the purchase, the company's solicitor did not till a year afterwards express any objection to the payment of interest. The money remained uninvested during the whole of that period:—Held, that the company had acquiesced in the vendor's view of the case, and were bound to pay interest up to the investment. Hardwicke (Earl), Ex parte, 1 De G. M. & G. 297.

b. From what Period payable.

Taking Possession of Land.]—Interest at 4 per cent. is payable by a railway company upon the purchase or compensation money from the time of their taking possession of the land under their statutory powers, and not merely from the subsequent period of ascertaining the price by the verdict of a jury. Rhys v. Dare Valley Ry., L. R. 19 Eq. 93; 23 W. R. 23. S. P., Cooper v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 53 L. J., Ch. 109; 25 Ch. D. 472; 50 L. T. 602; 32 W. R. 709—C. A.

Circumstances under which it was held that the ordinary relation of vendor and purchaser existed between a railway company and the owner of certain lands taken by the company; and that the owner was entitled to interest on the purchase-money from the time the company took possession of the lands, up to the time of lodging the money in the bank. Blount v. Great Southern and Western Ry., 2 Ir. Ch. R. 40.

A company entered into possession of land and paid into court the sum awarded by the arbitrator, on the amount being afterwards increased it was ordered that interest at 4 per cent. upon the difference was payable from the entry into possession. Navan and Kingscourt Ry., In re, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 113.

Payment into Court or Bank.]—A company had paid into court the sum assessed by a jury, and executed a deed-poll under s. 76:—Held, that the court has no jurisdiction to make any order as to interest on the purchase-money. Divers, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 995.

Where the Great Western Railway Company have paid the purchase-money of property under settlement into the Bank of England, the vendors (the trustees) cannot apply under the act, by petition, to charge them with interest during the time it has lain idle, on the ground that the company ought to have paid it to the trustees who were authorised by the settlement to receive it. White, Ex parte, G. W. Ry., In re, 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 9. See Chambers v. White, 14 Jur. 1129.

Award.]—A lessee under a building lease, agreed in 1866, to sell part of the demised premises to a railway company, the price, in case of difference, to be referred to a surveyor, to be agreed upon between the parties in the usual manner. The company had, at the date of the agreement, a bill before parliament to enable them to take his land, but it had not then become law. The surveyor made his award in 1868, but made no provision as to the costs of the reference:—Held, that the relation of vendor and purchaser was not established till the price was ascertained, and that the lessee must pay the outgoings from the land until the date of the award, and was not entitled to interest on the purchase-money up to that date. Catling v. G. N. Ry., 21 L. T. 769: 18 W. R. 121—L.J.J.

Verdict.]—A sheriff's jury, in awarding compensation to a landowner against a railway company in 1864, found that so far back as 1852, he was entitled to 5,272*l.*, saying nothing as to interest. The order of the court below, adding to the principal twelve years' interest, was reversed. Caledonian Ry. v. Carmichael, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 56.

In an action to recover a sum awarded to the plaintiff by a jury, under 43 Geo. 3, c. 140, and 48 Geo. 3, c. 11, as compensation to be made by the Bristol Dock Company for an injury done to the plaintiff's property by means of the works authorised by those acts:—Held, that the jury might give interest for the detention of the sum awarded. Hilhouse v. Davies, 1 M. & S. 169.

The interest of landowners who were entitled in fee-simple subject to certain tenacies was assessed by a jury under the Lands Clauses Act:—Held, that interest at 4 per cent. was payable from the date of the verdict, although de facto possession of the land was not obtained until the expiration, at a subsequent period, of the tenacies subject to which the land was held. Eccleshill Local Board, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 214; 13 Ch. D. 365; 28 W. R. 536.

When good Title shewn.]—A complete contract being established between a railway company and a landowner by the notice to treat, and an award under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, fixing the amount of the purchase-money, the ordinary rules as between vendor and purchaser apply to such a contract, including the liability of the purchasing company, in a proper case, to pay interest on their unpaid purchase-money. Thus, where the title has not been accepted before the award, and the company, not being in possession, delay paying or depositing the purchase-money, they are liable to pay interest at 4 per cent. per annum, not from the date of the award, but from the time they might prudently have taken possession; that is, when a good title was shewn. Eccleshill Local Board, In re (13 Ch. D. 365), disapproved of. Pigott and G. W. Ry., In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 679; 18 Ch. D. 146; 44 L. T. 792; 29 W. R. 727.

In the case of a compulsory purchase under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, interest is payable to the vendor by the purchaser from the time when possession might have been taken, it appearing that a good title could be shewn. And the land being subject to mortgage, interest is payable by the vendor to the mortgagee in lieu of notice. Spencer-Bell to L. & S. W. Ry., 33 W. R. 771.

Recovery of Arrears.]—In 1857 S. made an equitable mortgage of a public-house in Leeds, to secure the repayment of 400*l.* with interest at 5*l.* per cent. The mortgagor, and those claiming under him, continued in possession of the house without paying any interest on the debt. There appeared to have been some arrangement as to that, though what, exactly, was not shewn. In September, 1875, the corporation of Leeds gave notice to the parties interested in the house of their intention to take it, under their compulsory powers, for the benefit of the borough, and then The mortgagees presented a petition for payment paid the purchase-money, 1,150*l.*, into court, out of court to them of their principal money and interest for nineteen years at 5*l.* per cent., together with their costs:—Held, that they were entitled to their principal money, with interest, for the whole period claimed; but on a re-argument, that six years' arrears of the interest could only be recovered. Stead's Settlement Trusts, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 634; 2 Ch. D. 713; 35 L. T. 465; 24 W. R. 698.

Vendor delaying Completion.]—If the owner of land compelled to sell under the Lands Clauses Act delays the completion of the purchase, interest will stop upon an appropriation of the purchase-money with notice that it is employed. Ware v. Regent's Canal Co., 23 Beav. 575; 26 L. J., Ch. 566; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 924; 5 W. R. 617.

3. Disposal of.

a. Generally.

Apportionment.]—A dean and chapter and their lessee for twenty-one years, under covenant not to assign without their leave, entered into a joint contract for sale of part of the demised premises to a railway company, at an aggregate price. On the completion of the purchase and the conveyance of the property to the company, they paid the amount into court, under s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. The court declined, upon the petition of the lessee, to apportion the purchase-money. By consent the money was ordered to be invested, and the dividends to be paid to the lessee for his term, or until further order. Ward, Ex parte, 2 De G. & Sm. 4; 5 Railw. Cas. 398; 17 L. J., Ch. 249; 12 Jur. 322.

Renewable Leaseholds—Fine.]—Where lands in lease, subject to a customary right of renewal in an ecclesiastical corporation sole, have been taken for public purposes under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, s. 74 of that statute empowers the court on the occurrence of every period at which, if the land had not been taken, the lease might have been renewed to authorise the payment, out of the fund in court arising from the purchase-money and its accumulations, of an equivalent to the fine payable upon such renewals. St. Paul's (Precentor), Ex parte, 1 Kay & J. 538; 24 L. J., Ch. 395; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 444; 3 Eq. R. 634; 3 W. R. 430.

Purchase Money or Compensation.]—A railway company when constructing their line excavated soil on the land of M., and used the stuff for ballast. No notice was given to him that his land was required for the purposes of the company. After a delay on their part of some years the matter was, with other claims for consequential injury, referred to arbitration. The articles recited his allegation that the lands had been "taken and used and otherwise injured," and provided for the ascertainment of the purchase-money for the lands taken and used. The award found that the company had "cut the soil of a portion of the lands, and that it has been taken and used," &c., and awarded a sum "as and for the purchase-money of the portion of the lands," &c. The money was paid to the owner, and subsequently the pond formed in the excavation was taken by another railway company, under their compulsory powers. He claimed that on the construction of the deeds, and under the facts of the case, he had remained the owner of the lands:—Held, that the lands were taken by the company, and that the money was paid for the purchase and not merely as compensation for injury thereto. Belfast Central Ry., In re, Macrory, Ex parte, 19 W. R. 238.

Death pending Proceedings.]—Order made on a petition by a rector for the investment of the money arising from the sale to a railway company of a part of the rectory lands. Pending the proceedings in the master's office, the rector died. The new rector consenting that the proceedings should go on, no supplemental order necessary. Semble. Lea (Rector), Ex parte, 21 L. J., Ch. 776.

Service.]—Semble, where purchase-money has been paid into court, it is not necessary for the person in possession as owner to serve any other person than the company with the petition for investment. Sterry's Estate, In re, 3 W. R. 561.

b. Interim Investment.

No Option in Company.]—The court will not allow a railway company to retain any option after the order for investment as to the fund in which, or the time when, the moneys are to be invested. Newport, Abergavenny and Hereford Ry., Ex parte, 11 Jur. 160.

"Cash under Control of Court."]—The purchase-money of a settled estate sold under the Lands Clauses Act may be invested like cash under the control of the court. Foy, In re, 33 L. T. 161; 23 W. R. 744.

Money paid into court under a private act, and invested in exchequer bills, is "cash under the control of the court," within the meaning of the act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, and the General Order of the 1st of February, 1861, and may be invested in any of the securities sanctioned by the court, although such private act directs the investment to be in exchequer bills. Jackson v. Tyas, 52 L. J., Ch. 830.

Purchase-money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is cash under the control of the court within the meaning of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 38, s. 10, and accordingly the court has power to direct the investment of it in East India stock. Boyd's Settled Estate, In re (42 L. J., Ch. 506; 21 W. R. 667); Langmead v. Cockerton (25 W. R. 315); Kirksmeaton (Rector), Ex parte (infra), overruled. St. John's College, Oxford, Ex parte, 52 L. J., Ch. 268; 22 Ch. D. 923; 48 L. T. 331; 31 W. R. 55—C. A.

Money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is not to be invested as cash under the control of the court, but only in the manner specified in the act. Fryer's Settlement, In re (L. R. 20 Eq. 468), not followed. Kirksmeaton (Rector), Ex parte, 51 L. J., Ch. 581; 20 Ch. D. 203; 30 W. R. 539. Overruled by preceding case.

Money in court paid for the redemption of 3 per cent. consols, representing money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is "cash under the control of the court," within the meaning of the act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 10, and may be invested as such. St. John's College, Oxford, Ex parte (22 Ch. D. 93), followed. Brown, In re, 59 L. J., Ch. 530; 63 L. T. 131; 38 W. R. 529—C. A.

Purchase-money in court arising from a sale under the Lands Clauses Act, is "cash under the control of the court," within the meaning of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, ss. 10, 11, and the court has accordingly power to invest it as such, e.g. in East India 4*l.* per cent. stock. Fryer v. Salisbury and Dorset Junction Ry., 45 L. J., Ch. 96; L. R. 20 Eq. 468.

When money has been paid into court under a special act (e.g. the Lands Clauses Act, 1845), by which it is provided that moneys paid into court may be invested in specified investments, the court has no jurisdiction to order the money, as being "cash under the control of the court" within Lord St. Leonards' Act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38), to be invested in investments allowed by the General Order under that act, which are not included in the investments specified in the special act, e.g. India 4*l.* per cent. stock. Boyd's Settled Estates, In re (42 L. J., Ch. 506), followed; Taddy's Settled Estates, In re (L. R. 16 Eq. 532); Fryer's Settlement, In re (L. R. 20 Eq. 468); Kay's Trusts, In re (23 W. R. 744); and other cases not followed. St. Mary, Wigton (Vicar), Ex parte, 18 Ch. D. 646; 45 L. T. 134; 29 W. R. 883.

The court will allow an investment in metropolitan consolidated stock (under 34 & 35 Vict. c. 47, s. 13), of purchase-money paid into court by a school board. Redhead, In re, 39 L. T. 60.

On Mortgage.]—The purchase-money of land taken by a railway company for the purposes of their act was, on petition, directed to be invested in a mortgage of real estate; and the company was also ordered to pay the costs of all parties thereto and to the petition. Reading v. Hamilton, 5 L. T. 628.

Where purchase-money had been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act and invested in consols, upon an application for its reinvestment on mortgage security :—Held, that such reinvestment could not be treated as a permanent investment, and that the company must pay the costs without any condition as to the costs of any future permanent investment. Blyth's Trusts, In re, L. R. 16 Eq. 468 ; 28 L. T. 890 ; 21 W. R. 819.

Purchase-money for lands taken by a railway company having been paid into court, the tenant for life of the estate petitioned that the money might be reinvested on mortgage :—Held, that the mortgage could not be considered a permanent investment, and a direction that the company should not be required to pay the costs of a future permanent investment refused. Sewart, In re, L. R. 18 Eq. 278 ; 30 L. T. 355 ; 22 W. R. 625.

The court will sanction the interim investment on real security of purchase-money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act. Smith's Trust Estate, In re, L. R. 9 Eq. 178 ; 18 W. R. 369.

The court ordered the interim investment of purchase-money on mortgage of real estate at the cost of the company. Flemons' Trusts, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 86 ; L. R. 10 Eq. 612.

Order directing that Mortgage should be Permanent Investment.]—The compensation moneys of lands compulsorily taken by a railway company were invested in reduced annuities, the company paying the costs. The fund was subsequently reinvested on mortgage, the company again paying the costs. On this occasion it was ordered that for the purposes of costs of any future application, such reinvestment should be treated as a permanent reinvestment. An arrangement for a transfer of the mortgage security having been entered into by the owner of the fund, an application was made to the court for a declaration that the transferees were absolutely entitled to the moneys secured by the mortgage. The question was whether under s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the company was liable to pay the costs of this application :—Held, that the company was not liable to pay such costs, the meaning of the previous order being that it was not to be subjected to the payment of the costs of any future application in respect of the purchase-moneys. Gedling Rectory, In re, 53 L. T. 244.

Affidavit of no Title dispensed with.]—The affidavit of no title in any other person required by the Consolidated Orders XXXIV. r. 3, in support of petitions under acts of parliament for the interim investment of purchase-money and payment of dividends to the persons entitled thereto was, in the case of a petition under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 70, by a large public corporation, dispensed with. Magdalen College, Oxford, In re, 42 L. T. 822.

c. Payment of Dividends.

i. Annuitants.

No Conveyance.]—A railway company paid money into court for the purchase of land which was subject to an annuity ; no conveyance had been made. The court, on petition of the owner of the land, ordered the dividends to be paid to the annuitant. Cofield, Ex parte, 11 Jur. 1071.

Enforcing Payment—Parties to Petition.]—Under an act of parliament for making docks, the value or compensation for property taken for the purpose of the act was directed in certain cases to be paid into the bank in the name of the accountant-general, and to be laid out in bank annuities, and until such bank annuities should be sold, and the produce invested in other hereditaments, the dividends were to be paid to the person or persons who would be entitled to the rents and profits of the hereditaments if unsold. The act also directed that the court, on the application of any person or persons making claim to the money awarded as a compensation by motion or petition should, in a summary way of proceeding, or otherwise, order the same to be laid out and invested in the funds, or distribution thereof, or payment of the dividends according to the estate, title, or interest of the person making claim thereto. On the petition of an annuitant, whose annuity was charged on the property with powers of distress and entry, and further secured by a term, for payment of his annuity and the arrears thereof, out of a fund brought into court under the act, the court held, that it had no authority to proceed in a summary way on the petition of an incumbrancer, but only at the instance of the persons who would have been entitled to the rents if the property had been unsold, and dismissed the petition. Back, Ex parte, 2 Y. & J. 386 ; 31 R. R. 603.

ii. Ecclesiastical and other Corporate Property.

Leaseholds—Term unexpired.]—The rector of Lambeth, seised in right of office of certain houses taken by a railway company, under the powers of their act, applied by petition for the investment of a sum of money which had been paid by the railway company for compensation and further reversion, and thereby prayed for the payment of dividends to the petitioner and his successors. It appearing that the houses were subject to leases, of which thirty years were unexpired, at a nominal rent ; the court refused to make the order as prayed, but directed the investment and accumulation of the sum, with liberty to apply. Lambeth (Rector), Ex parte, L. & S. W. Ry., In re, 4 Railw. Cas. 231.

The Bishop of Winchester, the lessor of lands of the see, demised for lives and years :—Held, not to be entitled to any portion of the purchase-money and compensation for damage and severance paid into court in respect of lands comprised in the demise and taken by a railway company, or to the dividends of such money when invested, on the ground of the diminution of the fine which would be payable, until the lease should become renewable. Winchester (Bishop), Ex parte, 10 Hare, 137 ; 16 Jur. 649.

A railway company took some land belonging to an ecclesiastical corporation, which at the time was let on lease, and a large sum was awarded as a compensation, on the principle of the lessee continuing to pay the rent reserved by his lease. The land being valuable for building purposes, and it being the custom of the corporation to make it available by accepting surrenders, and regranting building leases at a great advance of rent :—Held, that the corporation was entitled to the dividends on the compensation money, in addition to the rent, during the term granted by the lease. Westminster (Dean), In re, Hampstead Junction Ry., In re, 26 Beav. 214 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 144 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 232 ; 7 W. R. 81.

Where land belonging to a dean and chapter, but subject to a lease, was purchased by a railway company, and the money paid into court, it was held that the dean and chapter were only entitled, during the continuance of the lease, to so much of the dividends of the purchase-money as would equal the amount of rent, and the rest of the dividends were to be accumulated till the expiration of the lease. Christchurch (Dean), Ex parte, 23 L. J., Ch. 149.

Lands belonging to a see, and held on lease, are taken under an act, and the money paid into court. The sum being under 150*l.*, a petition is presented praying payment of the dividends to the bishop and his successors. Application refused. Bath and Wells (Bishop), In re, 2 W. R. 1.

Where real estate of a college, subject to a lease, was taken by the commissioners of public works, and the purchase-money paid into court:—Held, that during the continuance of the lease, the college was entitled only to so much of the dividends as was equal to the rent, and that the rest of the dividends must be accumulated until the determination of the lease. Merton College (Warden), Ex parte, 1 N. R. 176.

"Possession"—Sect. 79.]—The mere fact of the receipt of rents and profits by the trustees of a burial ground, who were appointed for the management thereof solely as a burial ground, and for the receipt and application of the burial fees, at the time when a portion of the burial ground is taken by a railway company (the ground being at that time closed for ever as a burial ground, and the rents and profits being received springing from the use of the ground for other purposes), is not such a possession as brings the application of the trustees for the investment of the purchase-money paid into court by the company, and for the payment of the dividends to them, within the Lands Clauses Act, s. 79. St. Pancras Burial Ground, In re, 36 L. J., Ch. 52; 14 W. R. 576.

Where the income arising from property taken under the Lands Clauses Act had been applied for several hundred years by the rector and churchwardens of the parish to the relief of indigent parishioners, but it was uncertain in whom the legal estate in the land was vested, the court made an order under s. 79, directing payment of the dividends to the rector of the parish for the time being. St. Benet's, In re, 12 L. T. 762.

Burial Ground — Payment to Rector.]—A portion of a closed churchyard was taken by the corporation of a town to widen the street, and the amount of the purchase-money was paid into court:—Held, that the rector was entitled to have the dividends paid to him for his life, and to his successors after him. Liverpool (Rector), Ex parte, 40 L. J., Ch. 65; L. R. 11 Eq. 15; 23 L. T. 354; 19 W. R. 47.

Part of the burial ground of a parish was required by a railway company. The freehold of the ground was, by act of parliament, vested in the rector and churchwardens, in trust for the parish. The ground was subsequently closed as a burial place. The company paid the purchase-money into court:—Held, that the rector for the time being was entitled to the dividends. St. Martin's, Birmingham (Rector, Ex parte), 40 L. J., Ch. 69; L. R. 11 Eq. 23; 23 L. T. 575; 19 W. R. 95.

Archbishop.]—Dividends of investments of purchase-money, paid into court by a railway company for lands belonging to the Archbishop of Canterbury, ordered to be paid to the archbishop for the time being. Canterbury (Archbishop), Ex parte, 2 De G. & Sm. 365; 5 Railw. Cas. 699; 12 Jur. 1042.

Dean and Chapter.]—Upon a petition for payment of the dividends of stock, representing money paid in by a railway company for glebe land, to the dean and chapter for the time being:—Held, that the dividends must accumulate. Battle (Dean), Ex parte, 1 W. R. 271.

Form of Order.]—In order to obviate the necessity of repeated applications to the court, in cases where the purchase-moneys of glebe lands had been paid into court, and invested, the form of the order was, that the dividends should be paid to the vicar for the time being, and churchwardens and overseers, or either of them. Bicester Churchwardens, Ex parte, Buckinghamshire Ry., In re, 5 Railw. Cas. 702.

Municipal Corporation.]—A part of some lands which had been vested in trustees under the Municipal Corporations Act was taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money was paid into court. Order made for the investment in consols, and the payment of the dividends to any two of the trustees for the time being. Collins's Charity, In re, 20 L. J., Ch. 168.

Charity Property.]—Where purchase-money was paid into court in respect of lands vested in charity trustees, subject to leases for years dependent on lives, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, ordered the money to be invested and the dividends to be paid to the trustees instead of being accumulated. St. Thomas's Church Trustees, Bristol, Ex parte, 23 L. T 135.

Order for investment of the proceeds of lands belonging to a charity which had been taken under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and payment until further order of the interest to the secretary, and to his successors the secretaries for the time being, of the trustees of the charity, of which there was no treasurer. Codrington's Charity, In re. L. R. 18 Eq. 658.

Upon a petition for investment and payment of dividends of purchase-money for charity lands paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, payment of dividends ordered to the rector for the time being, he being a perpetual trustee of the charity. Davenant's Charity, In re, 2 W. R. 344.

iii. Tenant for Life.

Compensation for Right claimed by.]—When lands are taken under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, and besides the sum paid for the inheritance a further sum is awarded as compensation, in recognition of a right claimed by the tenant for life, he will not be entitled to that further sum but only to the interest on it. Wilson, In re, 32 L. J., Ch. 191: 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1043; 7 L. T. 772; 11 W. R. 294. S. P., Marlborough's (Duke) Estates, In re, 13 Jur. 738, and cases, post, col. 1407.

Devise subject to Lease at less than Rack Rent.]—A testator devises real estate, subject to a lease for a term of years at 25*l.* 10*s.* rent, to A. for life, remainder to B. A railway company purchases the interests of A. and B., subject to the lease, for 1,700*l.*, which is invested. The lease was granted at the said rent (less than a rack-rent) in consideration of a covenant to expend money, 600*l.*, on the estate during twenty years:—Held, that the tenant for life was entitled to the whole of the dividends of the purchase-money. Steward's Estate, In re, 1 Drew. 636; 1 W. R. 489.

Conveyance not executed—Possession taken.]—Where a railway company has taken possession of lands under agreement, part of the purchase-money being paid into court, and part remaining in the company's hands at 4*l.* per cent., the tenant for life of the lands is entitled to have the whole invested, and the dividends paid to him, although all parties have not executed the conveyance, in the absence of any improper conduct on his part relative to the execution. Wrey, In re, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 296; 12 L. T. 171; 13 W. R. 543.

Upon a petition for the reinvestment in land of money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, and invested in stock, and for payment to the petitioner, the tenant for life of the lands taken by the company, of the dividends of the fund in court, the court will order the dividends of the fund to be paid to the tenant for life before conveyance, where the company are in the possession of the land. Hungerford, In re, 1 Kay & J. 413; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 845.

Accumulated — Power of Appointment.]—A sum of 682*l.* 16*s.* 2*d.* consols, representing the accumulated dividends arising from the purchase-money of settled freeholds let for a long term of years at a peppercorn rent taken by a railway company, paid out to the tenant for life, who had an absolute testamentary power of appointment, with consent of the remaindermen, the presumption being that a woman aged fifty-one years and eleven months, who had been married fifteen years and had never had any children, would not have any children. Allason's Trusts, In re, 36 L. T. 653.

Apportionment.]—Where compensation money was paid into court by a railway company on an agreement with tenant for life for purchase of the fee-simple, but, on investigating the title, part of the land was found to be copyhold, with a defective title as to one undivided moiety, the court ordered an apportionment of the money, so as to carry over the amount representing the price of that part of the land to which a good title was made, and the dividends to be paid to the tenant for life, but the capital not to be paid out without notice to the company. Perks' Estate, In re, 1 Sm. & G. 545; 7 Railw. Cas. 609; 2 W. R. 24.

Land, which was devised by a will dated in 1795 to A. for life, with remainder over, was taken by a railway company under the powers of their special act; and the purchase-money was duly ascertained, paid into court, and invested in consols, and the dividends ordered to be paid to the tenant for life. The tenant for life died in February, 1853. In October in that year the remainderman petitioned for the transfer of the fund and payment of the last dividend to him:—Held, that the money in court could not be considered as land for the purpose of the Apportionment Act of 1738, and that therefore the executors of the tenant for life took no part of the last half-year's dividend. Longworth's Estate, In re, 1 Kay & J. 1; 23 L. J., Ch. 104; 2 W. R. 124.

Land which was limited to A. for life, remainder to B. in fee, was taken by a canal company, under statutory powers. The purchase-money was paid into court, and afterwards invested in consols. A. died without having received any of the dividends. His residuary legatee bequeathed all her residuary personal estate to the petitioner, who prayed for payment to himself of the fund and the dividends. The legal personal representative of A. was not before the court. The court refused to pay to B. the dividends accrued during the life of A., and ordered them to be paid to A.'s personal representative. Ackers' Trusts, In re, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 224; 7 L. T. 525; 11 W. R. 182.

Service.]—Certain property being taken by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests under the Metropolitan Building Act, on a petition for payment of the dividends of the proceeds in court to a tenant for life:—Held, that service upon the commissioners was unnecessary. Dryland's Estate, In re, 1 W. R. 139.

Form of Order.]—A tenant for life had sold land to a company by jury process, the purchase-money being paid into court and invested in consols. On a petition of the tenant for life and two of his annuitants (not bound by the contract) for payment of the dividends to the former, the order was made as prayed, prefaced with an undertaking by the annuitants not to distrain on any part of the land in the contract. Pedley's Estate, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 654.

A public company having purchased land for the purposes of their act, and paid the money into court, it is competent for the court, the whole matter being before it, not only to order the transfer into the separate account of the landowner having a limited interest, but also by the same order to direct payment of the dividends according to the rights of parties. Joliffe, In re, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 633.

Proof of Title.]—A tenant for life, on applying to the court for payment of the interest and dividends of money paid in and invested as the value of land taken by a railway company, must satisfy the court that he alone is the person entitled as tenant for life. Milne's Estate, In re, 1 N. R. 516; 8 L. T. 199.

Further Inquiry.]—A railway company took leasehold houses which had been improved by the tenant, and paid into court 2,200*l.*, as representing his interest. It turned out that the lease was void, and the court directed an inquiry as to the increase of pecuniary value by the lessee's outlay, such increase to be paid to him. The reversioner having then declined to intervene, the company had the fee-simple value assessed at 4,000*l.*, and paid that into court; and the reversioner, by petition, asked a declaration that he was entitled to the whole 4,000*l.*, or to such part as to the court should appear just; and for all proper inquiries, investment, and payment of the dividends to the tenant for life:—Held, that a second inquiry must be directed as in the former order, and an interim investment. Luntley, In re, 13 L. T. 490; 14 W. R. 93.

Settled Leaseholds.]—See next sub-division.

iv. Leaseholds in Settlement.

Tenant for Life and Remaindermen.]—Where leaseholds which are taken by a railway company are limited to a tenant for life and remainderman, the purchase-money paid for such leaseholds must be divided according to the number of years of the lease remaining unexpired at the time of taking such lands, and the representatives of the tenant for life are entitled to the portions in respect of the years during which the tenant for life lived, and the residue is payable to the remainderman. Money, In re, 2 Dr. & Sm. 94; 31 L. J., Ch. 496; 10 W. R. 399.

Leaseholds bequeathed to one for life, with remainder over, were taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money was invested in consols. The tenant for life only received the dividends:—Held, on her death (her representatives assenting to take it), that her estate was entitled, out of the consols, to the difference between the dividends received and the aggregate amount of the rental which would have accrued during her life, if the premises had not been taken. Jeffreys v. Conney, 28 Beav. 328.

Deficiency of Income.]—Leaseholds under a dean and a chapter, renewable by custom, were held by trustees for a tenant for life, with remainder over; and the trustees were directed, "two years or sooner before the time for renewal," to bring a part of the rental into a fund until a sufficient sum was raised for the renewal, "so that the estates may be always kept renewed . . . for ever." In June, 1865, and February, 1866, notices to treat for parts of the leaseholds, then having about thirteen and five years respectively to run, were given by a railway company. At Lady Day, 1866, the dean and chapter ceased to renew leases; and about the same date their property was taken over by the ecclesiastical commissioners. The values of the two properties having been assessed at amounts which, when paid, and invested in 3*l.* per cent. stock, gave a diminished income to the tenant for life:—Held, that the tenant for life was not entitled to be recouped the deficiency of income out of the corpus of the fund. Wood's Estate, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 59; L. R. 10 Eq. 572; 23 L. T. 430; 19 W. R. 59.

Where a tenant for life of a leasehold is compelled by a railway company to sell, and the value of the property when invested does not produce an income equal to the net rental of the leasehold, the court will allow a proportion, according to circumstances, but generally not the whole of the difference, to be made up from year to year out of capital. L. B. & S. C. Ry., Ex parte, Birch, In re, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 673; 10 L. T. 690.

The income of the investment of purchase-money of leaseholds being insufficient to give a tenant for life of the lease the same benefit as she would have had if the lease had continued in existence, the court directed a government annuity equal to the net income from the leaseholds to be purchased, or if the fund was insufficient for that purpose, then that the dividends be paid to the petitioner for life, and the principal half-yearly divided by the number of years unexpired of the term, and half of the quotient part of the stock to be sold, and the amount paid to the petitioner during her life in addition to the dividends. Pfleger, In re, L. R. 6 Eq. 426.

Amount of Rent not Income from Purchase-money.]—When land in trust is let on lease at rack-rent, and taken under the Lands Clauses Act, the tenant for life is entitled during the remainder of the term to the amount of rent, and not the income derived from the purchase-money. Mette, In re, 38 L. J., Ch. 445; L. R. 7 Eq. 72.

Ground Rent.]—Where a railway company takes lands, subject to a lease at a low ground-rent, the tenant for life is only entitled to the amount of the ground-rent out of the income of the purchase-money, and the excess of income must be accumulated until the expiration of the lease for the benefit of the estate. Wootton's Estate, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 305; L. R. 1 Eq. 589; 14 L. T. 125; 14 W. R. 469.

Higher Rent obtainable.]—When a railway company takes lands of a leasehold tenure in the occupation of a tenant for life, and it appears that if not taken they would let for an increased rent, the court will allow a slight increase upon the original rent by way of income out of the purchase-money. North, In re, 19 L. T. 43.

Continuance of Leases.]—A railway company took freehold lands settled by a will, and subject to leases at beneficial rents made by the tenant for life. The company paid the purchase-money into court, and the lands were conveyed to them subject to the leases. The tenant for life made an arrangement with the lessees that they were to continue to pay the same rents as before, although parts of the properties leased had been taken by the company. The tenant for life presented a petition asking for the investment of the money in court, and the payment of the dividends to her:—Held, that the court would not allow the tenant for life to derive any benefit from the purchase by the company, and that she could not receive the dividends on the purchase-money during the continuance of the leases, but that they must be accumulated. As each lease fell in the tenant for life would be entitled to so much of the dividends as was produced by the purchase-money of the land comprised in the lease which had fallen in, as also the income of the accumulations of the past dividends of such portion of the purchase-money. Griffith's Will, In re, 49 L. T. 161.

A. tenant for life of certain leaseholds, part of which are taken by a railway company. The compensation money is paid into court, and afterwards invested, and the dividends ordered to be paid to A. for life. The lease expires in the lifetime of A.:—Held, that A. is entitled to the whole of the compensation money and the dividends thereon. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry., In re, Beaufoy's Trusts, In re, 1 W. R. 14.

A railway company took freeholds settled by a will, and subject to eight leases, one granted by the testator and the other seven granted under powers in the will, either by the trustees or the tenant for life, and containing covenants by the lessee to repair or rebuild. The company purchased the leasehold interests from the tenants themselves, and paid the purchase-moneys of the fee, subject to the lessee's interests, into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. The income of the purchase-moneys when invested would be greater than the aggregate rents payable under the leases:—Held, upon petition by the tenant for life for investment and payment to him of the dividends, that, having regard to s. 74 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, he was entitled, during the continuance of the leases, to so much only of the dividends as equalled the amount of the rents he would have received in case the property had not been taken by the railway company; that the rest of the rents must be accumulated; and that, upon the date of falling in of each lease, the tenant for life would be entitled to an additional annual sum representing the income of so much of the capital of the purchase-moneys as was attributable to the property comprised in the lease which had fallen in, and of the accumulations thereof, less the rent under such lease. Wootton's Estate, In re (L. R. 1 Eq. 589), followed. Wilkes' Estate, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 199; 16 Ch. D. 597.

Payment out of Capital—Actuary.]—When leaseholds settled upon one for life with remainders over had been purchased, the court, upon making an order to invest the purchase-money, directed a reference to an actuary to ascertain how much of the capital ought to be paid in each year to the tenant for life. Phillips, In re, L. R. 6 Eq. 250.

A testator devised in strict settlement his residuary estate consisting of freeholds, leaseholds, &c., and directed his trustees to sell as they might think fit. Nearly twenty years after his death some of the leaseholds were taken by a railway company under its compulsory powers, and the purchase-money was paid into court:—Held, that the tenant for life was entitled to such an annual payment out of the purchase-money invested in consols, with the dividends thereon, as would exhaust the whole fund invested and the dividends thereon, at the date of the expiration of the lease, such annual payment to be ascertained by a reference to an actuary. Sewell's Estate, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 135; L. R. 11 Eq. 80; 23 L. T. 835.

T. being entitled to a moiety in leaseholds, that interest was settled on her marriage (after reserving 40*l.* a year thereout) on herself and husband and children. The Metropolitan Board of Works took the property and paid the money into court. On a petition to deal with the fund, the court ordered that sufficient of the purchase-money should be invested to produce the 40*l.* a year, and the residue being also invested, and there being six and a quarter years of the lease to run, two twenty-fifths should be sold every half-year to be paid to T. for her life, and also the dividends. Treacher, In re, 18 L. T. 110.

Petitioner was entitled for life under a marriage settlement to leaseholds, which had eight years to run. The trustees of the settlement had power to sell the leaseholds with his consent, which he declined to give. The leaseholds were taken under the powers of the Lands Clauses Act, and the proceeds of sale were paid into court and invested. The purchase-money was sufficient to provide an annuity for eight years of much larger amount than the net annual proceeds of the leaseholds:—Held, that the petitioner was entitled to receive an annuity of such an amount that the payment of it would exhaust the fund in the number of years which the leaseholds had to run. Askew v. Woodhead, 49 L. J., Ch. 320; 14 Ch. D. 27; 42 L. T. 567; 41 L. T. 670; 28 W. R. 874.

v. In other Cases.

Trustees.]—The court may, if it sees fit, make the dividends arising from an investment of a fund in court payable to one of several trustees. Coulson, In re, 17 L. T. 27.

Upon an investment of money paid into court in respect of lands taken by a company:—Ordered, that payment of the dividends might be made to the trustees "or either of them." Clinton, In re, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 601; 8 W. R. 492.

The dividends on the purchase-money of a settled estate sold under the Lands Clauses Act may be paid to the trustees for the time being or one of them. Foy, In re, 33 L. T. 161; 23 W. R. 744.

Mortgage—Possession.]—A railway company contracted to purchase lands of C., and paid the purchase-money into court under s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act. It afterwards appeared that C.'s title was derived under an indenture of mortgage, dated in 1814, he having been in possession ever since. C. petitioned for investment and payment of the dividends to him. The petition was granted, s. 112 not applying. Cook, In re, 8 L. T. 759; 11 W. R. 1015.

Commoners.]—Every freeman of Bedford was entitled, so long as he was resident there, to turn one head of stock annually upon certain commonable land. Non-resident freemen had no such right, but might obtain it by residing in Bedford. Part of the land was taken and compensation paid for the extinction of the commonable rights:—Held, that until reinvestment in land the money should be invested in stock and the dividends divided among such freemen as would have been entitled in each year to rights of common over the land. Nash v. Coombs, 37 L. J., Ch. 600; L. R. 6 Eq. 51; 16 W. R. 663.

d. Discharge of Debts or Incumbrances.

Inclosure Act.]—Under an inclosure act some lands were allotted to a rector, who had a power of selling to pay the expenses. Under a railway act compensation was made in respect of other lands of the rectory, and paid into court. The court sanctioned the application of the money in court to the payment of the expenses of the inclosure. Lockwood, Ex parte, 14 Beav. 158.

Incumbrance on other Lands.]—Under s. 42 of the Eastern Counties Railway Act (which is in the same terms as s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act), money paid for the purchase of land compulsorily taken by a company from a municipal corporation may be applied in paying off an incumbrance affecting other lands belonging to the same corporation. Cambridge Corporation, Ex parte, Eastern Counties Ry., In re, 6 Hare, 30; 5 Railw. Cas. 204. And see London Corporation, Ex parte, 37 L. J., Ch. 375; L. R. 5 Eq. 418; 17 L. T. 489; 16 W. R. 355.

Corporation Debts.]—Where lands of a corporation had been taken by government for fortification purposes under 43 Geo. 3, c. 55, and 45 Geo. 3, c. 95, and the compensation paid into court, to be disposed of under its order:—Held, that since the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92, the court has no authority to direct it to be applied in discharge of corporation debts incurred since the statute; although the dividends must be so applied, yet the capital is to be preserved. The trusts of the latter act apply to personal as well as real estate. Hythe Corporation, Ex parte, 4 Y. & Coll. 55.

Re-entry—Lease.]—The right of re-entry in default of payment of rent is an incumbrance on the leasehold interest compulsorily taken by a company. London Street, Greenwich, and L., C. & D. Ry., In re, 57 L. T. 673.

Existing Lease.]—The residue of a term of years is an incumbrance upon the inheritance, under s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act. The purchase-money of lands taken under the Lands Clauses Act may be applied in obtaining the surrender of a lease on the lands of the vendors. Sheffield Corporation, Ex parte, 21 Beav. 162; 25 L. J., Ch. 587; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 31; 4 W. R. 70. See Brasher's Trust, In re, 6 W. R. 406.

Mortgages of Tolls and Bonds.]—Money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 69, by a railway company, for the purchase of lands belonging to a corporation, was ordered to be applied in the payment off of mortgages of certain tolls and of bonds which had been given by the corporation for moneys borrowed under the provisions of s. 21 of the Baths and Wash Houses Act, 1846, and were payable out of the borough fund, which fund was largely composed of the rents and profits of the real estates of the corporation. Derby Municipal Estates, In re, 3 Ch. D. 289; 24 W. R. 729.

Re-instating Structures.]—Where expenses had been incurred by a tenant for life under a will in reinstating structures on a portion of the devised property, in conformity with the requirements of the Metropolitan Building Act, 1856, which authorises the commissioners to sell the structures if the owner refuses or neglects to pay the expenses of reinstatement:—Held, that these expenses constituted a charge on the property, and that their repayment was a proper application of the proceeds of other lands devised to the same uses, and taken under the Lands Clauses Act. Davies' Estate, In re, Crystal Palace and West End Ry., In re, 3 De G. & J. 144: 27 L. J., Ch. 712; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1029; 6 W. R. 844.

Rent-charge—Anticipating future Payments.]—A railway company took part of glebe lands which were subject to a yearly rent-charge created under the General Land Drainage and Improvement Company's Act, 1849, to repay money borrowed by a former rector for outlay on the glebe. The company paid the purchase-moneys into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the incumbrancer being willing to take a lump sum in lieu of the remaining payments of the rent-charge (eleven in number), the rector petitioned to have this sum paid off out of the fund in court, and to have the residue of the fund invested as if it were cash under the control of the court:—Held, that even supposing that the rector could himself have charged the inheritance of the glebe to provide for or to repay similar outlay, the court ought not to disturb the existing state of things and allow the fund in court to be applied in anticipating the future payments of the rent-charge. Kirksmeaton (Rector), Ex parte, 51 L. J., Ch. 581; 20 Ch. D. 203; 30 W. R. 539.

—— Deduction for, how calculated.]—A company having taken a small portion of an estate, the whole of which was subject to a rent-charge, and a reference having been directed to ascertain what would be a proper amount to be deducted from the purchase-money by way of compensation, but no reference as to indemnity:—Held, that regard being had to the provisions for indemnity thereinafter directed, a proper sum to deduct was a sum which bore such a proportion to the whole present worth of the rent-charge as the quantity of lands taken by the company bore to the whole lands out of which the rent-charge issued. The provision for indemnity then directed by the order was a covenant by the vendor to pay the annuity; and that all the other lands should, as between the vendor and purchaser, be solely chargeable therewith, in exoneration of the small parcel now sold. Powell v. South Wales Ry., 1 Jur. (N.S.) 773.

Committee releasing Rent-charge.]—Lands which were subject to a rent-charge in favour of a lunatic during his life were taken by a corporation acting under the Lands Clauses Act. The court authorised the committee of the lunatic to release the lands from the rent-charge upon the corporation purchasing in the name of the lunatic a government annuity of the same yearly amount for his life. Brewer, In re, 1 Ch. D. 409; 34 L. T. 466; 24 W. R. 465—C. A.

Payment off—No Deed acknowledged.]—On a petition by husband and wife and mortgagee, a small sum of money belonging to the wife was ordered to be paid out of court to the mortgagee, without requiring the wife to be examined in court, and without the mortgage deed being acknowledged. Pollock v. Birmingham, Wolverhampton and Stour Valley Ry., Clarke, In re, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 7; 11 L. T. 663; 13 W. R. 401.

—— Deposit—Other Lands of Mortgagor.]—When lands subject to a mortgage are taken compulsorily by a company, the court has jurisdiction to order the payment of the mortgage debt and costs out of the deposit paid in by the company, without reference to the fact that that deposit covered other lands of the same mortgagor not subject to the mortgage. Martin v. L., C. & D. Ry., 13 L. T. 355; 14 W. R. 24.

Mortgage Debt exceeding Compensation.]—A railway company having given notice of its intention to take a portion of premises upon which a business was being carried on, and of which mortgagees were in possession, the amount of compensation to be paid for the lands taken, and for the damage which might be sustained by reason of severance, or by reason of the execution of the works, or of the exercise of the parliamentary powers of the company, was submitted to arbitration, and the amount awarded was 11,950*l.*, of which the arbitrator certified that 2,800*l.* was given in respect of trade profits. The mortgagees, whose debt exceeded the entire amount of compensation, were held entitled to the whole sum. Pile v. Pile, Lambton, Ex parte, 45 L. J., Ch. 841; 3 Ch. D. 36; 35 L. T. 18; 24 W. R. 1003.

A baker, having mortgaged the leasehold shop in which he carried on business, was served with a notice to treat by a railway company who required the mortgaged premises. He sent in a claim for the lease and loss of profits. The gross amount of his claim was reduced by agreement between the parties:—Held, that as against the mortgagee, whose debt was greater than the amount thus agreed upon, the mortgagor was not entitled to any portion of the purchase-money. King v. Midland Ry., 17 W. R. 113.

e. Redemption of Land Tax.

Where an act of parliament enabling a railway company to purchase lands of corporations, tenants for life, &c., directed that the purchase-money should be applied in the redemption of the land tax upon other parts of the property unsold:—Held, that a tenant for life, who had redeemed the land tax before the passing of the act, might reimburse himself out of the proceeds of the lands purchased of him by the company. The costs of an application to the court, under such an act of parliament, to have the purchase-money applied in the redemption of the land tax, will be allowed out of the purchase-money, although the act only makes an express provision for such costs in cases where the money is to be laid out in the purchase of lands to be settled to the like uses. Northwick, Ex parte, 1 Y. & Coll. 166.

A railway company having taken a portion of glebe land, the court allowed the purchase-money to be invested, not only in other lands, but also in the drainage of the remaining glebe, and in the redemption of the land tax on the lands purchased. Queen Camel (Vicar), In re, 8 L. T. 233; 11 W. R. 503.

The application of the purchase-money of land taken by a railway company to the redemption of land tax is a reinvestment within the Lands Clauses Act, and the costs of it are chargeable on the company under s. 80; and the land being part of a charity estate, the petition must be sanctioned by the charity commissioners' certificate, and must be intituled in the matter of the statute of 52 Geo. 3, c. 101, must have the fiat of the attorney-general and be signed by two individual petitioners and not by a corporation and an individual. L., B. & S. C. Ry., In re, 18 Beav. 608.

f. Purchase of other Lands.

Where situate.]—Money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, was allowed to be re-invested in the purchase of land in the Isle of Man. Taylor's Estate, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 454.

Form of Order.]—Form of order made upon and practice relative to a petition for the investment in land of money which had been paid into court by a railway company for land taken by the company. Anon., 18 Jur. 742.

See form of order for the investment in lands of purchase-money paid for the lands of incapacitated persons, &c., sold to railway companies, or otherwise, and paid into court under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, &c. Anon., 10 Hare (App.), lxx.

The company are entitled to have inserted in that part of the order relating to costs, the words, "upon the approval and execution of the conveyance." Eton College, Ex parte, 7 W. R. 710.

Lands having been taken for the purposes of a railway company, and the money paid into court, and other lands being approved of to be purchased therewith, and to be settled to the like uses as the former lands:—Held, that only one application to the court would be necessary for carrying this purpose into effect; and that the draft conveyance, approved by the conveyancing counsel, being engrossed, with a blank for the date and other particulars of the order, the court would make one order directing the blank to be filled up and the contract to be completed. Caddick's Estate, In re, 9 Hare (App.), lxxxv.: 17 Jur. 84; 1 W. R. 12. Contra, Duckle, Ex parte, 16 Jur. 511.

A railway company took, under its compulsory powers, land which was settled in such a way that a father and a son had at that time between them the absolute beneficial interest. The purchase-money, as fixed by arbitration, having been paid into court:—Held, that the owners were entitled to have part of the fund paid out to them as absolutely entitled, and at the same time to have another part reinvested in the purchase of land, to be settled to somewhat different uses, at the expense of the company. Jones Trust Estate, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 190; 18 W. R. 312.

Settled Land Act—Effect of.]—Lands belonging absolutely to a charity were taken by a public body, and the purchase-money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act:—Held, that the purchase-money could be dealt with under the provisions of s. 32 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, as "money liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be made subject to a settlement." Byron's Charity, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 152; 23 Ch. D. 171; 48 L. T. 515; 31 W. R. 517.

Impressed with Character of Realty.]—Purchase-money paid into court by a railway company under s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, for land of which an infant is absolutely seised in fee, remains impressed with the character of real estate, and on the death of the infant descends to his heir-at-law. Kelland v. Fulford, 47 L. J., Ch. 94; 6 Ch. D. 491; 25 W. R. 606.

The word "settled," in s. 69, means simply "standing limited." Ib.

Reference as to Title.]—On a petition for the re-investment of 50*l.* paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act in land adjoining the settled estate, the court refused to dispense with the usual order of reference as to title, but gave leave to the parties to apply in chambers that the investigation of the title might be dispensed with. Blomfield, In re, 25 W. R. 37.

Land belonging to a vicarage was taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money paid into court to the account of the vicar. On a petition by the vicar stating an agreement to purchase land particularly mentioned in the agreement, and that the title had been approved of by a barrister, and that the title deeds had been examined and found correct, and praying for a conveyance and payment of the money out of court, without a reference to the Master, the court made the order. East Dereham (Vicar), Ex parte, 21 L. J., Ch. 677.

On petition for re-investment of purchase-money paid into court, and arising from settled lands brought under legislative powers, the court, in the first instance, only approves of the propriety of the proposed investment, and reserves the directions as to the completion of the purchase until the certificate of conveyancing counsel is obtained approving of the title. Martin's Estate, In re, 22 L. J., Ch. 248; 17 Jur. 30; 1 W. R. 45.

—— Death of Petitioner.]—On a petition under the Lands Clauses Act to sanction an investment in land, an order was made approving the investment, and directing a reference as to title. Before the order was fully worked out the petitioner died. On the application of his executors, it was ordered that the proceedings should be revived for their benefit. Youl, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 900; L. R. 16 Eq. 107.

Lunatic—Investment in Railway Stock.]—The purchase-money of a lunatic's land taken by a public body under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 69, was, under the circumstances, ordered to be invested in guaranteed railway stock; but the name of the public body was directed to be omitted from the title of the account, an investment of this nature being treated as equivalent to a re-investment in land. Buckingham, In re, 2 Ch. D. 690—C. A.

Paid to Tenant in Tail.]—Purchase-money, which ought to have been paid into court, was paid to the tenant in tail; on his petition, it was ordered to be invested in land. Abergavenny (Earl), Ex parte, 4 W. R. 315.

Sanction of Court.]—The court will not sanction a purchase of lands upon a surveyor's opinion as to their value. The facts themselves must be proved, and then the court will form its own conclusions. Kinsey, In re, 1 N. R. 303.

Reversion in Fee.]—Where leaseholds are taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money is paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, the court will sanction the investment of such purchase-money in the purchase of a reversion in fee of other leaseholds. Brasher's Trust, In re, 6 W. R. 406.

Rights of Common.]—Every freeman of Bedford was entitled, so long as he was resident there, to turn out one head of stock annually upon certain commonable land. Non-resident freemen had no such right over the land, but might obtain such right by coming to reside in Bedford. A railway company took part of the land, and the compensation money paid for the extinction of commonable rights was paid into court. In a suit for ascertaining the rights of all parties to the money:—Held, that the money ought to be reinvested in land to be held on the same trusts as that sold; and that, in the meantime, the same ought to be invested in stock, and the dividends divided among such freemen as would have been entitled in each year to rights of common over the land. Nash v. Coombs, 37 L. J., Ch. 600; L. R. 6 Eq. 51; 16 W. R. 663.

Copyholds.]—Re-investment in the purchase of copyholds of inheritance under special circumstances allowed. Oxford and Bletchley Junction Ry., Ex parte, Browne, In re, 6 Railw. Cas. 733; 16 Jur. 158.

Although s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act does not appear to authorise the investment of the purchase-money of a freehold estate on copyhold property, yet the court will, upon the report of the Master that such an investment is fit and proper, and for the benefit of the persons interested, sanction such an investment. Cann's Estate, In re, 19 L. J., Ch. 376; 15 Jur. 3.

Money paid into court by the Liverpool Dock Trustees in respect of leaseholds for years, taken by them under the powers of their act of parliament, ordered to be reinvested in the purchase of copyholds of inheritance. Liverpool Dock Acts, In re, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 202.

—— Enfranchisement.] — Upon a petition that money paid into court by a railway company upon the purchase of land might be applied for the purpose of enfranchising other property belonging to the vendor:—Held, that, under the Lands Clauses Act, an enfranchisement of copyholds was equivalent to reinvestment in other lands, and the court had power to direct such an application of the money, and the company must pay the costs incurred thereby. Dixon v. Jackson, 25 L. J., Ch. 588; 4 W. R. 450.

Money paid into court by a railway company, paid out and invested in the enfranchisement of copyholds under the 4 & 5 Vict., c. 35. Ground's Estate, In re, 1 W. R. 32.

There being two sets of trustees, one of freeholds and the other of copyholds, settled to the same trusts, the freeholds were sold to a company under the Lands Clauses Act:—Held, that the proceeds of that sale might be invested in procuring the enfranchisement of the copyholds. Cheshunt College, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 995; 3 W. R. 638.

The court has jurisdiction to make such order without the previous consent of the charity commissioners to the application. Ib.

—— Payment of Fine.]—A railway company having taken copyholds, and paid the purchase-money into court, an order was made for reinvestment of the money upon other copyholds, and for payment by the company of the costs, charges, and expenses incurred of or relating to the purchase and the costs of the conveyances, and of the application for reinvestment and consequent thereon:—Held, that the company was not liable to pay the fine upon the admission to the copyholds. Saurston (Vicar), Ex parte, Eastern Counties Ry., In re, 27 L. J., Ch. 755; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 473; 6 W. R. 492.

Equity of Redemption.]—The court will not under the power conferred by the Lands Clauses Act, s. 69, invest money lodged in court under that act in the purchase of an equity of redemption. Portadown, Dungannon, and Omagh Junction Ry., In re, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 368.

Therefore, an application by a tenant for life of lands held under a church lease to invest the purchase-money of part of the settled lands taken by a railway company in payment of part of the purchase-money of the reversion bought from the commissioners under the Irish Church Act, 1869, subject to a mortgage for the residue was refused. Ib.

Subject to Existing Mortgages.]—The tenant for life of certain settled estates, part of which had been purchased in 1849 by a railway company under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and which estates were subject to several mortgages, some created previously and some subsequently to the date of such purchase, applied by petition to have the purchase-money, which had been paid into court, reinvested in land:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction under the act to order the purchase-money of the lands in question to be reinvested in lands to be conveyed to the uses of the settlement, and to be subject to the existing mortgages; and that all the incumbrancers were entitled to notice of such re-investment; and that the railway company was liable to the entire costs and expenses of and incidental to the same. Eastern Counties Ry., In re, Peyton's Settlement, Ex parte, 4 W. R. 380.

Leaseholds.]—Freehold and copyhold hereditaments were taken by a railway company, and the money paid into court:—Held, that the money could not be re-invested in leasehold property. Macaulay, Ex parte, 23 L. J., Ch. 815; 2 W. R. 667.

Upon the petition of the trustees of a freehold chapel taken by a railway company the purchase-money was ordered to be invested in the purchase of a leasehold chapel in the vicinity, there being a difficulty in obtaining a suitable freehold site for a new chapel, and the price agreed to be paid for the leasehold chapel being less than its actual value. Rehoboth Chapel, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 375; L. R. 19 Eq. 180; 31 L. T. 571; 23 W. R. 405.

g. Buildings and Improvements.

Rectory-house.]—Money paid into court by a railway company in respect of glebe lands was ordered to be applied towards necessary additions and improvements of the rectory house; the fund to be paid out to the bishop's secretary, he undertaking to apply it. Claypole (Rector), Ex parte, 42 L. J., Ch. 776; L. R. 16 Eq. 574; 29 L. T. 51.

The purchase-money for glebe lands taken by a railway company may, with the consent of the bishop, be paid by the court to the rector for the building of a rectory-house. Bradfield St. Claire (Rector), Ex parte, 32 L. T. 248.

A rector made arrangements as to building a new rectory-house, which was estimated to cost 2,304*l.* That sum, less 140*l.*, having been obtained, but several hundred pounds being still unspent, on the application of the rector:—Held, that 80*l.*, which had been paid in under the Lands Clauses Act as the purchase-money of part of the glebe, might be appropriated towards the expenses still to be incurred in building. Hartington (Rector), Ex parte, 23 W. R. 484.

Purchase-money for glebe lands taken by a railway company allowed to be applied in rebuilding rectory. Louth and East Coast Ry., In re, Grimoldby (Rector), Ex parte, 2 Ch. D. 225; 24 W. R. 723.

Vicarage.]—Where a vicar entered into an agreement for the purchase of a house for a vicarage which, in its then present state, was unsuitable for such a purpose, the court sanctioned the agreement and the expenditure in making the house suitable for a vicarage of purchase-money of a portion of the churchyard, invested under a special act, on the ground that the arrangement was practically the purchase of a house suitable for a vicarage. Nether Stowey Vicarage, In re (L. R. 17 Eq. 156), distinguished. Sewers Commissioners and St. Botolph, Aldgate (Vicar), Ex parte, 63 L. J., Ch. 862; [1894] 3 Ch. 544; 8 R. 649.

—— Under 42 Geo. 3, c. 116, s. 100.]—By 42 Geo. 3, c. 116, s. 100, surplus stock in court arising from the sale of land for the redemption of land tax may be laid out in manors, messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, to be settled and conveyed to like uses to those upon which the lands taken were settled. A petition by the vicar for the repayment to him out of the fund in court of money disbursed by him for repairs to the vicarage house, was dismissed as an unauthorised investment under the act, the decisions allowing such an investment under the Lands Clauses Act not being held binding on the court in a case under that act. Nether Stowey (Vicarage), In re, L. R. 17 Eq. 156; 29 L. T. 604; 22 W. R. 180.

Repair of Church.]—A petition was presented by the parson, churchwardens, and parishioners of a certain parish for payment out of court to them of 514*l.*, which had been paid in by the respondents, the commissioners of sewers, in respect of certain lands taken by them from the petitioners. The petitioners proposed to expend 1,000*l.* in rebuilding the north porch of the parish church, and they petitioned that the 514*l.* should be paid out to them upon their undertaking to apply that sum in rebuilding the porch. The petitioners had no power of sale, and the consent of the charity commissioners to the application had not been obtained. The respondents did not oppose the application:—Held, that the 514*l.* might be paid out to the petitioners on the chief clerk's certificate that at least that sum had been spent in the rebuilding. St. Alphege (Parson), In re, 55 L. T. 314.

—— Queen Anne's Bounty.]—Purchase-money for glebe lands taken by a railway company not allowed to be applied in repairing the chancel or in repayment of money borrowed from Queen Anne's Bounty. Grimoldby (Rector), Ex parte, Louth and East Coast Ry., In re, 2 Ch. D. 225; 24 W. R. 723.

Farm Buildings.]—When it is shewn to be beneficial, the court will, under the Lands Clauses Act s. 69, order the purchase-money of a portion of glebe land taken under the act to be laid out in the erection of farm buildings on the remainder. Shipton-under-Wychwood (Rector), Ex parte, 19 W. R. 549.

When it will be a permanent and beneficial improvement, the court will sanction the application of part of the purchase-money of glebe lands, taken by a railway company, in defraying part of the cost of erecting farm buildings on the remainder. Gamston (Rector), Ex parte, 1 Ch. D. 477; 33 L. T. 803; 24 W. R. 359.

On Settled Estate.]—Purchase-money of part of a settled estate paid in under the Lands Clauses Act ordered to be applied towards the cost of lateral additions to a house, part of the settled estate. Speer, In re, 3 Ch. D. 262; 24 W. R. 880.

The tenant for life being the proper person to keep the mansion house in repair, even though he was not accountable for dilapidations, expenditure on repairs of the mansion house ought not to be paid out of the fund in court. Leigh's Estate, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 687; L. R. 6 Ch. 887; 25 L. T. 644; 19 W. R. 1105.

The erection of new buildings upon the estate is in substance the same thing as the purchase of buildings upon other land, a fund in court may therefore be applied in paying the expense of such erection, but that it ought not to be so applied without the consent of the remaindermen. Ib.

Money which, under the provisions of a deed, will, or private estate act, is to be invested in the purchase of lands, as well as money so to be invested by virtue of the Lands Clauses Act, will in a proper case be ordered by the court to be employed in erecting new buildings on land already settled to the same uses. But the court will not sanction its being laid out in repairs, or in permanent improvements not placing new buildings on the land. Drake v. Trefusis, L. R. 10 Ch. 364; 33 L. T. 85; 23 W. R. 762.

A railway company having taken part of a settled estate, paid in the compensation money under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 69, and constructed their line, and the effect of such construction having been to divert business from certain trade buildings on another part of the estate, and to render them useless for trade purposes; also to expose to risk from fire a stack-yard and farm buildings, and render them uninsurable:—Held, that sufficient special circumstances had been shewn to enable the court to lay out part of the compensation money in taking down the trade buildings and erecting dwelling-houses on their site; and in removing the stack-yard, and roofing the farm buildings with slate or tile instead of thatch. Johnson, In re, L. R. 8 Eq. 348.

A railway having severed the arable lands from the farm buildings:—Held, that the compensation-money might be applied in the erection of new farm buildings. Milward, Ex parte, Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry., In re, 27 Beav. 571; 29 L. J., Ch. 245; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 478; 1 L. T. 153.

Where a small sum, the price of land, had been paid into court by a railway company, to be laid out in land to be settled to like uses, the court, upon the report of the master, allowed it to be laid out in new erections. Shaw, Ex parte, 4 Y. & Coll. 506; 10 L. J., Ex. Eq. 92. S. P., Wight's Estates, In re, 6 W. R. 718. Wigan Glebe, In re, 3 W. R. 41.

A railway company took land settled to uses, and paid the purchase-money into court under the Lands Clauses Act. Certain houses which were settled to the same uses were condemned by the commissioners acting under the Metropolitan Building Act, 1856, s. 74, and the houses were rebuilt by the tenant for life, more money being expended than the money paid in by the company. A petition was presented by the tenant for life under s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, for payment of the money paid in part payment of the expenses of rebuilding:—Held, that the case came within the spirit of s. 69, and the court made the order. Davies' Estate, In re, Crystal Palace and West End Ry., In re, 3 De G. & J. 144; 27 L. J., Ch. 712; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1029; 6 W. R. 844.

Where an act of a company provided that the money paid into court should be applied in the redemption of the land tax, or in the discharge of incumbrances affecting the lands taken by the company, or other lands settled or to be settled to the same uses as directed by the testator, the court refused to make any order on a petition presented by all the parties interested in the fund, praying that a portion of the residue of it might be applied in the erection of a new farm-house and buildings on an estate which had been purchased with the proceeds of a portion of the fund. Rudyerd, In re, 2 Giff. 394; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 816; 3 L. T. 232.

Where a piece of land had been taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money paid into court, the court allowed the money to be laid out in building cottages on another part of the estate which was lying waste and unproductive; but in such a case no part of the money will be paid out till the buildings are completed. Dummer, In re, 2 De G. J. & S. 15; 34 L. J., Ch. 496; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 615; 12 L. T. 626; 13 W. R. 908.

Repairs to Copyhold House.]—Under a will A. was tenant for life of a copyhold house and two leasehold houses. The latter having been taken under the Lands Clauses Act, the purchase-money was paid into court under s. 69. The trustee of the will having entered into a contract for putting the copyhold house into permanent repair, and there being no trust funds in hand out of which the expense could be defrayed, the court, upon a petition for reinvestment presented by the tenant for life and the trustee, and without requiring service on the remaindermen, ordered the contract price of the repairs to be paid to the trustee out of the fund in court, and the remainder to be invested in consols and the dividends paid to the trustee. Aldred's Estate, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 942; 21 Ch. D. 228; 46 L. T. 379; 30 W. R. 777.

Expenditure already Incurred.]—A tenant for life of settled estates petitioned for the application of purchase-money paid into court under a local government act, which incorporated the Lands Clauses Act, in reimbursing him for expenditure incurred in permanent improvements before the purchase was made or contemplated:—Held, that he had incurred the expenditure without expectation of having it repaid, and could not take advantage of the money which had unexpectedly come in. Stock's Devised Estates, In re, 42 L. T. 46.

In 1890 a rector rebuilt the rectory at a time when considerable repairs would otherwise have been necessary. In 1893 some of the glebe was acquired by the Manchester Ship Canal Co., and the purchase-money paid into court. Part of the expenses of rebuilding the rectory was still unpaid. On a petition by the rector:—Held, that the sum remaining due could not be paid out of the fund in court. Newton Heath (Rector), Ex parte, 44 W. R. 645.

A railway company took part of the glebe land belonging to a rectory. The patron of the living and the bishop agreed with the rector that the purchase-money, when paid by the company, should be applied in paying part of the expense of rebuilding the rectory house, which was in a ruinous condition, the remainder of the money required being borrowed from Queen Anne's Bounty. The company neglected for some years to pay the money, and in order to complete the rebuilding the rector advanced a sum equal to the purchase-money himself. The company having paid the purchase-money, the rector, the patron and the bishop petitioned that it might be paid to the rector to recoup his advance:—Held, that the court had no power under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 69, to direct such an application of the money. Williams v. Aylesbury and Buckingham Ry., 43 L. J., Ch. 825; L. R. 9 Ch. 684; 31 L. T. 521.

On a petition by a tenant for life, for the reinvestment of purchase-money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, the court will not allow any of the fund to be applied in recouping the tenant for life what he has already expended, unless such expenditure was properly a charge on the estate. Leigh's Estate, In re, supra.

A railway company took lands belonging to parties for life and in remainder under a will, and paid the purchase-money into court. After contract and before payment in, buildings were erected on the remaining land, and all parties entitled petitioned for payment out to defray the expense of such erections. On an affidavit that a great benefit would accrue to the estate by expending in building instead of investing in the funds, an order for payment out was made. Partington, In re, 1 N. R. 177; 7 L. T. 522; 11 W. R. 160.

Part of a fund in court, the proceeds of sale of a portion of glebe land to a railway company, ordered to be paid to the rector towards recouping past outlay in the erection of certain buildings on a farm forming part of the glebe, but only on evidence being produced to shew that the buildings formed a permanent and valuable improvement. Holywell - cum - Needingworth (Rector), Ex parte, 27 W. R. 707.

Special Circumstances—Municipal Offices.]—An order for the application to building purposes of the purchase-money of land taken under the Lands Clauses Act will not be made except under special circumstances. Liverpool Corporation, Ex parte, 35 L. J., Ch. 655; L. R. 1 Ch. 596; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 720; 14 L. T. 785; 14 W. R. 906.

A corporation was authorised by statute to borrow money for the erection of municipal offices on the security of rates. Land belonging to it having been taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money paid into court, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 69, a petition by the corporation for the payment out of court of this fund to be applied in the erection of the municipal offices was refused. Ib.

Making Roads.]—The court has not jurisdiction on the application of a tenant for life of land taken by a public company, to pay him the purchase-money lodged in court, on an undertaking by him to lay it out in making roads on the property, for the purpose of improving it and increasing the value of the inheritance. Belfast Water Commissioners, In re, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 63.

A railway company agreed to pay a landowner, tenant for life, a sum of money for the benefit of him or other the owner for the time being, for indemnifying him from the expenses of making a new road, etc., and as a compensation for the annoyance which he or such other owner as aforesaid might sustain in consequence of the construction of the railway; and the company agreed to pay a further sum as the price of the land taken. Both sums were paid into court. The application of the tenant for life for the absolute payment to him of the first sum refused; the costs of the roads, &c., to be paid out of it, and the rest invested. Marlborough's (Duke) Estates, In re, 13 Jur. 738.

Drainage.]—A company having taken part of some glebe land the court allowed part of the purchase money to be invested in the drainage of the remaining glebe. Queen Camel (Vicar), In re, 8 L. T. 233; 11 W. R. 503.

Payment out of Small Sum.]—Where a sum of 34*l.* had been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, payment out was directed to a tenant for life, he undertaking to expend the same in lasting improvements. Kells Union, In re, Smith, Ex parte, 21 L. R., Ir. 346.

A railway company took land which was settled on A. for life, with remainders over. The purchase-money was paid into court. An agreement for investing this sum, with the exception of 30*l.* was approved. The 30*l.* was ordered to be paid to A., he undertaking to lay it out in lasting improvements. Barrett, Ex parte, 19 L. J., Ch. 415; 15 Jur. 3. S. P., Hitchin's Estate, In re, 1 W. R. 505.

Tenant for life allowed to receive a sum of 220*l.* paid into court in respect of a portion of the estate purchased by a railway company, upon her undertaking to apply the money towards payment of the expenses of building certain cottages upon the estate and to make up the deficiency (80*l.*) herself. Wright's Devised Estates, In re, 6 W. R. 718.

h. Payment Out to Persons Absolutely Entitled.

i. In General.

What is.]—A transfer from one account in court to another is payment out of court within the meaning of the act. Melling v. Bird, infra.

Who may Apply.]—Under a private act of parliament, money to be paid to certain parties upon petition to the court: Lord Chancellor refused to make an order to pay the money to persons deriving title from the original parties, and ordered them to file a bill. King, Ex parte, 2 Bro. C. C. 158.

Where an estate is directed to be sold, and the proceeds to be distributed, the persons entitled to receive the proceeds may petition for the payment out of money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act as purchase-money for part of the estate. Melling v. Bird, 22 L. J., Ch. 599; 17 Jur. 155; 1 W. R. 219.

Order to Pay Direct.]—A railway company was ordered to pay money to vendors under a decree for specific performance; they paid the money into court instead. On the petition of the vendors, the money was paid out to them. Galliers v. Metropolitan Ry., 40 L. J., Ch. 544; L. R. 11 Eq. 410; 19 W. R. 795.

Part of Sum.]—A railway company took, under its compulsory powers, land which was settled in such a way that a father and a son had at that time between them the absolute beneficial interest. The purchase-money, as fixed by arbitration, having been paid into court:—Held, that the owners were entitled to have part of the fund paid out to them as absolutely entitled, and at the same time to have another part reinvested in the purchase of land, to be settled to somewhat different uses, at the expense of the company. Jones Trust Estate, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 190; 18 W. R. 312.

Pre-emption — Excess Price — Recouping Estate.]—A right of pre-emption given by will is not extinguished by reason of the land to which such right relates having been purchased by a railway company, prior to the period of the right accruing, under the compulsory powers of an act of parliament passed after the death of the testator. A testator, by will, gave real estate to his wife for life, and after her death he directed his trustees to sell the same, and to divide the proceeds among his children; but as to a portion of such real estate, he gave to one of his sons a right of purchasing such portion at a specified sum. The testator having died, a railway company, during the life of his widow, and under the compulsory powers of an act of parliament passed after his death, purchased the portion of the real estate which the son had a right of purchasing, and paid a higher price for the same than the price at which the son had a right of purchasing it:—Held, that the son was entitled to the purchase-money paid by the company, on paying to the testator's personal estate the sum specified in his will. Cant, In re, 4 De G. & J. 503; 29 L. J., Ch. 119; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 183; 7 W. R. 624.

Money inapplicable to Statutory Purposes.]—The Metropolitan Board of Works in the exercise of compulsory powers purchased land of the Chelsea Waterworks Company, which was not superfluous land, and paid the purchase-money into court. On petition to pay the money out to the waterworks company:—Held, that the money was rightly paid into court; and, that inasmuch as the money could not be applied to any of the purposes mentioned in s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the waterworks company was absolutely entitled to the money. Chelsea Waterworks Co., In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 640; 56 L. T. 421.

Attachment.]—Semble, the holder of a garnishee order has no claim to money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act. Howell v. Metropolitan District Ry., 51 L. J., Ch. 158; 19 Ch. D. 508; 45 L. T. 707; 30 W. R. 100.

Adverse Claimants—Claim of the Crown.]—A railway company, under the powers of its act, gave notice to a lord of the manor to take a piece of land on the seashore, which he claimed as part of the waste of his manor. The purchase-money was assessed by arbitration, but an adverse claim having been made by the Crown, the company paid the purchase-money into court under s. 76 of the Lands Clauses Act. The Crown filed an information against the lord of the manor claiming the land, together with other land, as part of the foreshore. The lord of the manor having filed a petition for payment of the purchase-money to him:—Held, that as the Crown could not be brought before the court under the Lands Clauses Act to contest the claim of the petitioner, the petition ought to stand over till the information had been heard. Lowestoft Manor, In re, Reeve, Ex parte, 52 L. J., Ch. 912; 24 Ch. D. 253; 49 L. T. 523; 32 W. R. 809—C. A.

Quære, as to the course which ought to have been pursued if the rival claimant had been a subject. Ib.

Tenant's Interest as long as Landlord's.]—A. agreed, in writing, to let to B. premises at a rent of 36*l.*, payable quarterly; and not to raise the rent or give B. notice to quit so long as he continued to pay the rent when due. A., who had only a leasehold interest to expire in 1881, had also agreed verbally with B. to let him remain in the premises for such term of years, not exceeding A.'s term therein, as B. might desire to continue tenant. A railway company contracted to purchase the interest of B. in the premises, which he described as "held for any term at tenant's option, but not beyond the term and interest of A., which term will expire in 1881." The company disputed B.'s title to the interest described, and paid the purchase-money into court:—Held, that the relation of landlord and tenant made B. a purchaser for valuable consideration to the extent of his lease; that the Statute of Frauds was no bar in equity to B.'s claim; that B. was not a mere tenant from year to year, but had a right to retain possession as long as his landlord's interest existed, and to enforce that right in equity; and that he was entitled to the purchase-money. East London Ry., Ex parte, King, In re, L. R. 16 Eq. 521; 29 L. T. 288; 21 W. R. 881.

Charity Property.]—A petition was presented by a company, as governors of a charity, for payment out of the sum of 1,000*l.* which had been paid into court to the account of the company, under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, in respect of land taken for the purposes of a railway. The land formed part of an estate belonging to the company, the rentals and profits whereof were applied for the purposes of the charity. The part of the estate which remained in the possession of the company was led by them on a building lease, and the company had, out of moneys in their hands representing income of the charity, expended 1,000*l.* in enabling the builder to improve the lands comprised in the building lease by buying up certain rights over roads claimed by a neighbouring landowner. This expenditure had been sanctioned by the charity commissioners, and they approved the present application, although they gave no express consent, because the moneys were under the control of the court:—Held, that the charity commissioners had practically authorised this outlay as capital expenditure; and that the company were entitled to have the money paid out, as being absolutely entitled thereto. Haberdashers' Co., Ex parte, 55 L. T. 758.

Purchase-money of charity property purchased by a railway company ordered to be paid to the trustees of the charity. Tid St. Giles' Charity, Ex parte, 17 W. R. 758.

A fund in court, paid in under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, as the price of charity land, may be paid out to the trustees of the charity, as being persons absolutely entitled thereto. Spurstowe's Charity, In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 512; L. R. 18 Eq. 279; 30 L. T. 355; 22 W. R. 566.

The purchase-money for land, the property of a charity, taken under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, had been paid into court, and invested in government securities. A petition was now presented by the trustees of the charity for the transfer of the fund to the account of "The Official Trustees of Charitable Funds":—Held, that this must be considered as a petition for payment of money out of court; and, therefore, that the parties taking the land must pay the costs of the petition. Bristol Free Grammar School, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 317.

Land belonging to a charity was taken by a corporation under the Lands Clauses Act, and the purchase-money paid into court. The charity commissioners having approved a scheme for the reinvestment of the purchase-money in land, and directed that the money when paid out to the official trustee of charity funds should be applied in the proposed purchase, the trustees of the charity petitioned for the transfer of the fund in court to the official trustee, and that the costs, including the costs of reinvestment, might be paid by the corporation:—Held, that payment to the official trustee was payment to a person absolutely entitled, and the corporation were not liable to pay any further costs. Bishop Monk's Horfield Trusts, In re, 43 L. T. 793; 29 W. R. 462.

Church Trustees—Burial Ground.]—The fee-simple of a burial ground, since closed by order in council, was vested in the vicar and churchwardens of the parish, and the burial fees were directed to be received by the churchwardens, and by them handed over to a body styled "the church trustees." A portion of the burial ground having been required by a railway company for the purposes of their act, and the purchase-money having been directed to be invested and accumulated, the question was who was entitled to the fund and its accumulations:—Held, that the church trustees were entitled. St. Pancras Burial Ground, In re, 15 W. R. 150.

iv. Tenant in Tail (Disentailing Deed).

Rights.]—Under s. 71 of the Lands Clauses (Scotland) Act, a person who has an entailed estate can only take from a company such part of an agreed price for his own personal use as the Court of Session, or an independent third person, shall think reasonable. Scottish North Eastern Ry. v. Stewart, 3 Macq. H. L. 382; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 607; 7 W. R. 458.

Disentailing Deed—Execution of.]—A fund in court representing land taken by a railway company under its compulsory powers will not be paid out to a tenant in tail without a disentailing deed having been executed. Butler, In re, L. R. 16 Eq. 479.

When a fund paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is claimed on petition by a person who would have been the tenant in tail of the land represented by the fund, it is unnecessary for him to execute a disentailing deed as a condition of having the fund paid out to him. Row, In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 347; L. R. 17 Eq. 300; 29 L. T. 824. S. P., Watson, In re, 4 N. R. 528—L.JJ.

A fund in court representing land taken by a canal company, under the powers of its special act, will not be paid out to a tenant in tail without a disentailing deed having been executed. Norcop, In re, 31 L. T. 85.

A railway company having purchased settled land, the tenant for life conveyed to them under their act, and he and the tenant in tail applied to draw the purchase-money out of the court. No disentailing deed had been executed:—Held, that the money was to be considered as bound by the limitations affecting the land, and to be dealt with as subject to be invested in lands to be settled to the same uses as the sold lands, and that a disentailing deed was necessary to enable the parties to draw the money. Great Southern and Western Ry., In re, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 482.

The court will not pay out funds the produce of lands taken by a railway company under compulsory powers to a tenant in tail in possession, or to a tenant for life and tenant in tail in remainder, without the production of a disentailing deed duly enrolled. Limerick and Ennis Ry., In re, Smyth, Ex parte, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 66.

The court, without requiring a disentailing deed to be executed, will pay out to a tenant in tail in possession money lodged in court by a railway company for the purchase of lands. Mounsell, Ex parte, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 32.

A fund which represented the interest of a tenant in tail in remainder in land taken by a railway company ordered to be paid out of court to the tenant in tail in remainder with the consent of the tenant for life, without requiring a disentailing deed. L. & N. W. Ry., Ex parte, Holden, In re, 1 Hem. & M. 445; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 308.

Where there was a fund under 200*l.* in court, the proceeds of land, of which a petitioner, who had just attained twenty-one, was tenant in tail, the court, though no disentailing deed had been executed by the petitioner, made an order for the payment of the fund to him. Sowry v. Sowry, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 337; 8 W. R. 339.

A fund in court produced by a portion of land taken by a railway company will be paid to the tenant in tail, without his being required to execute a disentailing deed. S. E. Ry., In re, 30 Beav. 215; 30 L. J., Ch. 602; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 890; 9 W. R. 404.

Where a tenant in tail has become absolutely entitled to a share of a fund in court, it will in many cases be ordered to be paid out without requiring the execution of a disentailing deed. This practice does not depend only on the smallness of the fund. Nottley v. Palmer, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 968; 13 L. T. 647; 14 W. R. 170.

The court will order small sums of money, paid into court as the purchase-money of lands taken under the Lands Clauses Act, to be paid out to the tenant in tail of the lands without requiring a disentailing deed. Watson, In re, 10 Jur (N.S.) 1011.

Advances to.]—Case in which the court will order advances out of capital to be made to their mother for the maintenance of children, themselves entitled to the income, and as tenants in tail, to the capital. Nottley v. Palmer, supra.

v. Persons having Limited Interests.

Tenant for Life.]—Where it was probable that, after payment of a sum out of court which had been paid in by a railway company, the balance left would be less than 20*l.*, the court ordered the balance, if less than 20*l.*, to be paid to the tenant for life. Egremont (Lord), In re, 12 Jur. 618.

Where money has been paid into court in respect of lands taken by the company from persons under disability, and, with the exception of a small surplus, has been afterwards laid out in the purchase of lands to be settled to the same uses, if such surplus is under 20*l.*, the court will allow it to be paid to the tenant for life, but not otherwise. Bateman's Estate, In re, 21 L. J., Ch. 691.

On a purchase by a railway company of lands from a tenant for life in possession, the court ordered part of the purchase-money to be paid to the tenant for life by way of compensation for the injury and inconvenience which he had sustained. Collis, In re, 14 L. T. 352.

On the death of the last cestui que vie of a renewable leasehold, the tenant for life, who had been in receipt of the whole income, and afterwards of the dividends of the compensation money paid by a railway company, was held entitled to the corpus of the compensation money, but without prejudice to any right of the remainderman to relief in respect of the non-renewal of the lease, according to the directions of the testator, under whose will they and the tenant for life were entitled. Beaufoy's Estate, In re, 1 Sm. & G. 20; 16 Jur. 1084.

By the Lands Clauses Act, s. 73, a tenant for life is forbidden to take for his own use money which may be contracted to be paid, either in consideration of his not opposing a bill, or for any special damage to be done to himself with reference to the severance of the estate; and it is for the Court of Chancery to determine what portion of such money is to be assigned to the tenant for life, in respect of his own personal grievance. But the tenant for life is still perfectly competent at law to enter into a contract for the whole estate, for the whole damage by severance, and for the withdrawal of opposition to a bill as the condition of the contract that may be entered into. Taylor v. Chichester and Midhurst Ry., 39 L. J., Ex. 217; L. R. 4 H. L. 628; 23 L. T. 657.

A. was entitled as tenant for life to leasehold premises, where she carried on the business of a hotel-keeper, with remainder to B. By deed dated the 11th October, 1864, B., in consideration of 107*l.* advanced to him, assigned all his interest in the premises to C., with a proviso that, in case B. or any of his children, within three years after the accrual of B.'s title, should be desirous of repurchasing, C. would re-assign the premises on payment of the said sum of 107*l.* and interest at 6 per cent. The South City Market Company, being a public body, acting under the powers of their act, and the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the Railway Clauses Act, 1851, required these leasehold premises. The arbitrator awarded a sum of 1,251*l.*, of which sum 451*l.* was stated by the award to be for the purchase of the interest of A. and D. (in whom C.'s interest under the deed of the 11th October, 1864, was then vested) as lessees, and A. as occupier, and 800*l.* awarded to the same persons under the heading "Compensation for severance or other injury." A. and D. traversed the award, and a consent between the company and A. and D. (but to which the representatives of B., who was then deceased, were not parties), was made a rule of the Queen's Bench Division, by which the award was increased by a sum of 1,249*l.* of which sum 800*l.* was stated by the consent order to be for trade loss in respect of the property, and the consent order further directed that of the sum of 1,251*l.* lodged by the company, 901*l.* should be dealt with as representing the leasehold interest in the premises, and the residue, 350*l.*, together with the further sum of 1,249*l.*, payable by the company, should be paid to A. in respect of her trade disturbance in the premises. A. having claimed the whole of the 800*l.*, and 799*l.* increase thereon, under the consent order:—Held, that the sum of 800*l.* should (under the circumstances) be deemed part of the compensation for taking of the premises and not in respect of any personal grievance of A., and that A. (under the circumstances of the case) was entitled to the 799*l.* absolutely. South City Market Co., In re, Bergin, Ex parte, 13 L. R., Ir. 245.

A tenant for life can only claim that benefit from compensation money in respect of lands taken by a company, to which he is legally entitled, and any additional compensation money, though paid by the company in recognition of a right claimed by tenant for life, must, if such right be not sanctioned by law, enure for the benefit of the estate. Wilson, In re, 32 L. J., Ch. 191; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1043; 7 L. T. 772; 11 W. R. 294.

A railway company agreed to pay a landowner, tenant for life, a sum of money for the benefit of him or other the owner for the time being, for indemnifying him from the expenses of making a new road, &c., and as a compensation for the annoyance which he or such other owner as aforesaid might sustain in consequence of the construction of the railway; and the company agreed to pay a further sum as the price of the land taken. Both sums were paid into court. The application of the tenant for life for the absolute payment to him of the first sum refused; the costs of the road, &c., to be paid out of it, and the rest invested. Marlborough's (Duke) Estates, In re, 13 Jur. 738.

—— Minerals.]—A tenant for life without impeachment of waste is not entitled to an apportioned part of the compensation money paid into court by a railway company under s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, in respect of unworked mines and minerals lying under or adjacent to a railway, constructed on land conveyed to the company by the tenant for life under s. 7 of the act, even though the bulk of the minerals could have been, in all probability, worked out during his life. Robinson's Settlement Trusts, In re, 60 L. J., Ch. 776; [1891] 3 Ch. 129; 65 L. T. 244; 39 W. R. 632.

Minerals were devised on trust for B. for life without impeachment of waste, with remainder on trust for the defendant for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainders over. The minerals were leased by the testator. A railway passed over a portion of the lands under which they lay, and after the death of B. the lessee gave the railway company notice of his desire to work the minerals lying under and adjoining a portion of the railway. The company gave a counter-notice that these minerals were required for the support of the railway, and ultimately paid compensation money, part of which was apportioned as paid in respect of the lessor's interest:—Held, that as the minerals in respect of which the compensation money had been paid were not of such extent that they could not possibly have been got during the life of the existing tenant for life, the defendant, as such tenant for life, was entitled to such apportioned part of the compensation money under s. 74 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Barrington, In re, Gamlen v. Lyon, 56 L. J., Ch. 175; 33 Ch. D. 523; 55 L. T. 87; 35 W. R. 164.

Rector.]—A sum of money, part of a larger sum paid by a railway company for glebe land, ordered to be paid to the rector for the time being for his own use. Little Sleeping (Rector), Ex parte, East Lincolnshire Ry., In re, 5 Railw. Cas. 207.

Dowress.]—When land belonging to an infant, subject to his mother's right of dower, was taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money, as determined by two valuers, was paid into court :—Held, that the dowress was entitled to have the value of her right of dower, as determined by the valuers, paid to her out of the fund in court. Hall's Estate, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 392 ; L. R. 9 Eq. 179.

Lord of Manor—Commonable Land.]—By an inclosure act commissioners were required to set out and allot unto the lord of the manor in which the waste grounds were situated in trust for the occupiers for the time being of certain cottages in lieu of their rights or pretended rights of cutting turves, so much of the waste grounds as they (the commissioners) should think proper for a turf common. A portion of this turf common so set out by the commissioners was taken by a railway company :—Held, that the lord of the manor had not been divested of his rights as legal owner of the land by the inclosure act, and that he was entitled to such portion of the purchase-money as represented the value of the soil of the land taken. Att.-Gen. v. Meyrick, 62 L. J., Ch. 313 ; [1893] A. C. 1 ; 1 R. 54 ; 68 L. T. 174 ; 57 J. P. 212—H. L. (E.)

vi. Where Possessory Title.

Adverse Possession.]—A party took possession in 1850 of a vacant piece of land and continued in uninterrupted possession of it until 1869, when it was taken by a railway company and the purchase-money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 79. In 1871 he presented a petition for the payment out of court to him of the purchase-money, as being the person entitled to the land in respect of which the purchase-money had been paid into court :—Held, that his inchoate title to the land having been interrupted by the parliamentary rights of the company, he had no title to the purchase-money. Hollingsworth, Ex parte, 24 L. T. 347 ; 19 W. R. 580.

When the occupant of land taken by a railway company under the Lands Clauses Act had a possession which would have ripened into a title by adverse possession, but for the dealings with the company, the court allowed the purchase-money to be paid to such occupant. Evans, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 357—L.JJ.

A person shewing title by adverse possession for twenty-six years after the expiration of a term for 192 years to land taken under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, will, in the absence of any claim by, or evidence of the existence of, the reversioner, be deemed to be the owner of the land, and entitled to the purchase-money under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 79. Chamberlain, Ex parte, 49 L. J., Ch. 354 ; 14 Ch. D. 323 ; 42 L. T. 358 ; 28 W. R. 565.

In 1865 a house in the possession of the plaintiff, who was the owner thereof for the residue of a long term of years expiring in 1878, was compulsorily taken by the defendants under the Lands Clauses Act. The plaintiff claimed compensation on the footing of being the absolute owner, it not being known who was the reversioner, and a sum representing the reversion was paid into court without prejudice to the plaintiff's claim. More than twelve years after the expiration of the term, application was made by a person claiming under the plaintiff for payment of the fund in court :—Held, that as the plaintiff never was in possession as owner of the reversion, the application failed. Chamberlain, Ex parte (14 Ch. D. 323) doubted. Gedye v. Public Works Commissioners, 60 L. J., Ch. 587 ; [1891] 2 Ch. 630 ; 65 L. T. 359 ; 39 W. R. 598—C. A.

A railway company agreed to purchase for 600*l.* the fee-simple of lands, of which W. was the true owner, from H., who was in possession of them. Afterwards, finding that H. had only a possessory title of nineteen and a half years, they paid the 600*l.* into court to the account of the party interested therein, took possession, and executed a deed-poll under s. 77 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, reciting their desire that the land should vest in them for all the estate of H., and purporting to vest in themselves the fee-simple of the lands. No claim was made on behalf of W. either to the land or to the purchase-money until after the expiration of twenty years from the time when H. had taken possession. Upon petition by persons claiming under H. for payment out to them of the 600*l.* in court :—Held, as against the representative of W., that they were entitled to the 600*l.*, as being the money which the company had contracted to pay for the purchase of H.'s interest in the lands. Winder, Ex parte and In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 572 ; 6 Ch. D. 696 ; 25 W. R. 768.

A railway company contracted to purchase lands of C., and paid the purchase-money into court under s. 69 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18. It afterwards appeared that C.'s title was derived under an indenture of mortgage, dated in 1814, he having been in possession ever since. C. petitioned for investment and payment of the dividends to him. The petition was granted, s. 112 not applying. Cook, In re, 8 L. T. 759 ; 11 W. R. 1015.

Money lodged in court under the Lands Clauses Act was paid out on a title based on continued possession by a tenant without payment of rent for fifteen years after the expiration of his own and the next superior interest. Forde, Ex parte, Blackrock Commissioners, In re, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 156.

—— Service on Landowner—Lapse of Time.]—In 1867 a railway company paid a deposit into court under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, in respect of the interest of a tenant for life in certain settled lands required for their undertaking, and took possession of their lands. Shortly afterwards the company purchased the fee-simple, of the lands from the trustees of the settlement, and the conveyance to which the tenant for life was a party was duly executed. The money was left in court, and in 1884 was included in the return issued from the paymaster's office under the Rules of the Supreme Court Fund Rules, 1884, r. 101, of credits, which had not been dealt with for fifteen years. The tenant for life had died in 1883. In 1886 the company petitioned for the payment out of the fund without serving the representative of the landowner :—Held, that service on the landowner might be dispensed with, considering the lapse of time since the conveyance. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., In re, 55 L. T. 58.

vii. Trustees.

Under Power of Appointment.]—Land devised on trust for A. for life, with remainder, as she should appoint, was taken by a railway company and the purchase-money paid into court. A., by will, appointed to two trustees on trusts for persons in succession. On petition by these trustees, the purchase-money was ordered to be paid out to them. Illman's Will, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 760 ; 22 L. T. 836 ; 18 W. R. 962.

Trustees for Sale.]—When the purchase-moneys of property subject to a trust for sale for the benefit of infant cestuis que trustent and taken by a railway company, were paid into court by the company under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the court, upon a petition by the trustees for sale and the cestuis que trustent for payment out to the trustees for sale, declined to treat the trustees for sale as persons absolutely entitled within s. 69, and ordered the fund to be carried over to the separate account of the infants, directing the dividends to be paid to the trustees. Reaston's Estate, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 832 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 564 ; 26 L. T. 148 ; 20 W. R. 355.

Land was vested in trustees to sell as soon as the youngest of a class of children attained twenty-one, and to divide the proceeds among such of the children as should be then living, and the issue of such of them as should be dead. Part of the land was taken under the Lands Clauses Act before the youngest child attained twenty-one, and the purchase-money was paid into court. After the youngest child attained twenty-one the trustees and some of the cestuis que trustent presented a petition asking that the fund might be paid out to the trustees, or in the alternative that the shares of those cestuis que trustent who were petitioners might be paid out, leaving the other shares in trust in the matter of the act. The court refused to order payment out to the trustees, but expressed its willingness to make an order according to the other alternative. The petitioners did not object to this, but the company insisted that the order ought to be for payment of the whole fund to the trustees :—Held, that as the petitioners did not object to the order proposed, the company could not complain of it. Sowry, In re, L. R. 8 Ch. 736 ; 29 L. T. 233 ; 21 W. R. 717.

Where lands settled in trust for a widow during her life or until her second marriage, in trust for sale, were purchased from the widow by a railway company under s. 7 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the purchase-money which had been paid into court by the company under s. 69, was, on the petition of the widow, ordered to be paid out to the trustees of the settlement, they undertaking to hold the same upon the trusts of the settlement. Evans' Settlement, In re, 14 Ch. D. 511 ; 43 L. T. 172.

A fund in court, representing the purchase-money of leaseholds taken by a railway company under the Lands Clauses Act, ordered to be paid out to trustees having a power of sale, the cestui que trust being an infant. Gooch, In re, 3 Ch. D. 742.

Where purchase-money for land has been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, it may be ordered to be paid out to trustees of a settlement or will with a power of sale, as persons "becoming absolutely entitled" under s. 69. Hobson's Trusts, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 310 ; 7 Ch. D. 708 ; 38 L. T. 365 ; 26 W. R. 470 —C. A.

A share of stock in court, which represented money paid into court by a railway company for the purchase of land taken under their statutory powers, had been assigned by the beneficial owner to trustees, on trust for sale and conversion, at the request in writing of herself during her life and afterwards at the discretion of the trustees, and to hold the proceeds on certain trusts :—Held, that, the settlor joining in the petition, and the company not objecting, the share might be transferred to the trustees as persons "becoming absolutely entitled" within the meaning of s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Ward's Estate, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 231 ; 28 Ch. D. 100 ; 33 W. R. 149.

Where purchase-moneys of settled lands taken by a railway company have been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, trustees for sale of such lands are not, either under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 69, or the Settled Land Act, s. 21, entitled as of right to payment out. Under the Settled Land Act the court has a discretion to order such payment. Whether it has such discretion under the Lands Clauses Act, quære. Hobson's Trusts, In re (7 Ch. D. 708), doubted. Smith, In re, L. & N. W. Ry., Ex parte, 58 L. J., Ch. 108 ; 40 Ch. D. 386 ; 60 L. T. 77 ; 37 W. R. 199—C. A.

Where a sum paid into the bank, under the Lands Clauses Act, was about to be reduced by an investment in land to less than 70*l*., the residue was ordered to be paid out to trustees nominated under the 71st section. Kinsey, In re, 1 N. R. 303.

Purchase-money of land taken by a company paid out without service on the cestuis que trustent ; the trustees for sale, after the death of a tenant for life, adopting the purchase. East, In re, 2 W. R. 111.

Trustees with a power of sale are "persons absolutely entitled" within the meaning of s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the purchase-money of lands vested in such trustees paid into court under that act may be paid out to them on petition. Thomas's Settlement, In re, 45 L. T. 746 ; 30 W. R. 244.

For Married Woman and Children.]—Where a railway company took real property vested in trustees for a married woman and her children, and paid the money into court, the court declined, under ss. 69 and 78 of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, to direct the fund to be paid to the trustees. Sharwood, In re, 3 Giff. 218.

i. Petition or Summons.

i. What Court and Transfer.

To what Branch of Court.] — Lands were devised by A. and B. upon trusts almost identical. A railway company took part of A.'s lands, and an order for investment of the purchase-money was made by Stuart, V.-C. Subsequently the company took part of B.'s lands, and a similar order for investment was made by Wood, V.-C. One petition for payment out of both funds was presented to Wood, V.-C., who made the order, but as he entertained some doubt as to his jurisdiction, desired that the case should be mentioned to the Court of Appeal :—Held, that all subsequent orders in a matter should be made where the first order was made, and that in dealing with both funds, that in Wood, V.-C.'s jurisdiction should have been transferred to Stuart, V.-C., to whom the application for payment out should have been made. Browse, In re, 14 L. T. 37.

When two funds paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act have been dealt with by different branches of the court, and it is desired to deal with both funds at the same time, the court will give leave to present one petition in both matters in one branch of the court, without transferring either of the matters. Arden (Lord), In re, L. R. 10 Ch. 445; 24 W. R. 190.

The rule which requires applications to be made in the same branch of the court:—Held, not to apply to applications for the payment of dividends upon sums paid into court in the matter of a private act of parliament. Bilston Curacy, In re, 10 W. R. 516. S. P., Hayter, Ex parte, 10 W. R. 557.

ii. Title and Form.

How entitled.]—A petition presented under a local act of parliament, in which the Lands Clauses Act is incorporated, must be entitled "In the matter of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act" (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), as well as "In the matter of the local act." Clarke, In re, 10 L. T. 366.

The application of the purchase-money of land taken by a railway company to the redemption of land tax, is a reinvestment within the Lands Clauses Act, and the costs of it are chargeable on the company under s. 80; and the land being part of a charity estate, the petition must be sanctioned by the charity commissioners' certificate, and must be intituled in the matter of the statute of 52 Geo. 3. c. 101, must have the fiat of the attorney-general, and be signed by two individual petitioners, and not by a corporation and an individual. L. B. & S. C. Ry., In re, 18 Beav. 608.

A railway company agreed with the committee to purchase part of a lunatic's land. The purchase-money was ascertained under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 9, but had not been paid into court. A petition was presented by the committee and next of kin of the lunatic, praying for confirmation of the master's report affirming the sale, for liberty to the committee to convey, that the purchase-money should be invested in consols, and be carried to "the account of the committee and the company," and for payment of the dividends to the committee. The lords justices directed the petition to be entitled in the Lands Clauses Act, and in the Chancery Division of the High Court as well as in lunacy, and that the purchase-money when invested should be carried to "the account of the lunatic and of the company." Subject to these amendments the court made the order as prayed, holding that actual payment in, under, and to the account directed by s. 69, was not essential to the company's title. Milnes, In re, 1 Ch. D. 28; 24 W. R. 98.

Form and Contents.]—Upon petition for the investment of money paid in under a railway act, it was objected that the petition was made unnecessarily long by the introduction of certain clauses in the railway acts, which, being public acts, were sufficiently known to the court, and that the costs of such petition ought not to be allowed:—Held, that the introduction of the railway clauses was not unnecessary, and the petitioner was entitled to the costs. Lilley's Trustees, In re, 17 Sim. 110; 19 L. J., Ch. 329.

The consent of the charity commissioners is not required to a petition presented by the trustees of a charity for the reinvestment in land of the purchase-money paid into court in respect of land belonging to the charity, which has been taken compulsorily under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Kyngeston's Charity, In re, 30 W. R. 78.

Number of Petitions.] — Moneys paid into court by two companies under the Lands Clauses Act, ordered to be paid out on one petition, and the costs appropriated between the two companies. Sheffield Corporation, Ex parte, 21 Beav. 162.

Sealing Petition.]—When a company is joined as a co-petitioner, but the petition asks no payment to them, it need not bear the company's seal. Edward VI. Almshouses, In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 664; 19 L. T. 80; 16 W. R. 841.

Sealing Summons.]—A summons by a railway company for payment out of a sum of less than 1,000*l.* to their secretary, was directed to be sealed in analogy to the practice in case of petitions. Maidstone and Ashford Ry., In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 127; 25 Ch. D. 168; 49 L. T. 777; 32 W. R. 181.

iii. Parties and Service.

Person partly entitled.]—A party entitled to an aliquot share of purchase-money paid into court may on petition obtain payment of such share without notice to the other parties interested. Midland Ry., In re, 11 Jur. 1095.

Service on Company.]—A sum of money was paid into court by a railway company, and the dividends were ordered to be paid to Alexander H. and Frances Elizabeth H. The latter married; and a petition, rendered necessary by that event, was presented by Alexander H. and Frances Elizabeth and her husband for payment of the dividends, and was served on the company:—Held, that the service on the company was unnecessary, and that the costs must be paid by the petitioners. Horden, Ex parte, 2 De G. & Sm. 263; 12 Jur. 846.

Certain glebe lands belonging to the rectory of Kirkby Overblow having been taken by a railway company, and the money paid into court, a petition was presented by the rector for investment of the money:—Held, that it was not necessary to serve the company with notice of the petition. Kirkby Overblow (Rector), Ex parte, Leeds and Thirsk Ry., In re, 19 L. J., Ch. 329.

When the purchase-money of land taken under the Lands Clauses Act was paid into court in a cause to the credit of the account of the entailed estates of the testator:—Held, that such payment discharged the fund from the jurisdiction of the act, and that the company was improperly served with a petition for payment out. Prescott v. Wood, 37 L. J., Ch. 691.

Churchwardens and Overseers.] — Under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, lands belonging to the parish are vested in the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, as a corporation. Therefore, where feoffees to charitable uses were empowered to sell and convey their lands to the commissioners under the Improvement Act:—Held, that the petition for the investment of the purchase-money should be presented in the names of the churchwardens and overseers of the parish in which the charity was established. Annesley, Ex parte, 2 Y. & Coll. 350; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 81.

Semble, that churchwardens and overseers, having no corporate seal, have no power to execute a power of attorney, authorising a party to continue receiving the dividends of stock, notwithstanding fluctuations in the number and identity of the numbers of the corporation. Ib.

Freemen.]—In cases where the land belonging to a corporation is taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money is paid into the bank, the court will not allow any steps to be taken with reference to the final application of such purchase-money, unless it be satisfied that the freemen are represented. Lincoln Corporation, Ex parte, Great Northern Ry., In re, 6 Railw. Cas. 738.

Sect. 85.]—Where a railway company has paid the estimated value of a piece of land into court under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, and afterwards concludes the purchase by contract, the court will not order the payment out to the company of the sum deposited, unless the vendor joins in the petition, or a copy of it is served upon him. South Wales Ry., In re, 6 Railw. Cas. 151.

Parties to Suit.]—Where the money in court is the subject also of a suit, all parties to the suit should be served with the petition for reinvestment. Brandon v. Brandon, 32 L. J., Ch. 20; 7 L. T. 499; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 11; 11 W. R. 53.

Incumbrances and Charges.]—Upon a petition for the payment out of court to an incumbrancer of compensation money paid into court by a company under s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, the incumbrancer is not a necessary party to be served with the petition, and is not entitled to have the costs of his appearance from the company. Hadfield, Ex parte, 29 Beav. 370; 30 L. J., Ch. 278; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 383; 9 W. R. 263.

Upon a petition for payment to a petitioner of the income of a fund arising from the sale of land to a railway company, he being in possession at the time of the sale as tenant for life, subject to mortgages created by himself, the court will make an order, without requiring the mortgagees to be served with the petition. But semble, such service could not have been dispensed with, in case the tenant for life had been out of possession at the date of the sale. Hungerford's Trust, In re, 3 Kay & J. 455.

Where a petition was presented for payment out of court of purchase-money paid in in respect of real estate purchased under the General Metropolitan Paving Act (57 Geo. 3, c. 29), service of the petition upon parties entitled to certain small rent-charges charged on the property purchased, but which were amply secured on other property not included in the purchase, was held to be unnecessary. Mercers' Co., Ex parte, 48 L. J., Ch. 384; 10 Ch. D. 481; 27 W. R. 424.

On a petition by tenant for life under the Lands Clauses Act for interim investment and payment of the dividends to him, it is unnecessary to serve persons having charges on the inheritance prior to the life estate. Morris, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 63; L. R. 20 Eq. 470; 23 W. R. 851.

Remaindermen.]—A railway company had taken land which was settled on three successive tenants for life, with various remainders over, and had paid the money into court, which had been invested in consols: on the petition of the first tenant for life, without service of the petition on those in remainder, for the reinvestment of the money in the purchase of land, which had been approved of by the master:—Held, that the tenants for life in remainder need not appear. Oxford and Bletchley Junction Ry., Ex parte, Brown, In re, 6 Railw. Cas. 703; 16 Jur. 158.

When purchase-money has been paid in under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 74, in respect of lands let on lease at rack-rent, and settled to the use of a tenant for life, with remainder over, it is proper to make the remainderman a respondent to a petition by the tenant for life for investment and payment of dividends, although the interest of the proposed investment of the money will be less than the rent reserved by the lease. Crane, In re, L. R. 7 Eq. 322; 17 W. R. 316.

The petition of a tenant for life under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, for reinvestment in the purchase of land of the proceeds of settled property taken by a railway company, need not be served upon any person entitled in remainder. Staples, Ex parte, 1 De G. M. & G. 294; 21 L. J., Ch. 251.

Upon a petition, presented by a tenant for life, for the reinvestment in land of compensation money paid for lands taken by a railway company, the remaindermen and trustees, if they approve, ought to join in the petition or abstain from appearing at the hearing. Wilson v. Foster, Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., In re, 26 Beav. 398; 28 L. J., Ch. 410; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 113; 7 W. R. 172.

When a petition is presented by a tenant for life for the reinvestment of purchase-money in any other kind of investment than lands, the remainderman ought to be served. Leigh, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 687; L. R. 6 Ch. 887; 24 L. T. 467; 19 W. R. 1105.

In a petition for the investment in consols of a fund paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, and payment of the dividends to the person for the time being entitled thereto, it is necessary and sufficient that the tenant of the immediate freehold should appear. Finch, In re, 14 L. T. 394; 14 W. R. 472.

Trustees—Cestui que Trust.]—On applications by trustees who are "absolutely entitled" for payment out of court, it is not necessary to serve the cestui que trust. Thomas's Settlement, In re, 45 L. T. 746; 30 W. R. 244.

iv. Evidence in Support.

Affidavit of Title.]—Where a tenant for life of lands sold by him, under a railway act, to the company, presents a petition for the investment of the purchase-money and payment of the dividends, the usual affidavit that he believes his title to be good, and that he is not aware of any other claims, will not be dispensed with, although the petitioner is aged and infirm, and although the company may have contracted with him, accepted his title, and consented to the prayer of the petition. Hollick, Ex parte, 4 Railw. Cas. 498; 16 L. J., Ch. 71.

As a general rule, the court requires in all petitions, under acts of parliament for local improvements, &c., for payment of money out of court, that the parties applying shall, by affidavit, shortly verify their title, and state that to their knowledge and belief no other person has any title to, or claims any interest in, the estate. Shears, Ex parte, Fleet Market Improvement Act, In re, 2 Y. & J. 493.

Where, by a railway act, it was provided that parties in possession of lands taken by the company were to be deemed lawfully entitled until the contrary shown to the satisfaction of the court, and that where the party could not make out a good title, the company should pay the purchase-money into court, subject to the disposition of the court:—Held, that the party, on his own affidavit of his title, was entitled to an order for the payment of money to him for his absolute use. Grainge, Ex parte, G. W. Ry., In re, 3 Y. & Coll. 62; 2 Jur. 640.

The affidavit of no title in any other person required by the Consolidated Orders XXXIV. r. 3, in support of petitions under acts of parliament for the interim investment of purchase-money and payment of dividends to the persons entitled thereto was, in the case of a petition under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 70, by a large public corporation, dispensed with. Magdalen College, Oxford, In re, 42 L. T. 822.

On an application by tenant for life for payment to her of dividends on the purchase-money of land taken by railway company, her affidavit as to title dispensed with. Smith, In re, 14 W. R. 949.

—— By whom made.]—When the trustees of a charity petitioned for the investment and payment of dividends of a fund in court under the Lands Clauses Act, the affidavit of no incumbrances was accepted as sufficient, though made by their clerk and not by the petitioners themselves. Edward the Sixth's Almshouses, In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 664; 19 L. T. 80; 16 W. R. 841.

When a tenant for life was too infirm to make an affidavit of title on a petition for payment to him of dividends of purchase-money paid into court by a railway company, an affidavit made by his solicitor was held sufficient. Halsey, In re, 22 L. T. 11.

The affidavit of the managing clerk of the petitioner's solicitor was, under the circumstances of the case, held sufficient to verify the petitioner's title. St. Benet's, In re, 12 L. T. 762.

Proof of Deeds.]—On payment out of court of railway purchase-money for land belonging to a tenant in tail, a disentailing deed being executed, although such deed applied to all the estates, of which a very small portion had been taken by the company, the deed must be made an exhibit, and an affidavit attesting the execution of it is not sufficient. Field, In re, 8 L. T. 722; 11 W. R. 927.

In ex parte cases a deed must, generally speaking, be proved by the attesting witnesses. Reay's Estate, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 222; 3 Eq. R. 512; 3 W. R. 312.

On an unopposed petition for payment out of court of purchase-money paid in by a railway company, proof of the handwriting of the attesting witnesses to a deed affecting the petitioner's title is sufficient evidence of the execution of the deed. Mair, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 882; 28 L. T. 760; 21 W. R. 749.

v. References for Inquiry.

Temporary Investment—Jurisdiction.]—Form of order of reference as to temporary investment on a proposed real security of money paid into court upon the purchase of land by a railway company. On the master reporting against the proposed investment, and that no investment on real security would be for the benefit of the parties:—Held, that it was competent to the master so to report, and the court declined to order the investment to be made. Franklyn's Settlement, In re, 1 De G. & Sm. 528; 5 Railw. Cas. 206; 17 L. J., Ch. 166; 12 Jur. 642.

Form of Reference.]—Where under private acts, &c., the court has jurisdiction to proceed in a summary way by petition, it is not usual on directing a reference to ascertain the parties entitled, to direct the production of deeds and documents, and to examine the parties. London Dock Co., In re, 11 Beav. 78; 17 L. J., Ch. 111; 12 Jur. 405.

One such reference having been made, the court refused with costs an application of a second claimant, for a second order containing special directions. Ib.

A railway company took some settled land, and paid the purchase-money into court. A reference to the master, on the petition of the tenant for life, to inquire as to the propriety of a proposed purchase of land to be settled to the same uses and the title to it, and a direction that if he should approve of the purchase and title he should settle the conveyance, and that the money should be paid to the vendors, were comprised in one order. Metherell, Ex parte, 20 L. J., Ch. 629; 16 Jur. 72.

Where a sum of money is in court to be invested in land, the court will order a reference as to a proposed investment, but will refuse to make any prospective order as to any other investment in the event of those proposed being rejected. Pumfrey, Ex parte, Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry., In re, 4 Railw. Cas. 490.

In what Cases.]—On application made by the churchwardens and overseers of a parish to have a sum of money which had been paid into court by a railway company for the purchase of certain buildings and land, paid out to them for the purpose of buying other land, and erecting other buildings in substitution of those taken by the company, the court refused to make a summary order, and directed a reference to the master. Bicester Churchwardens, Ex parte, Buckinghamshire Ry., In re, 5 Railw. Cas. 205.

The court will, where necessary, refer it to chambers to inquire into a proper fund for the investment of moneys paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act. Dunraven, In re, 5 L. T. 523; 10 W. R. 56.

On a petition for the reinvestment of 50*l.* paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act in land adjoining the settled estate, the court refused to dispense with the usual order of reference as to title, but gave leave to the parties to apply in chambers that the investigation of the title might be dispensed with. Blomfield, In re, 25 W. R. 37.

Death pending Reference.]—On a petition under the Lands Clauses Act to sanction an investment in land, an order was made approving the investment. and directing a reference as to title. Before the order was fully worked out the petitioner died. On the application of his executors, it was ordered that the proceedings should be revived for their benefit. Youl, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 900.

vi. Payment out—Petition or Summons.

Permanent Investment.]—In applications for payment out of court and investment under the Settled Land Act, 1882, of funds in court representing the purchase-money of lands taken under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the court has a discretion under the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. LXX. r. 1, and, where an application by petition is cheaper and more expeditious than by summons, will not disallow the costs of a petition, although the proceeding falls within the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. LV. r. 2, sub-r. 7, as business to be transacted in chambers. In such cases, however, the option of proceeding by petition or summons is at the applicant's risk. Bethlehem and Bridewell Hospitals, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 1143; 30 Ch. D. 541; 53 L. T. 558; 34 W. R. 148.

Alteration of Buildings.]—Upon an application by the sole surviving trustee under a will that 1,330*l.*, part of a sum of 2,100*l.* in the Bank of England, being the purchase-money and compensation for lands vested in him and taken by the Bradford Corporation under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the Bradford Water, &c., Act, 1881, might be paid to the applicant, he undertaking to apply it in converting a dwelling-house and two shops into three shops, and that the balance, 770*l.*, might be invested in 3 per cent. annuities:—Held, that the application did not come within the meaning of Ord. LV. r. 2, sub-r. 7, of the Rules of Court, 1883, and might be made by petition. Hargreave's Trust, In re, Bradford Corporation, Ex parte, 58 L. T. 367.

Additional Buildings.]—Upon an application by the master and fellows of a college that certain funds in court amounting to about 7,000*l.*, and representing the purchase-moneys of lands belonging to the college, and taken by a railway company under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, might be paid to the applicants, they undertaking to apply it in building two residences as an addition to the college:—Held, that the application was not an "application for interim and permanent investment, and for payment of dividends" within the terms of Ord. LV. r. 2, sub-r. 7, of the Rules of Court, 1883, and might be made by petition. Jesus College, Cambridge, Ex parte, 50 L. T. 583.

Apportionment of Dividends.]—An order had been obtained on petition for payment to a tenant for life of dividends of a sum of stock representing purchase-money paid into court by a company which had taken land in settlement. The tenant for life died, and the guardian of an infant tenant in tail entered into receipt of the rents and profits. At the death of the tenant for life two dividends and a proportionate part of a third had not been received by him:—Held, that the order for the payment to the executors of the tenant for life of the dividends and apportioned part of the dividend might have been obtained by summons; but that the order for the payment of the other apportioned part of the dividend, and for future payment of dividends to the guardian of the infant tenant in tail, could properly be made only on petition, of which the company must pay the costs. Joliffe's Estate, In re, L. R. 9 Eq. 668; 23 L. T. 303. See Stafford's Charity, In re, 57 L. T. 846.

Construction of Will involved.] — Where money has been paid into court under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the ascertainment of the persons entitled involves the construction of a will, the application must be by petition and not by summons. Hicks, In re, North Eastern Ry., Ex parte, 63 L. J., Ch. 568; 8 R. 319; 70 L. T. 529.

Originating Summons.]—A public body paying in money under the act must pay the costs of an originating summons for payment out issued with its concurrence, although there is no jurisdiction to deal with the matter on a summons. Ib.

Amount not exceeding £1,000.]—An application for payment out of court to a person absolutely entitled of a sum of cash not exceeding 1,000*l.* paid in under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is rightly made by summons, not by petition. Madgwick, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 333; 25 Ch. D. 371; 49 L. T. 560; 32 W. R. 512.

Rule 2, sub-r. 7, of Ord. LV. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, though it affects the jurisdiction, and not merely the procedure of the court, is not ultra vires, being in accordance with the power conferred by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 136, s. 16, and in fact intended to be made under the powers of that act, as well as under those conferred by the judicature acts. London Corporation, Ex parte, 53 L. J., Ch. 6; 25 Ch. D. 384; 49 L. T. 437; 32 W. R. 87.

An application for payment out of court of money paid in under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, must be by summons, and not by petition. Calton's Will, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 329; 25 Ch. D. 240; 49 L. T. 566; 32 W. R. 167.

The general words of Ord. LV. r. 2, sub-r. 2, not being cut down by sub-r. 7 of the same rule, applications for payment out of sums not exceeding 1,000*l.*, paid in under the Lands Clauses Act, must now be made by summons in chambers and not by petition. Maidstone and Ashford Ry., In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 127; 25 Ch. D. 168; 49 L. T. 777; 32 W. R. 181.

—— Where Judgment or Order.]—Application was made by summons for payment out of court of a sum not exceeding 1,000*l.*, liberated by the death of an annuitant. Orders of court had been made from time to time directing payment to the present applicant of part of the same funds already released by the death of another annuitant, and also of the surplus interest, after satisfying the remaining annuities:—Held, that there had been an order declaring his rights within Ord. LV. r. 2, sub-r. 1, and that the application was properly made by summons, and not by petition. Brandram, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 331; 25 Ch. D. 366; 49 L. T. 558; 32 W. R. 180.

There is no distinction between applications for payment or transfer to a person and applications for transfer to the credit of a cause in regard to Ord. LV. r. 2, sub-r. 1; and such applications should be made by summons in chambers and not by petition where there has been a judgment or order declaring the rights of the parties, though the sum exceeds 1,000*l*. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., In re, Slater v. Slater, 64 L. J., Ch. 688; 72 L. T. 627.

Where such an application was made by petition instead of by summons the court ordered the railway company, who were liable under the Lands Clauses Act, to pay the costs of the application, to pay the costs of the petitioners and respondents according to the act, such costs not to be greater than those properly incurred on a summons adjourned to a judge in chambers and attended by counsel. Ib.

—— Some smaller Sums.]—On petition for the transfer to the official trustee of charity funds of three sums of stock then in court respectively amounting to 1,244*l*., 44*l*., and 36*l*., and representing the purchase-money of lands of a charity taken by three railway companies under their statutory powers:—Held, that the two companies whose purchase-moneys were represented by the smaller sums of stock must be ordered to pay only such costs as would have been incurred if the application had been by summons. Att.-Gen. v. St. John's Hospital, Bath, 62 L. J., Ch. 707; [1893] 3 Ch. 151; 3 R. 661; 69 L. T. 178; 42 W. R. 172.

Supplemental Petition.]—In August, 1893, an order was made on the petition of persons interested under a settlement, approving the investment of certain moneys paid into court, for land compulsorily taken by the Metropolitan Board of Works in constructing sewers necessary for developing the land taken as a building estate. The estimated cost of the proposed works was 3,968*l*. When specifications and detailed plans were prepared, it was found necessary to alter the line of the proposed sewer, and tenders having been obtained for the work, as altered, the lowest tender was 4,343*l*., 375*l*. above the estimate on which the former order was made. The petitioners now presented a supplemental petition, asking that the construction of the altered sewer might be approved as an investment, and the moneys raised out of the funds in court. No objection was made to the order, but the London County Council objected to pay the costs of both petitions, on the ground that the second petition was only made necessary by the blunder of the petitioners, and that the investment of the additional sum required, being only 375*l*., might have been obtained on summons under Rules of the Supreme Court, Ord. LV. r. 2 (7):—Held, that, as the application was in effect to vary an order made on petition, it could not properly be made by summons, and the council must pay the costs of both petitions. Sanders, In re, 70 L. T. 755.

j. Costs.

i. Jurisdiction of Court.

No Provision in Special Act as to Costs.]—Sect. 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890, confers a jurisdiction which did not previously exist, and gives the court a discretion as to the costs of payment out of court of money in a case where the special act, under which the money is paid in, is silent as to them. Mills' Estate, In re (34 Ch. D. 24), superseded. Fisher, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 235; [1894] 1 Ch. 450; 7 R. 97; 70 L. T. 62; 42 W. R. 241—C. A.

The court has power, by virtue of the general discretionary powers conferred by the Judicature Act, Ord. LV., to order that the costs of a petition for the payment out of the court, to a person absolutely entitled, of a fund paid into court by a company in respect of lands taken under the compulsory powers of a special act, be paid by the company, although the special act is prior to the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and contains no provision as to such costs. Lee and Hemingway, In re, 24 Ch. D. 669; 49 L. T. 155; 32 W. R. 226.

Incorporation of Lands Clauses Act with Special Acts.] — Commissioners were incorporated by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 87 (1840), for the purpose of taking lands and carrying out thereon certain public works, and by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 34 (1846), powers to construct a new street were conferred upon such commissioners, and it was enacted that all and singular the enactments and provisions of the act of 1840 should extend to the new improvements as if they had been authorised by the former act. Neither of these acts contained any provision for payment by the commissioners of the costs of applications for payment out of purchase-moneys in court in respect of lands taken under the powers of the acts. On petition for payment out of court of purchase-money of lands taken by the commissioners:—Held (following Cherry's Settled Estates, In re (4 De G. F. & J. 332)), that the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, could not be treated as incorporated with the special acts (3 & 4 Vict. c. 87, and 9 & 10 Vict. c. 34), so as to make the commissioners liable to pay the costs of the petition for payment out. Dictum of Lord Esher, M.R., in Wood's Estate, In re (31 Ch. D. 607, 617, 618), disapproved. Mills' Estate, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 60; 34 Ch. D. 24; 55 L. T. 465; 35 W. R. 65; 51 J. P. 151—C. A.

The Judicature Acts and Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. LXV. r. 1, do not enable the court or a judge to order costs to be paid by persons who before the acts came into operation could not have been ordered to pay them; the effect and intention of the acts and orders being not to give any new jurisdiction to award costs, but only to regulate the mode in which costs are to be dealt with in cases where the court antecedently had jurisdiction, either original or statutory, to award costs. Foster v. G. W. Ry. (8 Q. B. D. 515) followed. Mercers' Co., Ex parte (10 Ch. D. 481), questioned. Ib.

The act 18 & 19 Vict. c. 95, empowered the commissioners of works and public buildings, whom it incorporated for the purpose, to take land compulsorily for the purpose of building public offices. Sect. 9 provided that certain sections (including s. 49) of a previous act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 87), which had empowered the commissioners to execute other works, should be deemed to be repeated in the later act with the alterations necessary to make the same applicable to its purposes. Sect. 11 provided that any purchase-money payable into the bank should be paid to the account of the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery, and should be applied under the directions of that court in like manner as moneys were by the earlier act directed to be applied under the directions of the Court of Exchequer, "with such power to the Court of Chancery with regard to costs" as by the earlier act were vested in the Court of Exchequer. Sect. 49 of the earlier act provided that, when purchase-money was required to be paid into the bank in the name of the accountant-general of the Court of Exchequer, and to be reinvested in land, it should be lawful for the court to order the expenses of all purchases from time to time to be made under the act to be paid by the commissioners. This act contained no other provision as to costs :—Held, that the effects of these enactments was to introduce the incorporated sections of the earlier act into the later act, just as if they had been enacted in it for the first time, and that consequently, the later act, with those sections in it, must be treated as having been passed after the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Therefore the provisions of s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act were, by virtue of s. 1 of that act, incorporated with the act of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 95, and the court has power to order the commissioners to pay the costs of an application for the payment out of purchase-money to the persons who had become absolutely entitled to the land in respect of which the money had been paid in. Cherry's Settled Estates, In re (4 De G. F. & J. 332) disapproved. Wood's Estate, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 488 ; 31 Ch. D. 607 ; 54 L. T. 145 ; 34 W. R. 375—C. A.

A private charity incorporated by royal charter, and having, under a subsequent special act, power to take land compulsorily, is not an "undertaking or work of a public nature" within the meaning of s. 1 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845 ; and, therefore, in the absence of express provision, s. 80 of the last-named act (as to costs) is not incorporated with the charity's special act. Sion College, In re, London Corporation, Ex parte, 57 L. T. 743—C. A.

A public improvements act referred back to and incorporated an earlier public improvements act, which in its turn referred back to and incorporated a third. Each of the three acts was passed after the Lands Clauses Act, and in none of them was there any provision for the payment of costs by the promoters, except in the case of moneys paid into court in the cases of persons under disability :—Held, that the provisions contained in s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, as to the payment by the promoters of the costs of sales and conveyances must be considered as incorporated in the latter act, there being nothing in them to vary or except such provisions. Westminster Estate (Parish of St. Sepulchre), In re, 4 De G. J. & S. 232 ; 3 N. R. 594 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 372 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 298 ; 9 L. T. 819 ; 12 W. R. 499. See Metropolitan District Ry. v. Sharpe, 50 L. J., Q. B. 14 ; 5 App. Cas. 425 ; 43 L. T. 130 ; 28 W. R. 617 ; 44 J. P. 716—H. L. (E.)

Lands are purchased by a railway company and the money paid into court, and invested under an act passed previously to the passing of the Lands Clauses Act, after the passing of which the company is amalgamated with others, which amalgamation acts incorporated the Lands Clauses Act. On a petition for payment out of court of the purchase-money to the party entitled, and for payment of the costs of such petition by the company :—Held, that the company was not bound to pay the costs. Neachell's Trust, In re, 3 W. R. 634.

Special Agreement.]—The act of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76, does not apply where there is a special agreement as to costs between the parties. G. W. Ry., Ex parte, Rhodes, In re, 3 Railw. Cas. 516 ; 8 Jur. 1109.

To Company.]—It is unusual to give costs to a company taking land compulsorily, if it proceeds to enforce the contract otherwise than by the means provided by the act. But costs will be given to a company proceeding by bill for specific performance, instead of under the compulsory power in the Lands Clauses Act, if the landowner, by his conduct, has rendered it doubtful whether the proceeding under the act could satisfy all the impediments interposed. Regent's Canal Co. v. Ware, 26 L. J., Ch. 566 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 924 ; 5 W. R. 617.

Express Power in Act.]—An express power contained in an act of parliament to award certain specified costs does not exclude the inherent jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over the costs of proceedings authorised by the act. Spitalfields Schools, In re, L. R. 10 Eq. 671 ; 22 L. T. 569 ; 18 W. R. 799. S. P., Clark v. Johnson, 22 L. T. 570 ; 18 W. R. 800.

Where an act giving compulsory powers to purchase, specifically provides for payment of the costs of reinvestment, the court will not exercise its general power of directing payment of costs. Acker, In re, 11 W. R. 182.

The Court of Chancery (adopting the practice of the Court of Exchequer) gave costs in the case of lands compulsorily taken under an act of parliament, beyond those expressly authorised by the act, and contrary to the usual practice of the Court of Chancery in such cases. Robertson, In re, 23 Beav. 433.

Transfer from Exchequer.]—Under the compulsory powers of an act, a public body purchased part of a settled estate, and paid the purchase-money into the Court of Exchequer. The act provided that money so paid in should be reinvested in the purchase of land, and that the public body should pay the expenses of all purchases to be made in pursuance of the act :—Held, that although it was a matter transferred from the Court of Exchequer, the Court of Chancery had no power to order the public body to pay the costs of a petition for the payment of the fund to persons who had become absolutely entitled to it. Harrison's Estate, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 77 ; L. R. 10 Eq. 532 ; 18 W. R. 1065.

Purchase-money had been paid into the Court of Exchequer by a company incorporated under an act prior to the Lands Clauses Act, which provided that the court should have power to order the costs of all purchases, together with the necessary costs of obtaining such order, to be paid by the company. The costs of a petition praying for the payment of the dividends of the investments of the purchase-money to a tenant for life had been ordered by the Court of Exchequer to be paid by the company :—Held, that the Court of Chancery had no power to order the costs of a petition for transfer of the fund and payment out of the dividends to a person beneficially entitled, to be paid by the company. Williams, In re, L. R. 12 Eq. 488.

Form of Order.]—The Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 80, only authorises the court to make an order on the company to pay costs, not an order to pay them out of any particular fund. Neath and Brecon Ry., Ex parte, 43 L. J., Ch. 277 ; L. R. 9 Ch. 263 ; 30 L. T. 3 ; 22 W. R. 242.

Transfer to Account—Form of Entry.]—After fund which represents purchase-money paid by a railway company has been invested and transferred to an account not entitled in the matter of the railway company, the liability of the company to pay costs ceases in respect of any subsequent investment or petition for payment of the fund. Fisher v. Fisher, 43 L. J., Ch. 262; L. R. 17 Eq. 340; 29 L. T. 720; 22 W. R. 638.

A company cannot be ordered to pay the costs of reinvestment where the money stands to the credit of a cause only and not to the matter of the act. Brown v. Fenwick, 35 L. J., Ch. 241; 13 L. T. 787; 14 W. R. 257.

Where a fund, representing the price of houses taken for the purpose of a public undertaking, had been transferred to the credit of an administration suit "ex parte the undertakers' account of estates devised by the will," not specifying the special act or the Lands Clauses Act:—Held, that the undertakers were liable to pay costs of reinvestment. Drake v. Greaves, 56 L. J., Ch. 133; 33 Ch. D. 609; 55 L. T. 353; 34 W. R. 757.

ii. Companies acting under several Acts of Parliament.

Incorporation of Lands Clauses Act.]—Money had been paid into court and invested in consols under the provisions of a railway act passed in 1833, which contained no provisions as to the payment of costs by the company, except in the case of a reinvestment of the money in land. By a subsequent act the company was amalgamated with other companies. This act repealed the original acts, but revived them for some purposes, and enacted that, subject to the provisions thereinbefore contained, the Lands Clauses Act should be incorporated with that act:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to make the company pay the costs of the payment of the money out of court to the parties beneficially entitled. Ellison's Estate, In re, 25 L. J., Ch. 379; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 293; 4 W. R. 306—L.JJ.

As the amalgamation act adopted the provisions of the original repealed act, the original act was an act "incorporated with the special act" within the meaning of s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act. Ib.

Where a railway company, under an act dated 1833, took lands in 1835, and paid the money into court, and afterwards became amalgamated by an act in which the Lands Clauses Act was incorporated:—Held, that the rights of the landowner to costs are governed by the act of 1833, and not by the Lands Clauses Act. Holden's Estate, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 995; 3 W. R. 644.

Lands were taken and the purchase-money paid into the bank, and subsequently the company was amalgamated with another, and the amalgamation act repealed the former act, and incorporated with it the Lands Clauses Act; but there was a saving clause, providing that everything done, suffered or confirmed, before the passing of the amalgamation act should be valid as if the repeal had not happened, and the amalgamated companies should be treated as one. On a petition for reinvestment in land of the money so paid in under the former act:—Held, that the costs were payable by the company under such former act. St. Katherine's Dock Co., In re, 14 W. R. 978.

A public improvements act referred back to and incorporated an earlier public improvements act, which in its turn referred back to and incorporated a third. Each of the three acts was passed after the Lands Clauses Act, and in none of them was there any provision for the payment of costs by the promoters except in the case of moneys paid into court in the cases of persons under disability:—Held, that the provisions contained in s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, as to the payment by the promoters of the costs of sales and conveyances, must be considered as incorporated in the latter act, there being nothing in them to vary or except such provisions. Westminster Estate (Parish of St. Sepulchre), In re, 4 De G. J. & S. 232; 33 L. J., Ch. 372; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 298; 9 L. T. 819; 12 W. R. 499.

By an act of parliament, the London Dock Company were empowered to purchase lands for the purposes of the act, and in certain cases the purchase-moneys were to be reinvested in the purchase of other lands, and the expenses of the reinvestment were to be paid by the dock company. In a subsequent part of the same act, the lords of the treasury were empowered to purchase certain legal quays, within a given time, but no express directions were given as to the reinvestment of the purchase-moneys, or as to the payment of the expenses. By a subsequent act, not relating to the dock company, the time given to the lords of the treasury for purchasing the legal quays was extended, and it was enacted that all the powers, provisions, regulations, directions, clauses, matters, and things in the former act should extend to the subsequent act:—Held, that the clauses in the former act as to the reinvesting of the purchase-moneys, and the payment of the expenses of such reinvestment, were applicable, mutatis mutandis, to the subsequent act. Treasury (Lords), In re, 7 Sim. 154. Affirmed, 1 Myl. & C. 676.

iii. Of Conveyances to Company and Deducing Title.

Generally.]—Upon the construction of the Metropolitan Improvement Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 87, s. 49, authorising the court to order the expenses of all purchases to be made in pursuance of the act to be paid by the commissioners of woods and forests, the court declined to make an order for payment, either by the commissioners or out of the corpus of the compensation-money paid in under the act, of the costs occasioned to a tenant for life of settled estates purchased under the act, by making out her title or otherwise, in consequence of the land being taken. Strachan's Estate, In re, 9 Hare, 184; 20 L. J., Ch. 511; 15 Jur. 505.

The court will, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 69, order the guardians or overseers to pay the costs incurred in completing purchases under the Poor Law Act. Albemarle (Earl), Ex parte, Guiltcross Union, In re, 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 63; 2 Jur. 406.

The court has no power, under the Lands Clauses Act, to order payment of the costs of deducing the title, and of the conveyance of lands to a railway company. Bath (Marquis), Ex parte, Wilts, Somerset and Weymouth Ry., In re, 4 Railw. Cas. 567.

A petition, under the Trustee Act, 1850, stated that A. had mortgaged lands to B. in fee; that B. had died, having by his will devised his lands to infants, and appointed C. his executor; that a contract had been entered into by C. with a railway company for a sale of a part of the lands at a certain price, and that, for the purpose of carrying out the contract, it was necessary to get in the legal estate. The petition prayed that the legal estate might be vested in C., and that the railway company might pay the costs of the petition. The railway company appeared at the hearing, but objected to pay the costs:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to make any order either in favour of, or against, the company. Rees' Devisees, In re, 21 L. J., Ch. 687.

Land having been taken by a railway company from the transferee of a deceased mortgagee whose heir-at-law could not be discovered:—Held, that the company were bound to pay the costs of a petition by the vendor, for the appointment of a person to convey to the company in the place of the heir-at-law of the deceased mortgagee. Nash's Estate, In re, 4 W. R. 111.

When difficulties have arisen as to the title, the company having taken possession and used the land, the costs of a motion to pay the purchase-money into court directed to be costs in the cause. Williams v. Llanelly Ry., 19 L. T. 310.

Where the act by which a railway company was incorporated directed the costs of every "contract, sale and conveyance," to be paid by the company, the vendors were held to be entitled to the costs of making out their title, and that although, by a later act, the vendor's costs of deducing their title were expressly provided for. Addey's Charity, Ex parte, London and Greenwich Ry., In re, 3 Railw. Cas. 119; 3 Hare, 22; 12 L. J., Ch. 513.

Death of Vendor—Infant Heir—Costs of Suit.]—A. agreed to sell land to a railway company, but died before he had executed the conveyance, leaving an infant heir. The company then instituted a suit in order to obtain a conveyance from the infant:—Held, that, although the company were bound by their act to pay the expenses of the conveyance of land taken by them, yet, as A. had occasioned the suit by suffering the land to descend to an infant, the costs of the suit, and of having the conveyance settled by the master, must be paid out of the purchase-money. Midland Counties Ry. v. Westcomb, 11 Sim. 57; 2 Railw. Cas. 211; 9 L. J., Ch. 324.

Where the company had contracted for the purchase of land, but the vendor died before execution of the conveyance, leaving an infant heir; in a suit by the company, for a specific performance from the heir:—Held, that the vendor having occasioned the suit by allowing the land to descend to an infant, the costs ought to be paid out of the purchase-money, although by the act the company were subject to the costs of conveying land taken by them. Midland Counties Ry. v. Caldecott, 3 Railw. Cas. 394.

Lands of Lunatic.]—The costs of the heir-at-law of a lunatic, attending the master upon a reference regarding the taking of a portion of the lunatic's land by a railway company, ordered to be paid by the company. Walker, In re, 20 L. J., Ch. 474; 15 Jur. 161.

Where the committees of a lunatic's estate under the powers of the Lands Clauses Act, contract with a railway company for the sale of a piece of his land, the sanction of the Lord Chancellor must be first obtained, and the costs of the application and of the consequent reference to the master are costs within s. 80 of the same act, and must be borne by the company. Taylor and York and North Midland Ry., In re, 6 Railw. Cas. 741; 1 Mac. & G. 210; 1 H. & Tw. 432.

Trustee Acts.]—A railway company entered into a contract for the purchase of a portion of a copyhold property, which they required for the purposes of their undertaking. The legal right to admittance was outstanding in the infant heir of a deceased trustee, and, to enable the vendors to complete their contract, a petition was presented, under statute 1 Will. 4, c. 60, for the appointment of a person to be admitted in the place of the infant, which was ordered accordingly, and a surrender was made by him to the company:—Held, that the company were not bound, under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, s. 82, to pay the costs of the petition presented under the Trustee Act. South Wales Ry., In re, 14 Beav. 418; 20 L. J., Ch. 534; 15 Jur. 1155.

A landowner having contracted in writing for the sale of a piece of land to a railway company, died, having devised all his real estate in strict settlement:—Held, that the costs of the suit instituted for the purpose of procuring a conveyance to the company under 1 Will. 4, c. 60, were to be defrayed out of the purchase-money. Eastern Counties Ry. v. Tufnell, 3 Railw. Cas. 133.

The costs of sale and application, under the New London Bridge Acts, allowed, on the petition of one of two trustees, the other being abroad, and refusing to act in a trust for sale under a marriage settlement, he being considered under these acts an "incapacitated person." Tatham, Ex parte, London Bridge Acts, In re, 3 Y. & Coll. 67; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 64; 2 Jur. 440.

Trustees for Purposes of Settled Land Acts.]—By deed of resettlement made in 1881 estates were limited (subject to charges created by a deed of settlement of 1850) to the use of H. for life, with remainder over. Both deeds contained powers of sale, but the trustees were not the same persons. Portions of one of the estates were taken by a railway company, under compulsory powers which incorporated the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the purchase-money was paid into court. For the purpose of having it paid out, H. applied in the matter of that estate to have W. and L., the trustees of the deed of 1881, appointed trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1882, of the compound settlement consisting of the said two deeds, and an order was made accordingly. On an application by H. for payment out of court of the purchase-money to W. and L.:—Held, that the railway company ought not to be ordered to pay the costs of obtaining the order appointing W. and L. trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act. Waterford and Limerick Ry., In re, Harlech, Ex parte, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 507.

Conveyance including Agreement as to Coals.]—Where a railway company purchased land from a colliery company, and part of the agreement was that the railway should carry the vendor's coals at a fixed price:—Held, that the costs of the instrument carrying into effect such agreement were not charges incurred in the conveyance of the land to the company, and were not payable by the company, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 82. Lietch, In re, 16 L. T. 729; 15 W. R. 1055.

Administration obtained to make Legal Title.]—A corporation contracted, under an act with which the Lands Clauses Act was incorporated, with the persons beneficially entitled, for the purchase of leasehold property. The executors of the testator, under whose will the property was settled, had died, and there was no legal personal representative of the testator. The corporation required administration de bonis non to the testator to be taken out, for the purpose of perfecting the title to the property:—Held, that the corporation must pay the costs of obtaining such administration. Liverpool Improvement Act, In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 376; L. R. 5 Eq. 282; 16 W. R. 667.

A. had for more than twelve years been in possession of premises held under a lease for life and a term of years. The premises were taken by a company under the powers conferred by an act with which the Lands Clauses Act was incorporated. The company required the administration should be taken out to B., the assignee of the lease, through whom A. claimed. C. accordingly took out administration to B., and conveyed her interest as administratrix in the premises to A.:—Held, that under s. 82 of the Lands Clauses Act, the costs of this conveyance should be borne by the company. Dublin City Market Co., In re, 25 L. R., Ir. 265.

Money was paid in court by a railway company, under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, in respect of leasehold premises. Persons claiming under the marriage settlement of their father, then deceased, applied for payment, but the court decided that other children, then dead, and of whom there were no personal representatives, had taken vested interests, and declined to pay out the fund until administration had been taken out to their estates. One of the applicants thereupon took out administration to the deceased children, and obtained payment of the fund:—Held, that the company should pay the costs of obtaining these administrations. Kelly, Ex parte, Dublin Junction Railways, In re, 31 L. R., Ir. 137.

Leasehold premises belonging to J. R. were taken by a railway company under their compulsory powers. J. R., who was then dead, had bequeathed the premises to his wife and six children "share and share alike, the share of any individual dying to be equally divided amongst the survivors." No claim was made on behalf of the legatees, for several years, until E. R., the surviving legatee, lodged an abstract of title with the company. The company, not being satisfied with the title, lodged the purchase-money and interest in court. E. R. applied for payment out of the fund. The court held that the legatees were tenants in common of the property, and directed payment to E. R. of her share, and the shares of the six deceased legatees to be placed to separate credits, and ordered the company to pay E. R. the costs of and incident to the application, order and proceedings thereunder, and all costs, charges and expenses properly payable under the Lands Clauses Act. E. R. then took out administration to each of the deceased legatees, and obtained payment of their shares. The taxing-master declined to allow the costs of taking out these administrations, as not being covered by the order:—Held, that the costs were properly payable by the company, and that the order should be amended by inserting a declaration to that effect. Rorke, Ex parte, Midland Great Western Ry., In re, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 146.

A testator bequeathed leasehold property to one for life and subject thereto to his children. A railway company took the property under compulsory powers, and obtained a conveyance from the tenant for life, and paid the purchase-money into court. The dividends were, with the assent of the executors of the testator, ordered to be paid to the tenant for life. The executors and all the original legatees died after the payment into court. On the death of the tenant for life an order was made for the distribution of the fund:—Held, that the company must pay the costs of obtaining letters of administration to the estates of the deceased beneficiaries, but not the costs of letters of administration de bonis non to the estate of the testator obtained prior to the proceedings which resulted in the order for distribution. Midland Great Western Ry., In re, Rorke, Ex parte ([1894] 1 Ir. R. 146), and Dublin Junction Railways, In re, Kelly, Ex parte (31 L. R., Ir. 137), followed. Lloyd and North London Ry., In re, 65 L. J., Ch. 626; [1896] 2 Ch. 397; 74 L. T. 548; 44 W. R. 522.

Conveyance.]—Costs incurred before the conveyancing counsel are provided for by ss. 82 and 83, and being liable to taxation, a proper bill of them should be delivered to the company. Spooner's Estate, In re, 1 Kay & J. 220.

Although it be necessary, if any of the parties interested be infants, that the conveyance should be settled by the master, yet the court will sometimes peruse the conveyance, in order to save the expense of a reference. Eastern Counties Ry. v. Tufnell, 3 Railw. Cas. 133.

Taxation of Costs.] — A railway company cannot, under s. 83 of the Lands Clauses Act, tax the costs of conveyance after payment by them of the costs. Somerville, Ex parte, S. E. Ry., In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 438; 23 Ch. D. 167; 48 L. T. 416; 31 W. R. 518.

iv. When Payable out of Fund in Court.

Trustees.]—Trustees for sale of lands in settlement, which lands are afterwards sold under the provisions of the London Bridge Act (10 Geo. 4, c. 136), are entitled to their costs out of the corpus of the fund arising from the sale. Layfield, Ex parte, 1 Y. & Coll. 79.

Devisees of lands in trust for charitable purposes, having sold part of those lands under the provisions of the London Bridge Acts, were held not entitled to their costs out of the fund arising from the sale; although the will creating the trust directed that the estate should defray the expenses of defending the trust property. Thorogood, Ex parte, London Bridge Acts, In re, 1 Y. & Coll. 588; 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 97.

Tenant for Life.]—Tenant for life of lands sold under the provisions of the London Bridge Act, 10 Geo. 4, c. 136, is not entitled to his costs out of the fund arising from the sale. Pasmore, Ex parte, London Bridge Acts, In re, 1 Y. & Coll. 75; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 17.

Lands in settlement being required by a railway company, in whose act the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, was incorporated, the company offered 2,200*l.* as the price of such lands. The tenant for life, acting under advice, refused this amount, on the ground of its inadequacy, and the matter was referred to arbitration. The arbitrators, not agreeing, the umpire awarded 2,107*l.*, which was less than the company had offered. Upon a petition by the tenant for life, the court ordered that his costs, as between solicitor and client, incident to the arbitration, should be paid out of the purchase-money. Aubrey's Estate, In re, 17 Jur. 874.

Costs of Suit.]—A railway company, being desirous of taking land under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, paid into court the amount at which the land was valued by the surveyor, and also gave the owner of the land the bond prescribed by that section. Subsequently, the amount at which the land was valued by the jury was paid by the promoters, and the bond returned to them; they now petitioned to have the money returned which they paid into court. The owner of the land opposed this petition, on the ground that the petitioners had not yet paid the costs of investigating the title of the conveyance, of the inquiry before the jury, and of a suit by the owner in another branch of the court for an injunction, which the promoters had rendered necessary:—Held, that the costs of the suit were not costs provided for by the act, and that they should be disposed of by that branch of the court to which the suit was attached; and that, as to the other costs, the court had not discretion, under s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, to order them to be paid out of the fund in court, the remedy as to those costs being otherwise and fully provided for by the act. G. N. Ry., Ex parte, 17 L. J., Ch. 314; 12 Jur. 885.

A. agreed to sell land to a railway company, but died before he had executed the conveyance, leaving an infant heir. The company then instituted a suit, in order to obtain a conveyance from the infant:—Held, that although the company were bound by their act to pay the expenses of the conveyance of land taken by them, yet, as A. had occasioned the suit by suffering the land to descend to an infant, the costs of the suit and of having the conveyance settled by the master must be paid out of the purchase-money. Midland Counties Ry. v. Westcomb, 11 Sim. 57; 9 L. J., Ch. 324.

Company Insolvent.]—When glebe lands have been taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money paid into court, and an order had been made, on the petition of the rector, for its investment, and for payment of the dividends to him for his life, and for payment by the company of his costs, the company having since become insolvent, leaving part of the costs unpaid:—Held, that part of the fund in court might be sold for payment to the solicitors of the rector of the amount of costs remaining due. Great Yeldham Glebe Lands, In re, Colne Valley and Halstead Ry., In re, L. R. 9 Eq. 68; 21 L. T. 481; 18 W. R. 84.

What Costs.]—Upon the purchase of a piece of land by a railway company, belonging to the rectory of Bredicot, for 200*l.*, a new purchase was found for 179*l.* 10*s.* The petition asked that the surplus, 20*l.* 10*s.*, might be paid to the rector, in liquidation of extra costs beyond those allowed by the act; but this part of the prayer was refused. Bredicot (Rector), Ex parte, 5 Railw. Cas. 209; 17 L. J., Ch. 414.

A railway company, having power to take compulsorily portions of an estate, served notices to treat for them. It afterwards abandoned part of its undertaking, including the land comprised in some of the notices, but took the rest and paid the purchase-money into court, the estate in question being the subject of a testamentary settlement. Before the abandonment, certain costs, charges and expenses had been incurred by the tenant for life under the settlement, and certain other costs were subsequently incurred in an unsuccessful attempt to obtain compensation for not going on with the notice to treat in respect to the abandoned portions:—Held, on a petition by the tenant for life for investment of the fund in court, that these costs, charges and expenses might properly be paid out of the fund before investment. Strathmore, In re, L. R. 18 Eq. 338.

A tenant for life opposed the passing of a canal bill, but only obtained the insertion of some clauses for the protection of the estate. The Lands Clauses Act was incorporated with the act when passed. After its passing the company took part of the settled estate and paid the money into court. In the proceedings for ascertaining the value of the land taken, the tenant for life had incurred costs beyond what the company was liable to pay, and he presented a petition for payment of these costs and of the costs of opposing the bill out of the fund:—Held, that the petitioner was entitled to be paid out of the fund all costs properly incurred by him in relation to the purchase since the passing of the act, but not any costs of opposing the bill in parliament. Berkeley (Earl), In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 3; L. R. 10 Ch. 56; 31 L. T. 531; 23 W. R. 195.

Mortgaged Land.]—Where lands are compulsorily taken by a railway company, the court has jurisdiction to order payment of the mortgage debts and costs out of the deposit paid in by the company, without reference to the fact that that deposit covered other lands of the same mortgagor not subject to the mortgage. Martin v. L. C. & D. Ry., 13 L. T. 355; 14 W. R. 24.

When Award less than Offer.]—A perpetual curate refused a sum of money offered by a corporation as the value of glebe lands taken for the purposes of a borough improvement act, and required the amount to be settled by arbitration. The arbitrators awarded a sum less than had been offered. The costs of the perpetual curate incidental to the arbitration were ordered to be paid out of the purchase-money. Whitworth Perpetual Curate, Ex parte, 24 L. T. 126. S. P., Aubrey's Estate, In re, 17 Jur. 874; 1 W. R. 464.

v. Where Land subject to a Pending Suit.

Payment by Company.]—Where devisees in trust of a testator, whose estate is in the course of administration in a suit, sell to a railway company, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the company pays the costs of a petition for transferring the purchase-money, from the account of the railway act, to that of the suit. Dinning v. Henderson, 2 De G. & Sm. 485.

The court has no jurisdiction to make a railway company pay the costs of a petition for reinvestment of purchase-money for land taken by them, where such money stands to the credit of a cause only, and not to the matter of the act. Brown v. Fenwick, 35 L. J., Ch. 241; 13 L. T. 787; 14 W. R. 257.

Where land is taken by a railway company under the compulsory powers of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, and the purchase-money is paid into court all the costs occasioned thereby must be paid by the company, although some of such costs may have been occasioned by the existence of a suit of which the land taken was the subject. Haynes v. Barton, 1 Dr. & Sm. 483; 30 L. J., Ch. 804; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 699; 4 L. T. 764; 9 W. R. 777.

Money has been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act in respect of land purchased by a railway company. The tenant for life, who is plaintiff in a suit instituted for the purpose of raising certain legacies and charges upon the estate by sale of a portion thereof, petitions that the money be transferred to the credit of the cause to meet pro tanto the charges:—Held, that the company were bound to pay the costs of the petition only, and not the costs of the defendants to the suit interested in the charges who had been served and appeared upon the petition. Picton's Estate, In re, 3 W. R. 327.

A vendor seised in fee simple, free from incumbrances save as to a small portion of the land in question, which portion, with other property of the vendor, was in mortgage to the trustees of the will of a testator whose estate was being administered in the Court of Chancery, agreed with a railway company to sell them the whole of the land in fee simple. The agreement was silent as to the existence of the mortgage:—Held, that the company was not bound to pay the costs incurred by obtaining an order in the administration suit sanctioning the concurrence of the trustees in the conveyance to the company, but that such costs were properly payable by the vendor. Phillips, Ex parte, L. & S. W. Ry., In re, 3 De G. J. & S. 341; 32 L. J., Ch. 102; 7 L. T. 452; 11 W. R. 54.

A railway company took lands, the subject of an administration suit, and in which infants and married women were interested, and a reference was made to the master in the cause, to ascertain what course was the most beneficial for the parties under disability. The company was directed to pay all the costs, charges and expenses of the petition, and reference. Picard v. Mitchell, 12 Beav. 486.

A railway company took settled land and paid the purchase-money into the bank, under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 69. The land being the subject of an administration suit by the remainderman against the tenant for life and executor, the plaintiff petitioned that the purchase-money so paid in might be carried over to the credit of the suit and invested in trust therein, and served the defendant and the company. The court, however, ordered investment in the matter of the company's act and not of the suit, and payment of the dividends to the tenant for life, making the company pay only the ordinary costs of a common petition for investment, and dismissed the rest of the petition, with costs. Nash v. Nash, 37 L. J., Ch. 927; 19 L. T. 256; 16 W. R. 1105.

—— What Parties.]—Remaindermen who are not parties to a suit, but who have been served with a copy of a decree in it, and have obtained leave to attend the proceedings thereunder, are in exactly the same position as if they had been originally made parties to the suit. Paterson v. Paterson, 10 L. T. 183.

Where, therefore, a railway company purchased land and paid money into court in respect of it, and a petition was subsequently presented for the investment of the money in consols and payment of the dividends to the receiver in the cause:—Held, that the company must pay the costs of remaindermen who were in the above-stated position, and who had been served with and appeared upon the petition; as well as the costs of all other parties so appearing. Ib.

Land devised in trust for sale in an administration suit, is taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act. Upon a petition by a mortgagee of the land, entitled to one-tenth of the proceeds of sale, for transfer of the fund in court from the account of the company to the credit of the cause:—Held, that it was a payment out within the meaning of the act, but that the company was not liable to pay the costs of the parties to the suit appearing separately, inasmuch as they should have been made co-petitioners. The trustees and the petitioners were entitled, however, to appear and have their costs against the company, but the costs of the other parties must be costs in the cause. Melling v. Bird, 1 W. R. 219. S. P., Patten v. Gatty, 22 L. J., Ch. 599; 17 Jur. 155; 1 W. R. 219.

Parties to certain pending suits petitioned to have a sum of money which had been paid into court by a railway company, invested in trust in the suits, and also to have the dividends invested and accumulated. Several of the parties to the suit appeared by their counsel to consent:—Held, that the railway company was bound to pay the costs of all. Hull and Selby Ry., In re, 5 Railw. Cas. 458.

Where a suit has been instituted to establish the right of a person claiming a sum in court, the proceeds of land taken by a railway company, the court will, on application for payment of the fund, order the costs of the person entitled, but not those of the other parties to the suit, to be paid by the company. Hore's Estate, and South Devon Ry., In re, 5 Railw. Cas. 592.

Property, the subject of a suit, being interfered with by a public company, the compensation was paid into court. Upon a petition to transfer the fund into the cause, and to accumulate the dividends, the parties to the suit were served:—Held, that the company was only bound to pay the costs of the petitioner and the costs of serving the respondents, but not the costs of their appearance. Sidney v. Wilmer, 31 Beav. 338.

A company took land the subject of an administration suit. Several proceedings were taken, and applications made in the suit, with reference to the sale to the company, to which applications and proceedings the company were no parties. On an application to transfer the money, the produce of the purchase, to the credit of the cause:—Held, that the company was bound to pay the costs, charges, and the expenses of all the parties to the suit of and incident to all these proceedings and applications, and also of and incident to the application for the transfer of the fund. Henniker v. Chafy, 28 Beav. 621; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 87.

A petition, presented by a tenant for life, for payment of the income of a fund paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, and which fund was the subject of an administration suit, was served on the trustees:—Held, that the company must pay the trustees' costs. Henniker v. Chafy, 35 Beav. 124; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 919.

Where land taken by a railway company is the subject-matter of a suit, and the parties to such suit are necessarily served with a petition for confirmation of the conditional contract and investment of the purchase-money, and such parties appear, the company must bear the expenses of their service and appearance. Any party served with a petition is entitled to appear and have his costs. Haynes v. Barton, 35 L. J., Ch. 233; L. R. 1 Eq. 422; 13 L. T. 787; 14 W. R. 257.

Where there is an existing suit, in which parties in the same interest have always appeared by separate counsel, the court will not, upon an application for the payment out of purchase-money, refuse to order the railway company to pay the costs of the separate appearance of such parties, merely because they are very numerous. Brandon v. Brandon, 2 Dr. & Sm. 305; 34 L. J., Ch. 333; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 30; 11 L. T. 658; 13 W. R. 251.

A sum of money was paid into court by a railway company for the purchase of land, to the account of the company. There was a suit subsisting, which rendered it necessary to present a petition in the matter of the company's act and in the cause. The court held, that the company must only pay the costs occasioned by the petition being presented in the matter of the act; and the costs of the parties in the cause were to be costs in the cause. Hore v. Smith, 14 Jur. 55.

Land which was vested in a sole trustee, and which was the subject-matter of an action, was taken by the Metropolitan Board of Works under their compulsory powers, the purchase-money was paid into court, and the land conveyed by the trustee to the board. Afterwards, a petition was presented by the beneficiaries for the transfer of the purchase-money to the credit of the action, and served on the trustee, who appeared and asked for his costs:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to appear, and that the board must pay his costs. English's Trusts, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 1048; 39 Ch. D. 556; 60 L. T. 44; 37 W. R. 191.

vi. Apportionment of Rents.

Costs when Payable by Company.]—A railway company paid a deposit into court, and took compulsory possession of some land required for the purposes of their act. The land was subject to agreements for building leases, and it became necessary to apportion the rents:—Held, that the costs of apportioning the rents were payable by the company; and an order was made for payment out of the money in court. Flower, In re, 36 L. J., Ch. 193; L. R. 1 Ch. 599; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 872; 15 L. T. 258; 14 W. R. 1016.

Where there is a bargain between a ground landlord of houses let at a gross ground-rent, and a railway company, which has taken some of the houses, for the payment of compensation at so many years' purchase on the rents of the houses taken, the costs of apportioning the ground-rents between the houses taken and those left are not payable by the company under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 82. Buck, Ex parte, Hampstead Junction Ry., In re, 1 Hem. & M. 519; 33 L. J., Ch. 79; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1172; 9 L. T. 374; 12 W. R. 100.

vii. "Adverse Litigation."

Additional Application.]—Where a tenant for life might, but for disputes between himself and his incumbrancers, have obtained an order for payment of dividends to himself of a fund in court on a former occasion, he will not be allowed as against the company the costs of an additional application relating to the dividends. Joliffe, In re, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 633.

What are Costs incurred by Adverse Litigation.]—Where a sum of money has been paid into court by a railway company under s. 76 of the Lands Clauses Act, as representing the value of the interest claimed by the occupier of lands taken, and the claimant, on petitioning for payment out to him, can only show a title to a less valuable interest, and has brought before the court the parties who are necessary to discuss with him the question, the costs of his so doing are costs occasioned by adverse litigation, and do not fall upon the company. Cooper, Ex parte, North London Ry., In re, 3 Drew. & Sm. 312; 34 L. J., Ch. 373; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 103; 11 L. T. 661; 13 W. R. 364.

In 1847 the London and North Western Railway Company took lands of the plaintiffs for the purpose of their act, and paid the purchase-money into court. In 1853, the plaintiffs having found suitable lands for reinvestment, contracted for the purchase thereof, but while the examination of title was pending, the vendor died intestate, leaving an infant heir. A bill being thus rendered necessary against the heir, and also a second petition, intituled in the cause, on the question of costs:—Held, that the costs of the suit being adverse litigation within s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, the company were not bound to pay them; and as between the plaintiffs and the defendant no order was made as to costs. The railway company were, however, ordered to pay the costs of all the other proceedings and of the second petition, which was necessary. Armitage v. Askham, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 227; 3 W. R. 331.

Upon a petition for the reinvestment in land of money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, and vested in stock and for payment to the petitioner, the tenant for life of the lands taken by the company, of the dividends of the fund in court, the company must pay the costs of incumbrancers on the interest of the petitioner who had been served at their suggestion, and appear but not to oppose, and who have never made any claim upon the company or the fund in court, such costs not coming within the exception of costs of adverse litigation in s. 80 of the statute. Hungerford, In re, 1 Kay & J. 413; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 845.

H., by will, gave his personalty to his wife, and all his real estate by description for the maintenance of herself and his three children, until his son G. attained twenty-one, when he gave him certain portions of the property charged with an allowance to his (testator's) wife; to his son H., when twenty-one, certain portions on the same condition; and to his daughter E., at twenty-one, certain portions; as to some to the wife for life, and at her decease to the daughter absolutely. If G. died without issue, then H. to possess the property; and if H. died before G. without issue, then G. to have H.'s property. If E. died without issue, her property to be equally divided between her brothers or the survivor; but if she survived them and they left no issue, then she to have all the property. But if the wife survived all the children, to her for life; remainder to his (the testator's) nephews and nieces equally. If there should be an after-born child which survived G. and H., they leaving no issue, the whole to such child; and if such child died without issue, to the wife for life, as if there had been only three children. Testator left four children, one after-born, and nephews and nieces. G. died an infant and unmarried; and on petition by H. to have certain money paid into court by a railway company, paid out to him, ordered accordingly; and held, that the wife took a life estate until eldest son attained twenty-one, and that there were three estates tail successively, and H. was now tenant in tail. The after-born child presented a counter-petition, which was dismissed with costs as against the company; but the costs of the daughter and H. appearing separately:—Held, not costs occasioned by adverse claimants. Hinks's Estate, In re, 2 W. R. 108.

Where lands have been taken compulsorily, and the purchase-money paid into court, and before payment out of court it becomes necessary to file a bill for the administration of the landowner's estate of which the fund forms a part, such suit not being occasioned by adverse claims, the company must pay the costs of all the defendants who had been served with the petition for transfer of the fund to the credit of the cause. But semble that it was not necessary to serve any of them, the object of the petition not being to obtain the payment of any money out of court. Eden v. Thomson, 2 Hem. & M. 6; 10 L. T. 522; 12 W. R. 789.

Where a company has, in virtue of two different acts of parliament, taken two pieces of land held under the same title, with knowledge that the title is disputed, and taken a conveyance from both disputants, it must pay the costs of two petitions for investment of the purchase-money, and the costs of appearance of the disputant who is named as respondent to the petitions are not costs occasioned by litigation between adverse claimants within the meaning of the act. Butterfield, In re, 9 W. R. 805.

A railway company took land belonging to a devisee for life, with a reversion to the testator's heirs, and paid the purchase-money into court:—Held, that they must pay the costs of two petitions by two co-heirs who claimed the fund on the death of the tenant for life, and also the costs of investigating the title of other persons who claim to be heirs, in answer to the advertisements issued by order of the court, except such costs as were occasioned by affidavits of the petitioners in opposition to such claim, which were "occasioned by adverse litigation," within s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act. Spooner's Estate, In re, 1 Kay & J. 220.

A contest between the tenant for life and remainderman as to how much of the fund belonged to one of them and how much to the other:—Held, to be a litigation between adverse claimants within s. 80; but this decision was disapproved of by Jessel, M.R. Askew v. Woodhead, 49 L. J., Ch. 320; 14 Ch. D. 27; 41 L. T. 670; 28 W. R. 874.

A petition was presented for the transfer to the petitioner of a sum of money lodged in court by a railway company under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and several claimants to the sum appeared. The court, having decided that the petitioner was entitled to the whole sum, ordered the railway company to pay the costs of the petition and of the proceedings thereunder, except such costs as were occasioned by the litigation between the adverse claimants; and further ordered the unsuccessful claimants to pay to the petitioner such costs as the master should find to have been occasioned by their adverse claims. Great Southern and Western Ry., Ex parte, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 497.

Costs of determining the construction of a doubtful devise are not costs of adverse litigation within the meaning of s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act. Gregson, In re, 2 Hem. & M. 504. See 34 L. J., Ch. 41; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1138; 11 L. T. 460; 13 W. R. 193—L.JJ.

Form of Order.]—In orders under the Lands Clauses Act, directing a company to pay costs, the omission of the words, "except such costs (if any) as are occasioned by litigation between adverse claimants," ought not to be ordered except in very clear cases. Cant, In re, 1 De G. F. & J. 153; 29 L. J., Ch. 119; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 183; 1 L. T. 254; 8 W. R. 105.

The words "such as are occasioned by litigation between adverse claimants," in s. 80, refer to "costs," and not to the next antecedent proceedings. Ib.

Land devised by a will was taken by a railway company, and the money paid into court. Adverse claims to it arising under the will, the devisees appeared by separate counsel on a petition for payment of it out of court, and argued the question arising between them:—Held, that the case was not one where the words of exception could properly be omitted from the order. Ib.

Abandonment of Claim.]—A company took land to which there were adverse claimants, and at the request of one, and without any objection by the other, paid the purchase-money into court. One claimant afterwards abandoned his claim without litigation:—Held, that the company would neither pay nor receive the costs incurred by the payment into court. English, In re, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 434; 12 L. T. 561; 13 W. R. 932.

A railway company required to take a piece of land to which adverse claims were set up. The company paid the purchase-money into court. One of the claimants withdrew his claim:—Held, that the railway company was the real cause of the costs being incurred, and must pay them. Norfolk's (Duke) Estates, In re, 31 L. T. 79; 22 W. R. 817.

Costs of Ascertaining Parties Entitled.]—Where it is doubtful under a will whether good title to premises taken by a company can be made out, and there is no wilful default or delay on the part of the owner of the premises, the court being called upon to put a construction upon such a will, the company, on the application of the owner to obtain out of court the purchase-money agreed to be paid for the land, was ordered to pay the costs according to their act. Woodburn, In re, 13 L. T. 237.

A railway company is liable to pay expenses incurred in ascertaining the parties entitled to the purchase-money of lands taken by the company and paid into court. Singleton, In re, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 941; 8 L. T. 630; 11 W. R. 871. S. P., Tookey's Trust, In re, 1 Drew. 264; 21 L. J., Ch. 402; 16 Jur. 708. Noake's Will, In re, 28 W. R. 762.

The owner of an estate after having devised it to an infant agreed, under compulsion, to sell a portion of it to a railway company. The owner having died before the completion of the purchase without having altered his will:—Held, that his executors, and not the devisee, were entitled to the purchase-money and to the compensation for severance; and, secondly, that the railway company was bound to pay the costs of the infant devisee. Manchester and Southport Ry., In re, 19 Beav. 365.

Upon a petition for payment out of court to the trustees of a will of a fund representing the purchase-money paid by a railway company for some property settled in the will, the costs of a mortgagee of the tenant for life, who appeared on the petition, ordered to be paid by the company. Brook, In re, 10 L. T. 860 ; 12 W. R. 1128.

Property which was in the possession of a mortgagee was taken by the London School Board, and the purchase-money paid into court pursuant to the Lands Clauses Act 1845. The mortgagor's trustee in liquidation presented a petition asking for an inquiry as to what was due on the mortgage, for payment to the mortgagee of what should be so found due, and for payment of the residue of the purchase-money to himself :—Held, that the board must pay the costs of the inquiry. Bareham, In re, 17 Ch. D. 329 ; 29 W. R. 525—C. A.

Under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 62, the Commissioners of Woods and Forests are bound to pay the costs of a reference to ascertain the rights of parties to the purchase-money of premises purchased under the act, as expenses incidental to the purchase. Woods and Forests Commissioners, In re, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 487.

J. L. "gave and bequeathed unto his niece C. B. and his nephew J. T. all his houses situate at W., each to have one half, to be share and share alike ; and what debts he should owe at his decease they should pay, both of them a like share of the same ; all the above premises he gave, devised, and bequeathed unto his niece C. B. and his nephew J. T., each to enjoy one half during their lives, and at their decease the said premises to go to their children." J. L. died in 1786. J. T. died in 1804, without children and intestate, leaving C. B. his heiress-at-law, and the heiress-at-law of J. L. C. B. had thirteen children, six of whom survived her. Part of the premises was taken by the commissioners under the Whitby Improvement Act, and the purchase-money paid into court. C. B. devised all her estate, right, title, and interest in and to the premises and the purchase-money unto her daughter J. B. :—Held, that C. B. and J. T. each took an estate for life in a moiety of the property ; that upon the decease of C. B. and J. T., their children took their parents' moieties respectively as joint tenants in fee ; but that as J. T. had no children, C. B. took his moiety as his heiress-at-law, and that that moiety passed to her devisee. Held, also, that all the costs of the petition were to be paid by the Commissioners of the Whitby Improvement Act. Laverick's Estate, In re, 18 Jur. 304 ; 2 W. R. 113.

—— One set of Costs.]—A railway company agreed with trustees for the purchase of lands. The trustees' title depended on the construction of a will, and the company objected thereto and paid the purchase-money into court. The question of construction having been argued by the parties interested on a petition for investment and payment of dividends :—Held, that the company was bound to pay only one set of costs. Styan, Ex parte, 1 Johns. 387.

On a petition by a widow for payment out of court of a sum which represented realty which had been taken by a company, on which petition the heir appeared and opposed, one set of costs was allowed. Yates, Ex parte, 17 W. R. 872.

viii. "Wilful Refusal or Neglect."

What Amounts to.]—As to what amounts to a "wilful refusal" within s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act. Windsor, Staines and South Western Ry., In re, 12 Beav. 522.

A railway company, being unable to come to terms with the owner of the fee, proceeded to summon a jury ; the landowner, being advised that notice had not been properly served on him, did not appear before it, and the damages were assessed in his absence, and the amount paid into court. It was subsequently decided that the notice had been regularly served. On the landowner applying for payment of the money out of court, the company was ordered to pay the costs of the application. Railston, Ex parte, 15 Jur. 1028.

The owner of land, who was entitled to receive the purchase-money under an award, refused to receive it, on the ground that he thought the award invalid ; thereupon the promoters paid the purchase-money into court. The owner subsequently obtained a rule to show cause why the award should not be set aside ; this rule was, upon mature argument, discharged :—Held, that the "wilful refusal," mentioned in s. 80, meant a refusal without reason ; and that here, as there was a bonâ fide and not a mere captious question to be decided, the case was not within the exception, and the owner was entitled to his costs. Bradshaw, Ex parte, East and West India Docks, In re, 16 Sim. 174 ; 5 Railw. Cas. 432 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 454 ; 12 Jur. 888. And see S. C. at law, 17 L. J., Q. B. 362.

Where a vendor is unable to convey a clear title by reason of his not having paid off incumbrances of a larger amount than the land proposed to be taken, that is not a wilful refusal or neglect to convey within s. 80, so as to deprive him of his costs. Divers, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 995.

Local commissioners gave notice, under their act, that they would require a particular piece of land. The owner took counsel's opinion as to the right of the commissioners. The opinion was, that the question was doubtful, and that a court of law would probably decide against the right ; the owner thereupon refused to give up the land. The purchase-money was then paid into court, under the Lands Clauses Act, but, subsequently, the owner of the land executed the conveyance :—Held, upon petition for payment of the money out of court, that this was not such a case of "wilful refusal," under s. 80, as that the owner of the land could be required to pay the costs occasioned by his refusal. Dashwood, Ex parte, Ryde Commissioners, In re, 26 L. J., Ch. 299 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 103 ; 5 W. R. 125.

A railway company, requiring land for the purposes of their railway, gave the usual notices. The amount of the value of the land had been ascertained by arbitration. The company tendered this amount to the landholder, who refused to receive it without having his costs paid him at the same time :—Held, that the vendor, on his wilful refusal to accept the amount, was not entitled to his costs. Turner, In re, 5 L. T. 524 ; 10 W. R. 128.

The costs incurred by the company for calling in the sheriff to give possession to be paid by vendor. Ib.

When a railway company had paid into court the sum awarded by the arbitrator as the price of lands taken by them, the landowners having refused to accept the same, though the petition for payment out of court omitted to state the reason of such refusal, the court took judicial notice, from its own recollection, of the petitioner having instituted a suit, which, though unsuccessful, was not frivolous, to set aside the award, and therefore ordered the company to pay the costs of the petition. Lawson, Ex parte, Metropolitan District Ry., In re, 17 W. R. 186.

Where a mortgagor neglected or failed to procure the concurrence of the incumbrancers in a petition for the investment of purchase-money paid into court by a railway company, the court held that such neglect or failure was no ground for relieving the company from the payment of costs. Nash, In re, 25 L. J., Ch. 20 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1082 ; 4 W. R. 28.

Upon the compulsory purchase of land, under an act incorporating the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the Railways Act (Ireland), 1851, the purchasers lodged in court the compensation awarded, inasmuch as the owner had failed to deliver a statement of title within the time prescribed by the statutory notices published :—Held, that the owner must be regarded as having wilfully neglected to make title within the meaning of the exception in s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, and that he should therefore bear his own costs of drawing the money out of court. Dowling, Ex parte, Dublin Corporation, In re, 7 L. R., Ir. 173.

Where a fund in court exceeding 500*l.* in value and representing the purchase-moneys of settled lands taken by a railway company, with accumulated interest, had not been dealt with for upwards of fifteen years, and it had become necessary under the Chancery Funds Rules, 1874, r. 91, and the Chancery Funds Amended Orders, 1874, Ord. XIV. to serve the official solicitor with the petition for the payment out of the fund :—Held, that such costs having been occasioned by the default of the tenant for life, were properly payable out of the portion of the fund which came to his estate. Clarke's Estate, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 88 ; 21 Ch. D. 776.

ix. Repayment of Deposit.

Appearance.]—The court will, under special circumstances, allow a party appearing to consent to a petition under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 85, his costs of appearance, though it is not the usual practice so to do where a party appears merely to consent. Tottenham and Hampstead Junction Ry., In re, 14 W. R. 669.

Injunction by Landowner.]—A railway company served a notice to treat, and gave the usual bond, and made the deposit required by s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act. The landowner filed a bill to restrain the company from entering, but a motion for injunction stood over by arrangement, and no further steps were taken. Ultimately, the company abandoned the purchase with the concurrence of the owner :—Held, on a petition for a re-transfer of the deposit to the company, and for the cancelling of the bond, that the owner was not entitled to have the costs of the suit out of the deposit. But, semble, he would have been so entitled if the purchase had been abandoned by reason of the inability of the company to complete. Birmingham, Wolverhampton and Dudley Ry., Ex parte, 1 Hem. & M. 772 ; 3 N. R. 290.

x. Interim Investment.

Under Special Acts.] — Under the original London and Birmingham Railway Company's Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 36, the Court of Chancery had power to order the company to pay all the expenses attending the reinvestment in the purchase of land of all money paid into the Bank of England, under that act to be applied in the purchase of other lands, together with the necessary costs and charges of obtaining such order ; but there was no power under that act for the court to order the company to pay the costs and expenses of an interim investment in government securities. The company purchased land from Eton College prior to the year 1845, and the purchase-money was paid into the Bank of England, under the act, in the month of May, 1846. In 1845 the Lands Clauses Act passed, by s. 18 of which it was enacted "that in all classes of moneys deposited in the bank under the provisions of this or the special act, or an act incorporated therewith except," &c., "it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery in England or the Court of Exchequer in Ireland to order the costs of the following matters, including therein all reasonable charges and expenses incident thereto, to be paid by the promoters of the undertaking." Amongst such matters were included the costs of investment in government securities, and the costs of obtaining the proper orders. In July, 1846, an act of parliament was passed, the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 204, by which the London and Birmingham Railway Company, the Grand Junction Railway Company, and the Manchester and Birmingham Railway Company, were all dissolved, as separate companies, and incorporated into one called the London and North Western Railway Company, into which the Lands Clauses Act was incorporated :—Held, upon the petition of Eton College for the interim investment of the purchase-money in government securities, and upon the construction of the several acts of parliament, that the court had power to order the company to pay the costs attending such investment, and of obtaining the order therefor. Eton College, Ex parte, 20 L. J., Ch. 1 ; 15 Jur. 45.

Costs in consequence of the purchase, under a railway act :—Held, not to carry the costs of the interim investment in the funds. Hirst, In re, 4 Y. & Coll. 468.

Where a statute did not contain any express provision as to the costs of an interim investment in stock of compensation-money paid into court under the act, the court had not jurisdiction to order the costs of an application for such an interim investment to be borne by the parties who had paid the money into court. Crober, Ex parte, 13 Jur. 481.

Where, by a railway act, it was enacted that the moneys paid into court by the company, for lands purchased by them, should, by order made upon the petition of the party interested, be invested in the purchase of other lands, to be settled to the like uses ; and, in the meantime, should, by an order similarly obtained, be invested in the funds ; and it was further enacted that the court might order the expenses of such purchases, and the investment of the purchase-money in land, "or other disposition of the same," to be paid by the company :—Held, that the company were liable to pay the expenses of the interim investment of the money in the funds. Onslow, Ex parte, London and

Southampton Ry., In re, 1 Y. & Coll. 553; 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 85.

Where an act of parliament, establishing a railway company, directs that the money to be paid for lands to be purchased by the company shall be paid into the bank, until the same shall, upon petition, be applied in the purchase of other lands; and in the meantime, until such purchase can be made, shall, upon application to the court, be invested in the funds; and that the expenses and costs attending such purchase shall be paid by the company:—Held, that under the latter clause, a party applying to have the money invested in the funds is not entitled to the costs of the application. Taylor, Ex parte, 1 Y. & Coll. 229; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 33.

The Liverpool and Manchester Railway Act did not provide for the payment by the company of the costs of the interim investment of purchase-money:—Held, that the court had no power to order the costs of that investment, subsequent railway acts having put a statutory construction on the former acts by the insertion of a section to the effect that the company are to bear the costs of such interim investment. Cooke, Ex parte, Liverpool and Manchester Ry., In re, 3 Railw. Cas. 135; 7 Jur. 639.

Upon petition for the investment in the funds of a sum of money paid for the purchase of lands, under the Birmingham Railway Act, the court refused to order the company to pay the costs. Worcester College, Oxford, Ex parte, 5 Railw. Cas. 147; 17 L. J., Ch. 193.

Where a railway act directs the expense of all purchases to be borne by the company, this will include the expense of the intermediate investment of the money in the funds, as well as the ultimate investment in lands to be settled to the same uses. Durham (Bishop), Ex parte, 3 Y. & Coll. 690; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 14. And see Ely (Bishop), Ex parte, 3 Y. & Coll. 691, n.

An act enabling a public body to take lands compulsorily directed that in cases of disability the purchase-money should be paid into court, and laid out in the purchase of other hereditaments, and that in the meantime it should be vested in consols and the dividends paid to the persons entitled; the act authorised the court to order the expenses of all purchases from time to time to be made in pursuance of the act to be paid by the public body:—Held, that the costs of the interim investment in consols, and of the order to pay the dividends to the tenant for life, must be borne by the fund and not by the public body. Gould, In re, 24 Beav. 442.

Semble, that the court has jurisdiction under 57 Geo. 3, c. 29 (General Metropolitan Paving Act), ss. 84 and 89, to order payment by a district board of works of the expenses of the investment in consols of the purchase-money of lands taken by agreement by the board in pursuance of the statute, and of the costs of the petition for investment. Merceron, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 114; 7 Ch. D. 184; 38 L. T. 15; 26 W. R. 8.

Apportionment not ordered.]—A dean and chapter and their lessee for twenty-one years, under covenant not to assign without their leave, entered into a joint contract for sale of part of the demised premises to a railway company, at an aggregate price. On the completion of the purchase and the conveyance of the property to the company, they paid the amount into court, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 69. The court declined, upon the petition of the lessee, to apportion the purchase-money. By consent the money was ordered to be invested, and the dividends to be paid to the lessee for his term or until further order:—Held, that the company were not entitled to their costs and expenses upon such petition. Ward, Ex parte, 2 De G. & Sm. 4; 5 Railw. Cas. 398; 17 L. J., Ch. 249; 12 Jur. 322.

Vexatious Proceedings.]—Under the act of parliament, giving power to the Trinity House to purchase lighthouses, this court is authorised, by express words, to order the corporation to pay the costs of the interim investments in the funds, and other consequential costs on purchases from infants, and other incapacitated persons; but no such words are used with reference to purchases under doubtful titles. Where, therefore, an incapacitated person, together with the trustees of the settlement under which he took his interest (which trustees had a power of sale), contracted to sell a lighthouse to the corporation, and the corporation, being doubtful as to the title of the vendors, paid the purchase-money into court, under a clause contained in the act for that purpose, the court, taking into consideration that the objection as to title was not trivial, and that the purchase was made by the Trinity House for public objects, declined to give the vendors the costs of the interim investment in the funds, and the other usual consequential costs. Angell, Ex parte, Trinity House, In re, 4 Y. & Coll. 496.

The purchase-money for settled lands taken by a railway was paid into court; and after a contract had been entered into for laying it out in land, a petition was presented for its temporary investment in the funds:—Held, that the proceeding was not vexatious, and that the company ought to pay the costs. Liverpool, &c., Ry., In re, 17 Beav. 392.

Order for Taxation and Payment.]—The common order for taxation and payment of costs by a company, upon a petition for investment of money paid into court and payment of dividends, will not be varied in a case where periodic sales of the corpus are also ordered. Edmunds, Ex parte, L., C. & D. Ry., In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 538; 14 L. T. 243; 14 W. R. 507.

Appearance of Parties.]—Money was paid into court by a railway company in certain suits, and, a petition being presented for investment and accumulations, several parties to the suit appeared by separate counsel to consent:—Held, that the railway company was bound to pay the costs of all. Hull and Selby Ry., In re, 5 Railw. Cas. 458.

Where one of several persons entitled to purchase-money under the Lands Clauses Act petitions under the act, and serves the other persons, it is not of course that the company should pay the costs of such respondents. Melling v. Bird, 22 L. J., Ch. 599; 17 Jur. 155; 1 W. R. 219.

On a petition for the transfer of purchase-money paid into court by the ecclesiastical commissioners, the court ordered the costs of all parties to be paid by the commissioners. Clark v. Johnson, 22 L. T. 570; 18 W. R. 800.

In a petition for the investment in consols of a fund paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, and payment of the dividends to the person for the time being entitled thereto, it is necessary and sufficient that the tenant of the immediate freehold should appear. Finch, In re, 14 L. T. 394; 14 W. R. 472.

Therefore where the land was subject to a lease for ninety-nine years, if the lessee should so long live:—Held, that the company must pay the costs both of the lessee and the trustees in whom the freehold was vested, but not of any of the parties entitled in remainder. Ib.

Railway companies under the provisions of their acts, with which the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, was incorporated, took for their purposes lands which were the subject of a private act of parliament, under the powers of which it was found that the purchase could only be effected. The costs of a petition by the tenant for life and others, for an interim investment of the purchase-moneys, in accordance with the provisions of the private act, were ordered to be paid by the respondents. Shuttleworth, Ex parte and In re, 4 Giff. 87; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1090; 7 L. T. 266.

When a tenant for life petitions for interim investment of purchase-money of the settled estate paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, the company need not pay the costs of serving or giving notice to the trustees. Dowling's Trusts, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 568; 24 W. R. 729.

—— Of Mortgagees.]—On a petition by the tenant for life of a fund paid into court by a railway company, praying for the investment of the fund and payment of the dividends to the petitioner; certain persons entitled to a charge on the real estate in respect of which the fund was paid, being served with the petition and appearing, the court refused to direct the railway company to pay their costs. Webster, In re, 2 Sm. & G. (App.), vi.

A railway company took lands which were vested in one for life, with remainder over, and were subject to a mortgage in fee and to mortgages of the life estate:—Held, that the company must pay the costs of the mortgagees who had been served with, and appeared upon, a petition for the investment of the fund and the application of the income. Brook's Will, In re, 30 Beav. 233; 31 L. J., Ch. 456; 5 L. T. 388; 10 W. R. 35.

To a petition by a tenant for life of settled estates, for the investment of the purchase-money of part of the estates which had been purchased by a railway company under their act, and for payment of the dividends to the petitioner, or if the incumbrancers upon his life interest should not consent thereto, then to a receiver who had been appointed to receive the rents of the estates for the benefit of the incumbrancers, the incumbrancers and their receiver were made respondents, and, having been served with the petition, appeared at the hearing thereof:—Held, that the costs of the incumbrancers and of the receiver were to be borne by the company. Nash, In re, 25 L. J., Ch. 20; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1082; 4 W. R. 28.

When a tenant for life petitions for the interim investment of purchase-moneys paid in by a railway company under the Lands Clauses Act, and for the payment to him of the dividends thereon when invested, it is not necessary for him to serve persons having charges on the inheritance prior to the life estate, and the costs of such parties, if served, will not be allowed as against the company. Morris, In re, Settled Estates, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 63; L. R. 20 Eq. 470; 23 W. R. 851.

Of Investment on Mortgage.]—Upon an order for an interim investment on real security of purchase-money paid into court, the costs of the interim investment must be paid by the company, but not the costs of any subsequent investment in land. Flemon's Trusts, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 86; L. R. 10 Eq. 612.

The purchase-money of land taken by a railway company for the purposes of their act was, on petition, directed to be invested in a mortgage of real estate; and the company was also ordered to pay the costs of all parties thereto and to the petition. Reading v. Hamilton, 5 L. T. 628.

Upon an application under the Lands Clauses Act, for the reinvestment on real security of compensation money which had already been invested in consols at the expense of the city of London corporation:—Held, that the investment was proper, and that the corporation must pay the costs; but that, in regard to future costs, it must be considered a permanent investment. Wilkinson, In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 384; 18 L. T. 17; 16 W. R. 537.

Compensation money was invested in consols and an application was afterwards made to reinvest it on a mortgage security:—Held, that the company must pay the costs, but that, in regard to future costs, it must be considered as a permanent security. Lomax, In re, 34 Beav. 294.

Where purchase-money had been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act and invested in consols, upon an application for its reinvestment on mortgage security:—Held, that such reinvestment could not be treated as a permanent investment, and that the company must pay the costs without any conditions as to the costs of any future permanent investment. Blyth's Trusts, In re, L. R. 16 Eq. 468; 28 L. T. 890; 21 W. R. 819.

Purchase-money for lands taken by a railway company having been paid into court, the tenant for life of the estate petitioned that the money might be reinvested on mortgage:—Held, that the mortgage could not be considered a permanent investment, and a direction that the company should not be required to pay the costs of a future permanent investment refused. Sewart, In re, L. R. 18 Eq. 278; 30 L. T. 355; 22 W. R. 625.

xi. Payment of Dividends.

Interim Investment.]—Costs of a petition for payment of dividends on interim investment must be paid by the company, although the petition was rendered necessary by a defective order on a former petition, such order having been made in the presence of the company. Goe's Estate, In re, 3 W. R. 119.

Under Special Acts.]—Upon the construction of a railway act:—Held, that the costs given by the act in relation to the payment of certain dividends, had reference to the costs of obtaining the order for payment, and not to the costs of the payment itself. Athorpe, Ex parte, Hull and Selby Ry., In re, 3 Y. & Coll. 396.

Upon the construction of s. 157 of the Manchester and Leeds Railway Act (7 Will. 4, c. cxi.):—Held, that the costs of the payment of the dividends to accrue in respect of a sum, the produce of lands taken by the railway company and ordered to be invested, were not to be borne by the company. Mitchell v. Newell, 3 Railw. Cas. 515.

Purchase of Charity Lands—Official Trustee.]—A scheme for the regulation of a certain charity contained provisions that the legal estate in the lands belonging to the charity, and all terms, estates, and interest therein, should be vested in the "Official Trustee of Charity Lands" and his successors, in trust for the charity, with the intent that such lands might be managed and administered by the trustees of the charity subject to and in conformity with the provisions of the scheme; and that all stock in the public funds and other securities should be transferred to and vest in the "Official Trustees of Charitable Funds," by whom the dividends and income arising therefrom should be from time to time paid to the local trustees or their order. The Metropolitan Board of Works took the lands of the charity under their statutory powers, and paid the purchase-money into court. The trustees then presented a petition that the fund in court might be invested in consols, and when so invested carried over to the account of the official trustees of charitable funds, and that the dividends might be paid to the treasurer for the time being of the charity. The title to the lands sold had been approved by the purchasers, but the conveyance to the Metropolitan Board of Works had not yet been executed. Therefore, the legal estate remained vested in the official trustee of charity lands under the scheme. The official trustees of charity lands and charity funds were served with the petition, and a question arose whether their costs should be paid by the Metropolitan Board of Works. Another question was, whether the application should have been by petition or by summons:—Held, that an order ought to be made for an interim investment and payments of dividends as asked; and that, having regard to the provisions of the scheme, the petitioners were justified in proceeding by petition, and were also justified in serving the official trustees. Stafford's Charity, In re, 57 L. T. 846.

Change of Order Required—Marriage.]—The purchase-money of a leasehold interest purchased by a railway company was paid into court to an account "Ex parte the company, the account of the two lessees," and the dividends were ordered to be paid to one lessee and the executrix of the other. The executrix married:—Held, that on a petition for payment of the dividends to the husband and the other lessee, it was unnecessary to serve the company, and that the petitioners, having served them, must pay their costs. Hordern, Ex parte, Grand Junction Ry., In re, 2 De G. & Sm. 263; 12 Jur. 846.

—— Death.]—Purchase-money for lands belonging to wardens and overseers having been invested, and an order made for payment of the dividends to the vestry clerk, who had since died, a petition was presented for payment of the dividends to the churchwardens and overseers for the time being:—Held, that the costs of both petitions must be borne by the purchasers. Royal Exchange Act, In re, 14 Jur. 28.

An order made under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, directed the dividends of stock, arising from the investment of the purchase-money of land belonging to a perpetual curacy taken by a railway company, to be paid to the incumbent of a parish for the time being, but only provided for the payment of the costs of the then incumbent of the application on which the order was made. A subsequent incumbent executed a power authorising an attorney to receive the dividends for him under the order, and filed affidavits showing himself to be the incumbent. On the company declining to pay his costs thus incurred he applied in chambers for an order for their taxation and payment, which was ordered accordingly:—Held, that the order was rightly made. Guilden Sutton (Incumbent), Ex parte, 8 De G. M. & G. 380; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 793; 4 W. R. 582.

Where the purchase-money of land taken by a railway company has been paid into court to their credit, and subsequently invested in stock in trust for B., who dies, bequeathing it to C. for life; the court, on a petition by B.'s executors, in directing payment of the dividends to C., ordered the costs of the petitioners to be paid by the company. Lye, In re, 13 L. T. 664.

A railway company having taken lands, and paid the money into court, the dividends were received by a tenant for life, and upon her death her husband re-settled the property, and presented a petition for payment of the dividends to himself:—Held, that the company was not liable to pay the costs of the petition. Pick, In re, 31 L. J., Ch. 495; 10 W. R. 365.

Lands which were limited to A. for life, remainder to B. in fee, were taken by a company under the powers of their act, and the purchase-money was paid into court, and subsequently invested in consols. The company's act did not authorise the payment of any costs other than those of the reinvestment of the purchase-money. A. died without having received any of the dividends, and his residuary legatee bequeathed all her residuary personal estate to C., who prayed for payment to himself of the fund and the dividends. The legal personal representative of A. not being before the court, the application to pay to B. the dividends accrued during the life of A. was refused, and the court ordered them to be paid to A.'s personal representative. An application that the costs of the petition might be paid by the company was also refused. Ackers' Trusts, In re, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 224; 7 L. T. 535; 11 W. R. 182.

When the purchase-money of settled lands taken by a local board was paid into court and invested, and the dividends, on the petition of the trustees of the settlement, ordered to be paid to them by name, or one of them, and both the trustees died, the court, on the petition of the new trustees for payment of the dividends to them, declined to order the local board to pay the costs of the second petition. Pryor, In re, 35 L. T. 202.

—— Change of Charity Trustees.]—A public company having taken lands belonging to a charity, and paid the purchase-money into court under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, the usual order was made for investment and payment of the income of the fund to the trustees of the charity, or any two or more of them. Afterwards, the charity having been practically superseded by the school board, a new scheme was sanctioned, whereby the charity was recast, and new governors were substituted for the old trustees. The new governors then petitioned for payment out of part of the corpus towards the expenses of the new scheme, and for payment of the income of the remaining fund to the petitioners, or any two or more of them. The company contended that they were not liable to pay the costs of a petition caused by a devolution of title subsequent to the taking of the land :—Held, that the change of interest having been caused, not by the act of the trustees, but by the reconstitution of the charity (an incident to which all charities were liable), the company were bound to pay the costs of the petition. Shakespeare Walk School, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 677 ; 12 Ch. D. 178 ; 28 W. R. 148.

The dividends arising from the purchase-money of lands purchased by a railway company from the trustees of a school had been ordered to be paid to the then trustees ; subsequently new trustees were appointed. On a petition for payment of the dividends to the new trustees, no order was made upon the company for payment of costs. Audenshaw School, In re, 1 N. R. 255.

Application by Tenant for Life.]—Tenant for life of lands sold under the provisions of the London Bridge Act (10 Geo. 4, c. 136), is not entitled to his costs out of the fund arising from the sale. Pasmore, Ex parte, London Bridge Act, In re, 1 Y. & Coll. 75 ; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 17.

The costs of a tenant for life, on his petition for payment of the income of a fund paid into court, must be paid out of the income, and those of the trustees out of the corpus. It is not necessary, upon such an application, to serve the remainderman. Whitling, In re, 9 W. R. 830.

Where a petition is presented by a tenant for life for payment of the dividends on a fund paid into court, the costs are payable out of income, and not out of the corpus. Marner's Trusts, In re, 36 L. J., Ch. 58 ; L. R. 3 Eq. 432 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 959 ; 15 L. T. 237 ; 15 W. R. 99.

Where a tenant for life mortgages his life interest in the purchase-money of land compulsorily taken by a railway company, and he and the mortgagee concur in a sale of his interest, the costs of an application for payment of the dividends to the purchaser, during the life of the tenant for life, are not chargeable against the company. Byron's Trusts, In re, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 261 ; 7 W. R. 367.

Where a tenant for life of a fund in court obtained an order for payment of the dividends, but no provision was made as to the cost of the application, the court, after a lapse of two years, allowed the order to be amended by adding a direction that the costs should be payed out of the corpus of the fund. Tanner, In re, 14 L. T. 589.

Where a tenant for life might, but for disputes between himself and his incumbrancers, have obtained an order for payment of dividends to himself of a fund in court on a former occasion, he will not be allowed as against the company the costs of an additional application relating to the dividends. Joliffe, In re, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 633.

A person bequeathed leaseholds held of an ecclesiastical corporation, giving certain life interests with remainder over. He directed his trustees, two years or sooner before the time for renewal, to bring a sufficient part of the rents into a fund to keep the estates always renewed. It was the practice to renew the leases every fourteen years, but it was not obligatory on the corporation to do so ; they ceased to do so about 1866. Previously to that, notice had been given by a railway company to take the property. The purchases were completed and the price paid into court, and invested in consols. The investment gave a diminished income :—Held, that the tenants for life were only entitled to the income of the fund. No costs allowed to or against the railway company. Wood, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 59 ; L. R. 10 Eq. 572 ; 23 L. T., 430.

The dividends of money in court were ordered to be paid to the tenant for life, on his death the remainderman petitioned for the transfer of the fund, and for payment of the last dividend to him :—Held, that the executors of the tenant for life took no part of the last half year's dividend, and that their costs should be paid by the petitioner and not by the company. Longworth's Estate, In re, 1 Kay & J. 1 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 104 ; 2 W. R. 124.

Where lands settled in the same manner have been purchased by different railway companies, and the purchase moneys paid into court and invested, and the tenant for life afterwards dies, the orders directing payment of the dividends of the several funds to the person next entitled may all be obtained upon the same petition ; and the railway companies will not in future be required to pay the costs of more than one petition. Broke's (Lord) Estate, In re, 1 N. R. 568.

xii. Discharge of Debts and Incumbrances.

Under Special Act.]—Where, under the provisions of a railway act, lands are purchased of corporations, tenants for life, &c., the costs of an application to the court to have the purchase-money applied in the discharge of incumbrances will be directed to be paid by the company, although the act only makes an express provision for such costs in cases where the money is to be laid out in the purchase of lands to be settled to the like uses. Trafford, Ex parte, Liverpool and Manchester Ry., In re, 2 Y. & Coll. 522.

On the construction of a railway act :—Held, that the cost of paying off an incumbrance on land purchased by the company out of the purchase-money in court were not to be paid by the company. Hardwicke (Earl), Ex parte, Eastern Counties Ry., In re, 5 Railw. Cas. 210 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 422 ; 12 Jur. 508.

A piece of land, part of certain trust estates, was taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money deposited in court ; other part of the same estates was subject to a mortgage. The tenant for life presented a petition praying that the money might be applied to pay off the mortgage, and that the residue might be invested :—Held, that the railway company were not, under s. 151 of their act, liable for the costs of the mortgagees. Yeates, Ex parte, Lancaster and Carlisle Ry., In re, 8 Railw. Cas. 370 ; 12 Jur. 279.

Lands Clauses Act.]—The costs of discharging an incumbrance must be paid by the owners of the estate. Sheffield Corporation, Ex parte, 21 Beav. 162 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 587 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 31 ; 4 W. R. 70.

Incumbrance on other Parts of Estate.]—Under s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, the promoters are not liable to pay the costs incurred by the application of their purchase-money in paying off an incumbrance on other parts of the estate of the owner. Ib.

When under the provisions of local acts, which authorised the taking of land and the application of the purchase-money in the purchase of other land, or in the case of the parties interested being under disability towards the discharge of incumbrances on land settled to the same uses as that taken, and provided for the payment by the parties taking the land of the costs of a reinvestment in land :—Held, that when a petition for payment out of court of money paid in under the act asked to have it applied towards paying off incumbrances on other land settled to the same uses, there was no liability to pay the costs of the petitioners. Stanley of Alderley (Lord), In re, L. R. 14 Eq. 227 ; 26 L. T. 822.

A company purchasing lands is not liable, under s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, to pay the costs incurred by the application of the purchase-money in discharging an incumbrance on other lands of the vendors. Sheffield Town Trustees, Ex parte, Sheffield Water Works Co., In re, 8 W. R. 602.

Semble, the court has jurisdiction to order a company to pay the costs of a petition to apply purchase-money in court in discharge of incumbrances on lands other than those compulsorily taken, but settled to similar uses. Dublin, Wicklow and Wexford Ry., In re, 25 L. R., Ir. 175.

Mortgagee—Form of Order.]—Mortgaged property, the subject of a foreclosure action, was purchased by a public body under their statutory powers, and the sum which had been assessed for compensation was paid into court :—Held, that the mortgagee was only entitled to the ordinary inquiry whether anything and what was due to him for any and what costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by him in respect of his mortgage security, and that he was not entitled to an express direction for the allowance of his extra costs (beyond those allowed on taxation between himself and the public body) of the inquiry to assess the compensation. Rees v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 49 L. J., Ch. 620 ; 14 Ch. D. 372 ; 42 L. T. 685 ; 28 W. R. 614.

Of what Parties—Service.]—R. C. obtained an agreement for a lease of some warehouses and premises, which was deposited with his solicitor, who subsequently agreed to advance 300*l.* to R. C. for the repairs of the premises, upon his signing a memorandum charging them with that amount, and with all further advances, not exceeding 500*l.* The premises were afterwards taken by the corporation of London by virtue of an act of parliament, for making public improvements ; and in consequence of questions between R. C. and his solicitor respecting the amount due upon the security, and also in consequence of notice of a judgment debt due by R. C., the purchase-money was paid into court ; and upon a petition by R. C., asking for an account, and that 500*l.* might be set apart to answer what should be found due from him to his solicitor, and that the surplus, after payment of the judgment debt, might be paid to R. C. :—Held, that the amount of debt between R. C. and his solicitor must be ascertained by the master ; that the corporation need not attend, but that it must pay the costs of this petition, but not of the affidavits made relating to the claims of the parties. Collins, Ex parte, 19 L. J., Ch. 244.

A railway company purchased certain land which was devised to the petitioner for life, and then to his children. The tenant for life had mortgaged his life estate, and the mortgagees were made parties to the conveyance to the company. The purchase-money was paid into court. The tenant for life now presented a petition for its investment. The mortgagees were served, and asked for their costs :—Held, that such costs must be paid by the mortgagor, and not by the railway company. Smith, Ex parte, Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., In re, 6 Railw. Cas. 150 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 56.

A petition was presented by the lessee of certain property compulsorily taken by a railway company for payment out of court of a fund representing his compensation under an award made in November, 1884. At the date of the award rent was due to the lessor, who had the usual right of re-entry in default of payment. At the date of payment of the fund into court the railway company had not completed the purchase of the lessor's interest. Subsequently to the purchase of his interest the lessor gave notice to the railway company of his claim to have his unpaid rent paid out of the fund in court claimed by the lessee. Accordingly he received notice of the presentation of the petition from the railway company, and appeared at the hearing, although not served nor made a formal respondent to the petition. His claim was settled by the petitioners, but the question arose as to whether or not the railway company should pay his costs :—Held, that the right of re-entry was an incumbrance on the leasehold interest, and therefore on the fund in court, and notice having been given to the railway company by the lessor, he was rightly before the court for their protection, and they must pay his costs. London Street, Greenwich, and L., C. & D. Ry., In re, 57 L. T. 673.

Where a tenant for life of settled estates, part of which had, under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, been purchased in 1849 by a railway company, and which estates were subject to several incumbrances created previously and subsequently to the date of such purchase, presented a petition to have the purchase-money, which had been paid into court, reinvested in land :—Held, that the costs of the reinvestment, and the expenses incurred in serving the mortgagees, must be borne by the company. Peyton's Settlement, Ex parte, Eastern Counties Ry., In re, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1013 ; 4 W. R. 380. S. P., Hungerford, In re, 1 Kay & J. 413 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 845.

Upon a petition for payment out of court to an incumbrancer of compensation money paid into court under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, the incumbrancer is not a necessary party to be served with the petition, and his costs must be paid by the owner of the estate. Hadfield, In re, 29 Beav. 370 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 278 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 383 ; 9 W. R. 263.

The costs of mortgagees appearing and consenting to accept payment of their security out of the purchase-money of lands subject to their mortgage, ordered to be paid by the company. Waterford, Dungarvan and Lismore Ry., In re, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 321.

Where two estates, settled upon different trusts, were jointly charged with certain incumbrances, and such incumbrances were, by arrangement between the two tenants for life, paid off by them out of their private moneys in certain proportions, and part of one of such estates was taken by a railway company for the purposes of their act, and the purchase-money paid into court : —Held, upon petition by the tenant for life of the land taken by the company, for payment to him out of the fund in court of the amount of the incumbrance paid off by him, and for the investment of the residue of the fund, that the company was liable for the costs of the appearance of the persons interested in remainder expectant on the life estate of such tenant for life. Furness Ry., In re, Romney, In re, 3 N. R. 287.

Upon an application by a tenant for life to pay to a mortgagee the amount of compensation money which was in court:—Held, that the company was not bound to pay the mortgagee's costs of appearing. Hatfield, In re, 32 Beav. 252.

A railway company took lands which stood limited to a tenant for life, with remainder subject to a charge of 20,000*l.* to four sisters as tenants in common in tail, and paid the purchase-money into court under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18. A petition was presented for payment out of court to the owner of the charge, in part satisfaction thereof; and upon the petition, the tenants in common in tail, and other parties having charges, appeared separately:—Held, that the company was liable to pay the costs of all parties. Braye (Baroness), In re, 32 L. J., Ch. 432; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 454; 11 W. R. 333.

Where land is purchased of a party seised in fee, by a railway company, and the money paid into court, and he dies leaving his real estates charged with legacies, upon the usual petition for payment out of court the costs of the legatees must be paid by the petitioners. Oxford and Rugby Ry., Ex parte, Turner, In re, 2 W. R. 441.

On a petition by a tenant for life for the investment of money paid into court by a railway company, the incumbrancer of the life estate being served, is entitled to his costs of appearance against the company. Smith, In re, 13 L. T. 626; 14 W. R. 218.

Where mortgagees of a life interest in land appeared separately, on a petition by the mortgagor, for the investment of the purchase-money which had been paid into court by a railway company for the land taken by them, their costs were ordered to be paid by the mortgagor. Thomas, In re, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 307; 10 L. T. 127; 12 W. R. 546.

A railway company took, under its compulsory powers, land which was settled in such a way that a father and a son had at that time between them the absolute beneficial interest. The purchase-money, as fixed by arbitration having been paid into court, on a petition asking that part of the fund should be applied in paying off a mortgage created after the payment into court:—Held, that the petitioners must pay the costs of the mortgagee's appearance. Jones' Trust Estate, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 190; 18 W. R. 312.

After payment into court by a company of the purchase-money of land belonging to a tenant for life and remaindermen, some of the latter mortgaged their reversionary interests in the fund. Upon the death of the tenant for life, the owners of the fund and their incumbrancers presented a petition for payment of the fund out of court:—Held, that the company were not liable to pay the costs incurred by the mortgagees in proving their incumbrances. G. W. Ry., Ex parte, Gough's Trusts, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 200; 24 Ch. D. 569; 49 L. T. 494; 32 W. R. 147.

Amount of Mortgagee's Costs—Affidavit of Service.]—Where purchase-money has been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, or the Artizans' and Labourers' Dwellings Improvement Act, 1875, and a petition is presented for payment out either to or with the consent of incumbrancers, the only costs which the company or local authority (as the case may be) can be required to pay, in addition to the petitioner's costs, are the sum of 42*s.* for the incumbrancers' costs, and a further sum sufficient to cover the costs of an affidavit of service of the petition upon the incumbrancers. Halstead United Charities, In re (L. R. 20 Eq. 48), followed. Artizans' and Labourers' Dwellings Improvement Act, In re, 14 Ch. D. 624; 43 L. T. 84.

When a petition is presented simply for the investment in land of money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, and there are mortgages or annuities charged upon the estate, the proper course is to serve the mortgagees or annuitants with a copy of the petition and 40*s.* costs, with an intimation that if they appear they will be liable to pay their own costs. Gore-Langton's Settled Estates, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 405; L. R. 10 Ch. 328; 32 L. T. 785; 23 W. R. 842.

The rule that where incumbrancers are parties to a petition for the reinvestment in land of money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 40*s.* costs ought to be tendered to such parties at the time of service of the petition in order to discourage unnecessary appearances, applies to the case of payment out of court of such moneys to persons entitled subject to incumbrances; but the petitioners will be entitled to add to their costs of the petition, in addition to the 40*s.*, a sum sufficient to pay the costs of an affidavit of service. Halstead United Charities, In re, L. R. 20 Eq. 48.

Land in settlement having been taken compulsorily by a public body under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the purchase-money paid into court, a reversioner mortgaged his reversionary interest in the fund. After the death of the tenant for life a petition was presented for the payment of the money out of court, and the mortgagee was served:—Held, that the public body must pay the costs of the mortgagee's appearance, those costs being limited to 42*s.*, and that they must also pay the costs of serving the mortgagee with the petition. Gough's Trusts, In re (24 Ch. D. 569), dissented from. Jones' Trust Estate, In re (39 L. J., Ch. 190), not followed. Olive's Estate, In re, 59 L. J., Ch. 360; 44 Ch. D. 316; 62 L. T. 626; 38 W. R. 459.

Where mortgaged land has been purchased by a local authority under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the purchase-money has been paid into court, and a petition to which the mortgagees consent, is presented for payment out of the purchase-money, the amount of the mortgagees' costs to be paid by the local authority will be thirty shillings, and the cost of an affidavit of service of the petition. Halstead United Charities, In re (L. R. 20 Eq. 48), and Artizans' Dwellings Act, In re (14 Ch. D. 624), followed. Ruck's Trusts, In re, 13 R. 637.

After Order for Payment of Dividends.]—Where an order has been made on a petition presented by a tenant for life for payment out to him of dividends of purchase-money of lands compulsorily taken, the costs of which have been borne by a railway company, and the tenant for life subsequently seeks to have the purchase-money applied in discharge of incumbrances, the court will not order the company to bear the costs of the latter application, except those of advertisements, where advertisements were dispensed with on the prior application. Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Ry., In re, 25 L. R., Ir. 175.

xiii. Redemption of Land Tax.

How Payable.]—Where an act of parliament enabled a railway company to purchase lands of corporations, tenants for life, &c., and directed that the purchase-money should be applied in the redemption of the land tax upon other parts of the property unsold:—Held, that the costs of an application to the court under such an act of parliament, to have the purchase-money applied in the redemption of the land tax, will be allowed out of the purchase-money, although the act only makes an express provision for such costs in cases where the money is to be laid out in the purchase of lands, to be settled to the like uses. Northwick, Ex parte, 1 Y. & Coll. 166.

The cost of investing money, paid in by a railway company as the price of land taken under their act, in redemption of the land tax on other parts of the same property:—Held, payable by the company, although not mentioned specifically in s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act. Beddoes, Ex parte, 2 Sm. & G. 466; 24 L. J., Ch. 175; 3 Eq. R. 137.

The costs of the application of the purchase-money of lands taken by a railway company in the redemption of land tax are payable by the company. Bethlem Hospital, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 406; L. R. 19 Eq. 457; 23 W. R. 644.

The application of the purchase-money of land taken by a railway company to the redemption of land tax, is a re-investment within s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, and the costs of it are chargeable on the company. L. B. & S. C. Ry., In re, 18 Beav. 608.

A company purchased lands under a private act of parliament, which provided that the company should pay the costs of investment of purchase-money in "lands, tenements, and hereditaments":—Held, that the costs of reinvestment in the redemption of land tax must be paid by the company. St. Katharine's Hospital, In re, 17 Ch. D. 378; 44 L. T. 52; 29 W. R. 495.

xiv. Purchase of other Lands.

(a) In General.

Under Special Acts.]—The court will, under the words, "reasonable costs, charges and expenses," in 2 & 3 Vict. c. 61, s. 29, award all necessary costs incurred by parties in obtaining payment out of court of the purchase-money of lands required for the purposes of the commission, or of having it invested upon trusts similar to those to which the lands so required were subject. Shannon Commissioners, In re, Fl. & K. 13; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 355.

The court will not, under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, order the poor law commissioners to pay the costs relating to the repurchase of lands to be settled to the same uses as those to which the lands sold were subject. Mountsandford (Lord), In re, Fl. & K. 368.

See as to costs of reinvestment of money paid into court. London Bridge Improvement Act, In re, 11 Jur. 958.

Where tenants for life obtained an act of parliament enabling them to sell to a company, the first tenant in fact being an infant, the act having directed the purchaser, according to the proposal, to bear all the expenses of obtaining the act, and of completing the title and conveyance to him, and all other expenses of the vendor, in consequence of the sale, or arising in respect thereof:—Held, that he was not liable to the expenses of investing the purchase-money in the manner prescribed by the act. London Bridge Acts, In re, 13 Sim. 180.

Lands settled to similar Uses.]—An estate stood limited to B. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail, remainder to B. in fee. B. made his will, devising all his real estate in strict settlement. After the date of B.'s will, a company purchased from him part of the estate under the powers of the Lands Clauses Act, and paid the purchase-money into court. B. died without issue:—Held, that the company must pay the costs of investing the purchase-money in real estate, to be settled to the uses of the will. De Beauvoir, In re, 2 De G. F. & J. 5; 29 L. J., Ch. 567; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 593; 2 L. T. 364; 8 W. R. 425.

A railway company took, under its compulsory powers, land which was settled in such a way that a father and a son had at that time between them the absolute beneficial interest. The purchase-money as fixed by arbitration having been paid into court:—Held, that the owners were entitled to have part of the fund reinvested in the purchase of land, to be settled to somewhat different uses, at the expense of the company. Jones' Trust Estate, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 190; 18 W. R. 312.

Construction where Statute Doubtful.]—When land is taken compulsorily by a public body, and a question arises as to costs incurred relating to the reinvestment of the purchase-money of such land, the purchaser or person in whose favour such reinvestment is to be made ought to have the benefit of the doubt. Jones's Settled Estates, In re, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 581; 6 W. R. 614.

After Interim Investment.]—Land, which was devised to trustees upon certain trusts, was taken by a company under their compulsory powers, and the purchase-money paid into court and invested in consols. Upon an application by the trustees for permission to reinvest the money in the purchase of property to be settled upon the trusts of the will:—Held, that the company must pay the costs of such reinvestment. Dodd's Estate, In re, 24 L. T. 542; 19 W. R. 741.

What Costs included.]—When money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act is sought to be reinvested in land upon a contract which throws upon the purchaser costs of the purchase which in an open contract would be borne by the vendor, the costs directed to be paid by the company will be limited to those which in an open contract would be purchaser's costs. Christ's Hospital, Ex parte, L. R. 20 Eq. 605.

Costs of a purchase of land ordinarily borne by the vendor, but thrown by special stipulation upon the purchaser, were held under the circumstances not to be costs of reinvestment payable by promoters according to the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Temple Church Lands, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 160; 26 W. R. 259.

The commissioners of sewers for the purposes of their act took lands belonging to a charity, and provided other lands in substitution:—Held, that the charity was entitled to its costs of the inrolment, under the Statute of Mortmain, of the conveyance of the substituted lands. Semble, the conveyance would be void unless inrolled. Christ's Hospital, Ex parte, 4 N. R. 14.

The bishop of London having sold property to divers corporate bodies they paid the purchase-money into court. The bishop, being desirous of reinvesting the money in the purchase of leasehold interests granted out of other lands of the see, petitioned for payment of the money out of court, praying that the costs of reinvestment, and the costs of obtaining the sanction of the commissioners acting under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 104, might be paid by the several corporate bodies, the purchasers:—Held, that the costs of the reinvestment must be paid by them in equal shares, and not ratably, but the costs of obtaining such consent could not be allowed. London (Bishop), Ex parte, 2 De G. F. & J. 14; 29 L. J., Ch. 575; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 640; 8 W. R. 465, 714.

Railway purchase-money being paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, charity lands are contracted for as an investment, the usual reference is made, and a petition under Sir Samuel Romilly's Act being necessary, the owner of the money agrees with the charity trustees to pay those costs, and, on a petition to confirm the purchase, asks for such costs against the company:—Held, that he was not entitled. Alsager (Incumbent), Ex parte, North Staffordshire Ry., In re, 2 Eq. Rep. 327; 2 W. R. 324.

The costs of settling a new scheme for a voluntary school, occasioned by the compulsory purchase of the site of such school by a public body, held to be too remote to be "costs incurred in consequence of the taking of land," regard being had to the propinquity of board schools, and the general circumstances of the neighbourhood, which would probably soon have led, in any case, to a reconstitution of the charity. St. Paul's Schools, Finsbury, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 454; 48 L. T. 412; 31 W. R. 424.

A purchase was completed under the powers of an act of parliament which authorised a corporation to purchase property compulsorily. The vendors being under disabilities the purchase-money of their property was paid into court, under the provisions of the act whereby the court was authorised to order all the reasonable costs, charges, and expenses attending the reinvestment of the purchase-moneys in the purchase of lands to be settled to the same uses as the property purchased, together with the costs, charges, and expenses of obtaining the proper orders, and of the other proceedings for such purposes, to be paid by the corporation. A contract was entered into for the investment of part of the fund in court in the purchase of certain property free from incumbrances. The title, on investigation, proved to be subject to numerous incumbrances, and the purchasers' counsel advised that the vendors should procure all the incumbrances to be conveyed to the vendors, so as to shorten the conveyance. The draft reconveyances, eight in number, were submitted to the purchasers' solicitors, and settled by their counsel:—Held, that the corporation could not be charged with the costs thereby incurred, unless they were incurred with the express consent of the corporation. Jones v. Lewis, 1 De G. & Sm. 245; 11 Jur. 511.

Freeholds—Leaseholds.]—When all parties interested were sui juris, a railway company was ordered to pay the costs of investing the purchase-money of a leasehold in a freehold estate. Parker, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 473; L. R. 13 Eq. 495; 26 L. T. 12; 20 W. R. 289.

The dean and canons of Manchester presented a petition to have moneys which had been paid into court by several railway companies and other public bodies for lands taken from them, reinvested in the purchase of leasehold interests in other lands, of which they were reversioners in fee:—Held, that the companies and other public bodies must pay the costs of reinvestment in the same way as if the purchase had been of freeholds. Manchester (Dean), Ex parte, 28 L. T. 184.

Funds not in same Court.]—Where a fund standing to an account in one vice-chancellor's court was required to make up the purchase-money for a purchase authorised in a suit in another vice-chancellor's court, the vice-chancellor in whose court the fund is standing can authorise payment thereof to the vendor upon his executing the conveyance, but can make no order as to payment of any part of the costs of the conveyance. Bagot, In re, 14 L. T. 159; 14 W. R. 471.

Appearance of Parties.]—A purchaser who has paid into court the price of land taken under the powers of a compulsory statute, is not entitled to the costs of appearing upon a petition by the vendor to have the money invested. Exeter Corporation, Ex parte, 8 Jur. 653.

By a railway act a company was empowered to take lands belonging to a vicarage; and it was declared that the purchase-money should be paid into court, and that, on a petition by the vicar and patron, and with the consent of the ordinary of the diocese, it might be laid out in the purchase of other lands. A purchase was made accordingly:—Held, that the bishop was entitled to be paid by the company, not only the costs of his attendance in the master's office, but also of his appearances on the petitions to the court for a reference and confirmation of the master's report. Creech St. Michael (Vicar), Ex parte, 21 L. J., Ch. 677.

Upon a petition for reinvestment in land of money paid into court under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 80, as the purchase-money of lands in strict settlement, the company will not be ordered to pay the costs of any person except the petitioner, but the costs of other persons who are properly served with the petition must come out of the fund. Legge, In re, 8 W. R. 559.

On a petition for the reinvestment of the purchase-money of lands taken by a company in other lands, the petitioners (the parties entitled to the moneys) had served the vendors of the property in which it was proposed that the reinvestment should be made. These second vendors, appearing on the petition, were ordered to have their costs as against the petitioners, but the petitioners were not to have such costs over again against the company. Dylar's Estate, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 975.

(b) Several Applications.

No Limit unless Applications Vexatious.]—Where purchase-money of land taken by a railway company is in court to be invested in the purchase of other land, the court will allow all costs, charges, and expenses, according to the act, of as many investments as may be necessary to consume the whole purchase-money. Bouverie, Ex parte, London and Birmingham Ry., In re, 4 Railw. Cas. 229.

The corporation of the Trinity House were empowered by the act 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 79, to purchase lighthouses; and the act directed that all the reasonable costs, charges, and expenses of reinvesting the purchase-money should be borne by the corporation:—Held, that in the absence of any proof of an attempt to throw expenses upon the corporation by an improper exercise of the power of reinvestment, that there was no limit to the number of separate investments, for the costs of which the corporation were liable. Jones v. Lewis, 2 Macn. & G. 163; 2 H. & Tw. 406; 19 L. J., Ch. 539; 14 Jur. 873. And see S. C., 1 De G. & Sm. 245; 11 Jur. 511.

The costs of a second reinvestment of part of 2,880*l.*, the purchase-moneys paid into court by a railway company, ordered to be paid by them where nothing vexatious appeared in the adoption of that mode of reinvestment by piecemeal. Woolley's Estate, In re, 17 Jur. 850; 1 W. R. 407, 465.

Where purchase-money has been paid into court, the court will order the company to pay the expenses rightly but not capriciously incurred of more than one reinvestment. Brandon v. Brandon, 2 Dr. & Sm. 162; 32 L. J., Ch. 20; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 11; 7 L. T. 499; 11 W. R. 53.

A company having taken land which was the subject of a suit, and paid the money into court, the parties obtained an order for reinvesting a large portion of the money in land. They afterwards applied by petition for a small portion of the remaining fund to be invested, and they served all the parties to the suit:—Held, that the court considering this purchase to be for the benefit of the parties, and neither capricious nor unnecessary, the railway company must pay the costs. Ib.

The corporation of London was empowered by acts for rebuilding London Bridge to purchase and pull down property belonging to the Fishmongers' Company: the purchase-money to be invested and applied in purchase of other property upon petition by the Fishmongers' Company, and the reasonable costs of such investments to be paid by the corporation out of the moneys to be applied for the purposes of the acts:—Held, that unless the petitioners were shewn to be exercising their power of applying for a reinvestment vexatiously and unnecessarily, the corporation must pay the costs of each separate reinvestment, however numerous they might be. Fishmongers' Co., Ex parte, 7 L. T. 668; 11 W. R. 81.

Where the purchase-money amounted to 125,000*l.*, the court did not consider six applications for investment, still leaving 38,440*l.* uninvested, to be unreasonable. St. Katharine's Hospital, In re, 17 Ch. D. 378; 44 L. T. 52; 29 W. R. 495.

Benefit of Parties Interested.]—A railway company was ordered to pay the costs of a second reinvestment in land, the purchase being, in the opinion of the court, for the benefit of the parties interested. Hereford, Hay, and Brecon Ry., In re, 11 L. T. 335; 13 W. R. 134.

Sect. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act contemplates not one application in respect of several reinvestments, but several applications, and where it was shewn to be for the benefit of the parties the court ordered a company to pay the costs of a third reinvestment in a very small purchase. St. Bartholomew's Hospital, In re, 4 Drew. 425.

When the purchase-money of lands taken by a railway company is invested in other lands sold in a suit in this court, a second petition, intituled in the cause, becomes necessary, and the company must bear the expense of both petitions. Carpmael v. Profitt, 17 Jur. 875.

A railway company took lands forming part of the subject-matter of a suit, and paid the money into court under the Lands Clauses Act. A large portion of this money was reinvested on petition in the usual manner. The trustees proposed to purchase a small property which they considered very advantageous for the estate, and petitioned to have the purchase-money, amounting to only a small portion of the residue, paid out of court, and also that the company might bear the costs:—Held, that the costs must be borne by the company, the court considering it to be for the benefit of the cestui que trust to have the fund invested in more than one purchase. Brandon v. Brandon, 2 Dr. & Sm. 162; 32 L. J., Ch. 20; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 11; 7 L. T. 499; 11 W. R. 53.

Special Acts.]—A railway company, under their act, took part of the glebe of a rectory. Part of the purchase-money was invested in other land. The rector bought a small additional piece of land for 6*l.*, and petitioned that that sum might be paid out of the balance of 20*l.* 9*s* 5*d.* remaining in court, and the remainder be paid to him. On making the order, the court directed the company to pay the costs of the second investment. Loughton (Rector), Ex parte, 5 Railw. Cas. 591; 14 Jur. 102.

Costs of a third reinvestment of purchase-money granted to the vendor, the entire purchase-money being very large. St. Katharine's Dock Co., In re, 8 Jur. 456.

Where the purchase-money of lands taken by the London and Birmingham Railway Company has been paid into court, pursuant to 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 36, s. 39, the court will give the parties entitled thereto the costs of two reinvestments of the money in land made pursuant to s. 42 of the above-mentioned act. Boxmoor Waste Lands, Ex parte, Birmingham Ry., In re, 3 Railw. Cas. 513; 8 Jur. 307.

Where, by a railway act, a power was reserved to the court to order the reasonable expenses of reinvesting a sum of money in the bank, the produce of land purchased by the company, to be paid by the company, the court will order the costs of two applications for reinvestments of parts of the same sum to be paid by the company. Semble, the costs of any further application must be borne by the parties applying. Eton College, Ex parte, London and Birmingham Ry., In re, 3 Railw. Cas. 271; 6 Jur. 908.

(c) Attempted Purchases.

Payable by Company.]—Costs of all parties of an abortive bonâ fide attempt by trustees to reinvest part of the moneys, to be paid by the company. Woolley's Estate, In re, 17 Jur. 850; 1 W. R. 407, 465.

The costs of an abortive attempt to reinvest in land money the produce of sale to a railway company, are not costs which, under s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act ought to be paid by the company. Copley, Ex parte, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 297. See cases, infra.

Where there had been, under an order in 1839, an abortive attempt by a tenant for life to reinvest money which had been paid into court for land taken by a railway company, the court ordered the master to tax and certify the costs of the tenant for life incidental to the order of 1839, according to the railway company's act. M'Donald, In re, London and Blackwall Ry., In re, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 865; 2 L. T. 168.

Where a railway company purchased land, and paid the purchase-money into court, and contracts for the purchase of land were subsequently entered into by the beneficiaries, for the purpose of investment, which were afterwards rescinded, though the master reported that the purchases were proper and the title good, the railway company was ordered to pay all the costs of the proceedings relating to the abortive attempts to invest the purchase-money, of a disentailing deed, and of the petition. Vaudrey, Ex parte, North Staffordshire Ry., In re, 3 Giff. 224; 30 L. J., Ch. 885; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 753; 4 L. T. 735.

Where lands have been taken by a railway company, and the price paid into court, and the court has afterwards sanctioned the investment of the fund in a particular purchase, but the purchase has not been completed, owing to a defect in the vendor's title: yet the company is bound to pay the costs of this attempted purchase, as incident to the reinvestment of the fund. Holywell (Rector), Ex parte, Wisbeach, St. Ives, and Cambridge Ry., In re, 2 Dr. & Sm. 463; 35 L. J., Ch. 28; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 579; 12 L. T. 726; 13 W. R. 960.

When the court had approved of a proposed purchase for the reinvestment of a fund representing land taken by a railway company which proved abortive, the title being defective:—Held, that the company must bear the costs of such proposed purchase. Carney's Trusts, In re, 26 L. T. 308; 20 W. R. 407.

Non-approval by Court.]—A petition for the investment of money paid into court by a company was made by the tenant for life, but the investment was not approved of by the court. The company received their costs out of the fund. No order was made as to the petitioner's costs. Hardy's Estate, In re, 18 Jur. 370.

(d) Purchases beyond Money in Court.

Company's Liability not increased.]—The devisees in trust, under the will of J. S. R., presented a petition to the court, praying that a sum of money paid in by a railway company, together with another sum held by them for a like purpose, might be invested in the purchase of certain closes of land of the value of the amount of the two sums, and also praying taxation and payment by the company to the petitioners of the costs, charges and expenses attending the purchase:—Held, that, under the act of parliament, the petitioners were not entitled to any such costs, charges and expenses, nor to the costs of the application. Tetley, Ex parte, Great North of England Ry., In re, 4 Railw. Cas. 55.

Where money is in court under a railway act previous to being laid out in lands to be settled "to the like uses," the court will lend its aid to an advantageous purchase beyond the amount of the money in court, and will direct the extra costs to be paid out of the money in court. Newton, Ex parte, 4 Y. & Coll. 518.

A railway company purchased settled lands, and paid the money into court. Lands were purchased with this sum, and with a sum provided by the tenant for life of the land sold. The court directed that the costs of the company should not be increased by reason of the price given for the purchased land being greater than the sum in court. Branmer's Estate, In re, 14 Jur. 236.

A. purchased Green-acre for 1,000*l.* in lieu of Black-acre, which a railway company had taken from him, and for which they had paid 644*l.* into court. The company were ordered to pay A. the same costs as he would have been entitled to under s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, if Green-acre had cost 644*l.* only. Hodge, Ex parte, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., In re, 16 Sim. 159; 12 Jur. 239.

Lands being taken from a corporation by a railway company, the company paid the price into court. The corporation asked that the amount, with other moneys to be supplied by them, might be laid out in a specified purpose:—Held, that the order should direct the payment of costs according to the Lands Clauses Act; and that it should provide that the corporation should pay all extra costs by reason of the extra amount to be invested. King's College, Cambridge, Ex parte, 5 De G. & Sm. 621.

Where settled lands had been taken by a railway company for the purpose of their undertaking, and the purchase-money paid into court, the court, upon an application to invest that sum together with a sum provided by the tenant for life, ordered that the costs of the company should not be increased by reason of the price given for the purchased land being greater than that paid into court. Loveband, In re, 30 L. J., Ch. 94; 9 W. R. 12.

Where money has been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, and is afterwards invested, together with a larger sum of money, in the purchase of land held under one title, the company must pay all costs except the extra stamp duty on the surplus money. Carlisle Corporation, Ex parte, 1 W. R. 103.

Apportionment—Funds arising from different Sources.]—Two conditional contracts had been entered into by a curate for the purchase of lands as a reinvestment of two sums in court, one being a sum of 539*l.* consols, and the other a sum of 4,414*l.* consols. The former sum represented moneys which had been paid into court by a railway company in respect of glebe land belonging to the curacy taken by the company under their statutory powers; the latter sum represented moneys that had arisen from the granting of leases of the land belonging to the curacy under the provisions of a private act. The curate presented a petition for the approval of the contracts by the court:—Held, that the railway company's fund should be applied to one only of the two contracts, and that the company ought to pay (1) half the costs of the petition, such costs not to exceed the costs of a summons adjourned to the judge in chambers; (2) a ratable proportion of the ad valorem stamp on the conveyance; and (3) one fourth part of the other costs of reinvestment under both the contracts. Bilston (Perpetual Curate), Ex parte, 37 W. R. 460.

(e) Copyholds.

Enfranchisement.]—There being two sets of trustees, one of freeholds and the other of copyholds, settled to the same trusts, the freeholds were sold to a company under the Lands Clauses Act :—Held, that the proceeds of that sale might be invested in procuring the enfranchisement of the copyholds. Costs of both sets of trustees ordered to be paid by the company. Cheshunt College, In re, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 995; 3 W. R. 638.

Upon a petition that money paid into court by a railway company upon the purchase of land might be applied for the purpose of enfranchising other property belonging to the vendor :—Held, that under the Lands Clauses Act, an enfranchisement of copyholds was equivalent to reinvestment in other lands, and the court had power to direct such an application of the money, and the company must pay the costs incurred thereby. Dixon v. Jackson, 25 L. J., Ch. 588; 4 W. R. 450.

The guardians and overseers of a parish purchased copyhold lands in settlement, and also the lord's interest, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 69, and paid the money into court. On a petition by the tenant for life for investment and payment of the dividends to him :—Held, that the guardians were liable to pay the costs of the purchase, and also of the enfranchisement. Wilson, In re, 8 L. T. 413; 11 W. R. 712.

Fine on Admission.]—A railway company having taken copyholds, and paid the purchase-money into court, an order was made for reinvestment of the money upon other copyholds, and for payment by the company of the costs, charges, and expenses incurred of, or relating to, the purchase and the costs of the conveyances, and of the application for reinvestment and consequent thereon :—Held, that the company was not liable to pay the fine upon the admission to the copyholds. Sawston (Vicar), Ex parte, Eastern Counties Ry., In re, 27 L. J., Ch. 755; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 473; 6 W. R. 492.

(f) Leaseholds.

The dean and canons of Manchester presented a petition to have moneys which had been paid into court by several railway companies and other public bodies for lands taken from them reinvested in the purchase of leasehold interests in other lands, of which they were reversioners in fee :—Held, that the companies and other public bodies must pay the costs of reinvestment in the same way as if the purchase had been of freeholds. Manchester (Dean), Ex parte, 28 L. T. 184.

When all parties interested were sui juris, a railway company was ordered to pay the costs of investing the purchase-money of a leasehold in a freehold estate. Parker, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 473; L. R. 13 Eq. 495; 26 L. T. 12; 20 W. R. 289.

(g) In Case of Lunatics.

Where land belonging to a lunatic is taken, the next of kin of the lunatic have a right to attend the sale, and will have their costs of appearing upon a petition for investment of the purchase-money. Briscoe, In re, 2 De G. & J. 249; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 859; 4 N. R. 311.

(h) Trustees and Remaindermen.

Costs of trustees who had been served, and appeared on a petition by a tenant for life for investments of railway purchase-moneys allowed against the company. Cleveland's (Duke) Harte Estates, In re, 1 Dr. & Sm. 46; 2 L. T. 78; 8 W. R. 336.

Where a fund is standing to the credit of a cause, as well as in the matter of the act, a petition by a tenant for life for reinvestment in land of money paid into court under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, must be served upon all persons interested in the money, or the trustees, if any, who represent them; and the company must pay their costs. Bradshaw v. Fane, 1 N. R. 159; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 166.

Costs of remaindermen and trustees, who appeared as respondents, upon a petition presented under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 80, and in a suit for reinvestment in land, disallowed. Wilson v. Foster, Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., In re, 26 Beav. 398; 28 L. J., Ch. 410; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 113; 7 W. R. 172.

Where the purchase-money of settled estates, which were the subject of a private act, requiring the sanction of the court to a reinvestment in land, had been paid into court by a railway company, a petition was presented by the tenant for life for reinvestment in land, and served upon the trustees and remainderman, according to the provisions of the private act :—Held, that the company was not bound to pay the costs of the trustees and remainderman. Bowes, In re, 33 L. J., Ch. 711; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 817; 10 L. T. 598; 12 W. R. 929.

(i) Inquiry as to Title.

Whether payable by Company.]—The court will, on the construction of the general clauses in railway acts, fix the railway company with the costs of the master's report as to the title of the lands to be settled to the like uses. Marsh, Ex parte, Eastern Counties Ry., In re, 5 Jur. 502.

Purchase-money had been paid into court by a railway company in the usual manner, under the Lands Clauses Act; and the parties interested in the money wishing to purchase another piece of land, a reference had been made to the master as to whether it would be a proper purchase. The master had refused to certify that it was so, but it did not appear on what ground. On application for payment of the money out of court, the costs of the former application and reference were ordered to come out of the fund. Stevens, Ex parte, 15 Jur. 243.

Under the construction of s. 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, a purchase made and completed previously to a reference to the master, will not, although it be afterwards approved, be a purchase within the meaning of the act, so as to entitle the petitioner to his costs. Bouverie, Ex parte, 5 Railw. Cas. 431.

Under the act for facilitating the conveyance of workhouses (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 69), which enables the poor-law guardians to purchase, but not compulsorily, lands of persons under disability, and empowers the court to order the expenses attending the purchase, payment into court, or application for reinvestment, to be paid by the poor-law guardians, but makes no further provision for payment of the expenses of the investigation of title on a reinvestment :—Held, that such expenses are, on the interpretation of the whole act, payable by the poor-law guardians. Byron's Settlement, In re, 4 De G. M. & G. 694.

Lands which were settled to uses were purchased by a corporation, in pursuance of an act of parliament, and the purchase-money was paid into court. Prior to an application to the court for reinvestment of the purchase-money in other lands, the tenant for life laid the abstract relating to the lands proposed to be purchased before his private conveyancer, who approved of the title. An application was then made by the tenant for life for the reinvestment of the purchase-money in such lands, and the usual order for a reference to chambers as to title was made. After consultation with the private conveyancer of the tenant for life, the title was also approved by the conveyancing counsel of the court. The master, on taxation, disallowed the fees paid to the private conveyancer of the tenant for life for advising on the abstract:—Held, that the whole of such fees ought not to be borne by the corporation, but that some allowance ought to be made by the corporation in respect thereof. Jones, In re, 27 L. J., Ch. 706; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 887; 6 W. R. 762.

(j) Where Several Companies.

Payable in Equal Shares.]—The bishop of London having sold property to divers corporate bodies they paid the purchase-money into court. The bishop being desirous of reinvesting the money in the purchase of leasehold interests granted out of other lands of the see, petitioned for payment of the money out of court, praying that the costs of reinvestment, might be paid by the several corporate bodies, the purchasers:—Held, that the costs of the reinvestment must be paid by them in equal shares, and not ratably. London (Bishop), Ex parte, 2 De G. F. & J. 14; 29 L. J., Ch. 575; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 640; 2 L. T. 365; 8 W. R. 465.

Costs of reinvestment in land of compensation money paid in by two or more railway companies do not follow the rule which directs the companies to bear the costs of the petition equally, but will be apportioned according to the circumstances of the particular case. Christchurch, Ex parte, 9 W. R. 474. See preceding case.

On a petition for the reinvestment in land of a sum made up of four several amounts, varying from 490*l.* consols to 1,797*l.* consols paid into court to the credit of the petitioners by four several respondents for the purchase-moneys of lands taken under statutory powers, the costs of the reinvestment were ordered to be borne by the respondents equally. Christ's Hospital, Ex parte, 27 W. R. 458.

The rule laid down in London (Bishop), Ex parte (2 De G. F. & J. 14), that the costs of the reinvestment of moneys paid into court by several companies for land taken by them under the Lands Clauses Act, ought to be borne by the companies in equal shares, except the costs of the ad valorem stamp on the conveyance, is to be followed in the absence of peculiar circumstances of hardship. Byron, In re, 1 De G. J. & S. 358; 2 N. R. 294; 32 L. J., Ch. 584; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 838; 8 L. T. 562; 11 W. R. 790.

Four distinct railway companies took portions of the lands of a college, and paid the money into court. A portion of one fund had already been reinvested, leaving a balance in court, and a petition was presented for reinvesting the three other funds and a part only of such balance:—Held, that the costs were payable by the four companies equally. Merton College, In re, 1 De G. J. & S. 361; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 222; 10 L. T. 8; 12 W. R. 503.

The trustees of two charities, being identical, purchased one estate on behalf of the two charities out of two sums of money paid into court by two distinct railway companies for parts of the charity lands taken separately by them. The proceedings to complete and apportion the estate were consolidated:—Held, that the costs of the joint proceedings were payable by the railway companies equally and not in proportion to the values. L. B. & S. C. Ry. v. Shropshire Union Ry., 23 Beav. 605.

Lands were taken by three separate companies from the same owner; after which one of the companies leased its line for 999 years:—Held, that each company must bear one-third of the costs of the reinvestment, with a proportionate part of the ad valorem stamp. Carlisle and Silloth Ry., In re, 33 Beav. 253.

When parts of an estate are taken by several railway companies, and the united compensation moneys are invested in one purchase, the ordinary costs of reinvestment are to be borne by them equally, and not in the proportions of their respective compensation moneys so reinvested. Lonsdale (Earl), Ex parte, 32 Beav. 397.

Two railway companies took college lands and paid the purchase-money into court. On petition to invest the whole of one sum and part of the other in a leasehold brickfield, with 977 years to run, adjoining a college living, and thereby to avoid the nuisance: order made, and for payment of the costs equally by both companies. Trinity College, Cambridge, Ex parte, 18 L. T. 849.

Great Inequality in Amounts.]—The rule that the costs of a reinvestment in land of funds paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act by different bodies as the compensation money for land taken are to be borne equally by the different bodies, does not apply when there is a great inequality in the amounts of the different funds, but the costs will in that case be apportioned ratably between the different bodies. St. Bartholomew's Hospital, Ex parte, L. R. 20 Eq. 369; 32 L. T. 652.

A reinvestment was made in land of several funds in court representing compensation for lands compulsorily taken by different public bodies. There was great inequality in the amounts of the funds reinvested:—Held, that the scale of charge under the general order made by virtue of the Solicitor's Remuneration Act, 1881, the ad valorem stamp on the conveyance, and the surveyor's fees (if any) ought to be borne, not equally, but ratably according to the amounts contributed to the purchase-money by the several bodies who took the lands under their statutory powers. St. Bartholomew's Hospital, Ex parte (L. R. 20 Eq. 369), followed; London (Bishop), Ex parte (2 De G. F. & J. 14), and Christ's Hospital, Ex parte (2 H. & M. 166), distinguished. Bishopsgate Foundation, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 167; [1894] 1 Ch. 185; 8 R. 50; 70 L. T. 231; 42 W. R. 199.

On a petition for reinvestment of several unequal sums of money paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, by a variety of different bodies, the mere inequality of such sums, however great, is not a ground for departing from the rule as to the apportionment of costs laid down in London (Bishop), Ex parte (2 De G. F. & J. 14); nor yet that only a portion of the fund paid in by any particular company is proposed to be taken for investment. Christ's Hospital, Ex parte, 2 Hem. & M. 166.

Oppression and Injury.]—Semble, that this rule will be departed from, in cases of oppression for instance, where a particular company has been brought frequently before the court for the investment of small instalments. Ib.

The rule in the London (Bishop), Ex parte (2 De G. F. & J. 14), as to the payment in equal shares by several railway companies of the costs of a petition for a single investment in land of several sums of money paid in by them respectively, will be observed in all cases, except where it is shewn that the application is made in a form intentionally to injure a particular railway company. Merton College, In re, 33 Beav. 257; 11 W. R. 237. See S. C., on appeal, supra.

When Companies Amalgamated.]—Where one petition is presented for the reinvestment of money paid into court by several railway companies, the costs of the reinvestment other than the ad valorem duty must be paid by the several companies equally; but where the money to be invested has been paid in by several companies, some of which have subsequently amalgamated, the amalgamated company must bear the costs in proportion to the number of companies which it represents. Maryport and Carlisle Ry., In re, 1 N. R. 506; 32 L. J., Ch. 811; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1217; 11 W. R. 410.

Portions of land belonging to a corporation were taken by four different companies, the undertakings of three of which afterwards became united:—Held, that the costs of a joint permanent investment of the purchase-moneys must be borne in halves by the subsisting companies. Corpus Christi College, Oxford, Ex parte, 41 L. J., Ch. 170; L. R. 13 Eq. 334.

Portions of an estate were taken by three companies, two of which afterwards merged into one company:—Held, that the amalgamated companies must bear two-thirds of the costs of a joint reinvestment. Lonsdale (Earl), Ex parte, 32 Beav. 397.

Crown taking Land.]—Where it was sought to reinvest a fund in court, a portion of which had been paid in as purchase-money of lands taken by the Crown, and two remaining portions on account of lands taken by two railway companies:—Held, that the costs, which were to be borne equally by the companies, should not be increased by reason of the fund exceeding the amounts paid into court by the companies. Att.-Gen. v. Rochester Corporation, 16 L. T. 408; 15 W. R. 777.

Surveyor's Fee.]—On a petition for reinvestment in land of moneys paid in by several companies and public bodies, the surveyor's fee was ordered to be borne by the several companies and public bodies ratably, according to the amount of the funds invested by them. London Corporation, Ex parte, 37 L. J., Ch. 375; L. R. 5 Eq. 418; 17 L. T. 489; 16 W. R. 355. See Bishopsgate Foundation, In re, supra.

Number of Petitions or Motions.]—Two portions of a settled estate had been taken under the Lands Clauses Act by different corporations, and the purchase-money had been paid into court and dealt with by different branches of the court. It being desired to invest the two funds together in the purchase of land, two petitions were presented. The court allowed the costs of one only as costs under the act. Gore Langton, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 405; L. R. 10 Ch. 328; 32 L. T. 785; 23 W. R. 842.

Three distinct parts of an estate, belonging to the same person as tenant for life, were taken by three several railway companies, under their compulsory powers. The purchase-money payable by each company was paid into court, and petitions being presented for investment, one of these became attached to the Rolls and the other two to the vice-chancellor's court. Two of the companies were afterwards amalgamated. Three motions for payment in discharge of an incumbrance were served on behalf of the tenant for life in the three matters, and the matter attached to the Rolls Court having been transferred to the vice-chancellor's:—Held, that only the costs of two motions should be allowed to be borne by the subsisting companies moietively. Midland Great Western Ry., In re, 9 L. R., Ir. 16.

XV. Buildings or Works.

Alterations.]—The costs of obtaining orders for the investment of purchase-money, paid by a railway company, in alterations of almshouses, not to be borne by the company. Buckinghamshire Ry., In re, 14 Jur. 1065.

New Erections.]—The act of parliament which regulated the taking and using of land by the Great Western Railway company empowered them to purchase the vicarage-house of Twerton, and authorised the purchase of other land, and the building a new vicarage-house with the purchase or compensation money, but did not provide for the costs, charges and expenses of obtaining the compensation money out of court to defray the expenses of the building; the express words of the act only declaring the liability of the company to pay such costs where the compensation money is taken out of court to invest in the purchase of land:—Held, that the company were not liable for the costs, charges and expenses attendant upon obtaining the compensation money out of court for the purpose of building the new vicarage. Madon, Ex parte, G. W. Ry., In re, 4 Railw. Cas. 49; 9 Jur. 74.

Under s. 69 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, farm buildings which are rendered useless by a line of railway running through a farm, and separating the buildings from the arable portion of the farm:—Held, that the costs of an application to the court for the reinvestment of railway purchase-moneys, in the substitution of new farm buildings for old buildings, do not come within s. 80, and are therefore not payable by the company, but the court will not order the costs of the company's appearance to be paid by the petitioners. Milward, Ex parte, Oxford, Worcester and Wolverhampton Ry., In re, 27 Beav. 571; 29 L. J., Ch. 245; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 478; 1 L. T. 153.

Under s. 69 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, the court may order the purchase-money of lands to be invested in building, and, as a necessary consequence, the costs of the application may be paid by the company. Whitfield (Incumbent), Ex parte, 1 John. & H. 610; 30 L. J., Ch. 816; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 909; 5 L. T. 343; 9 W. R. 764.

A petition was presented for payment out of court of 514*l.*, which had been paid in by the respondents, in respect of certain land taken by them from the petitioners. The petitioners proposed to expend 1,000*l.* in rebuilding the north porch of the parish church:—Held, that the 514*l.* might be paid out upon the production of the chief clerk's certificate that at least that sum had been expended in rebuilding the porch, the respondents to pay the costs of the petition and consequent thereon. St. Alphege (Parson), In re, 55 L. T. 314.

Petition to have purchase-money which had been paid into court by a railway company paid out and applied in rebuilding houses:—Held, that the company must pay the costs of the petition. Canterbury (Dean), Ex parte, Kent Coast Ry., In re, 7 L. T. 240; 10 W. R. 505.

A company which had paid into court the purchase-money of lands of a charity taken by them under the Lands Clauses Act, was ordered to pay the costs of a petition to have the money paid out towards the erection of certain works undertaken by the petitioners, under the sanction of the court, for the purpose of improving the supply of water to a town. Lathropp, In re, 35 Beav. 297; L. R. 1 Eq. 467; 13 L. T. 784; 14 W. R. 326.

Temporary Erections.]—The procuring and fitting up of houses for the temporary accommodation of the patients of a hospital, whose original buildings have been taken by a railway company, under the Lands Clauses Act, is a proper reinvestment within ss. 69 and 80. A company was accordingly ordered to pay the costs of a petition presented by the trustees of an hospital to obtain payment out of court of part of their compensation money for the purpose of such investment. St. Thomas's Hospital, In re, 11 W. R. 1018.

Architects' and Surveyors' Fees.]—The costs, charges and expenses of an investment of a fund paid into court by a public authority, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, in the erection of new buildings, and of obtaining the order, and the costs, charges and expenses, including the architect's fees, properly incurred in or about or in relation to the contract for the execution of the works were ordered to be paid by the public authority. Arden, In re, 70 L. T. 506—C. A.

Where the purchase-moneys in court of lands compulsorily taken are authorised to be paid out and applied in defraying the expenses of erecting buildings, and it is ordered that the costs of such investment, pursuant to s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (including therein all reasonable charges and expenses incidental to the investment), shall be borne by the parties by whom the lands were taken, the fees payable to the architect and surveyor for planning and superintending such buildings will come within the term "expenses of building," and are not costs, charges and expenses of and incidental to the investment. Butchers' Co., In re, 53 L. T. 491.

xvi. Payment out to Persons absolutely entitled.

(a) In General.

Jurisdiction.]—The court has no jurisdiction, except by express enactment, to make a company pay the costs of a petition for payment out to persons becoming absolutely entitled of moneys paid into the Court of Chancery, or the Court of Exchequer, in respect of lands taken by the company from owners under disability. Ecclesiastical Commissioners, Ex parte, 5 N. R. 483.

Construction of Private Acts.]—Where part of the purchase-money remained in court to await the decision of contested claims, the Eastern Counties Railway Company were, under s. 48 of their act, held liable to pay the costs of the application of the person rightly entitled to have the money paid to him. Gardiner, Ex parte, Eastern Counties Ry., In re, 3 Railw. Cas. 117.

Upon the construction of a railway act, the court declined to make any order as to the costs of an application by vendors to have payment out of court of part of the purchase-money and investment of the remainder. Molyneux, Ex parte, 2 Coll. 273; 9 Jur. 786.

The costs of an application for the transfer out of court of a sum of stock, the produce of land taken by a railway company, under the powers of their act, from a party under disability:—Held, upon the construction of the act, to be payable by the company. Marshall, Ex parte, G. W. Ry., In re, 1 Ph. 560; 4 Railw. Cas. 58.

Where compensation had been paid into court by the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company:—Held, on the construction of their act, that the costs of obtaining payment of the money out of court were not to be borne by the company, Bristol and Exeter Ry., In re, 11 Jur. 686.

Under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 62, the commissioners of woods and forests are bound to pay the costs of a reference to ascertain the rights of parties to the purchase-money of premises purchased under the act, as expenses incidental to the purchase. Woods and Forests Commissioners, In re, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 487.

The court will, under the words "reasonable costs, charges and expenses," in 2 & 3 Vict. c. 61, s. 29, award all necessary costs incurred by parties in obtaining payment out of court of the purchase-money of lands required for the purposes of the commission, or of having it invested upon trusts similar to those to which the lands so required were subject. Shannon Commissioners, In re, Fl. & K. 13; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 355.

The costs of payment out of court of money paid in, under s. 67 of the statute 4 Geo. 4, c. 64 (Gaol Act), being the purchase-money of lands taken by justices of the peace, under ss. 45 and 46 of the same act, were ordered to be paid by the corporation of a borough, who, under the Municipal Corporation Act, represented the justices by whom the lands were taken. Coventry JJ., In re, 19 Beav. 158; 24 L. J., Ch. 586; 3 W. R. 141.

The purchase-money of lands taken compulsorily by the commissioners of woods and forests, under the 1 Vict. c. 7, was paid into the Court of Exchequer, and an order was made for its investment at the cost of the commissioners. The stock was afterwards transferred into the Court of Chancery, under the 5 Vict. c. 7. Upon a petition for a transfer of the stock by the parties who would have been entitled to the real estate:—Held, that the costs of the petition and transfer must be borne by the commissioners. Robertson, In re, 23 Beav. 433; 26 L. J., Ch. 349; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 784.

The commissioners of works and public buildings took lands under the powers of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 87, s. 49, and paid the money into court:—Held, that they must pay the costs of payment out again, although the act in terms directed the payment of costs where the money was to be applied in the purchase of other lands, tenements or hereditaments. Edmeade, In re, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 986; 8 W. R. 327.

The commissioners of woods and forests took possession of property under two special acts of parliament, and paid the money into court. By the first of these acts, passed before the Lands Clauses Act, the commissioners were to be liable to the costs of reinvestment of the purchase-money in other lands. By the second act, passed subsequently to the Lands Clauses Act, the powers and provisions of the former special act were extended to this. Upon a petition for payment of the money out of court to the parties interested :—Held, that the incorporation of the Lands Clauses Act was excluded, so that the commissioners were not liable to pay the costs of the petition, although such costs would have been payable under the Lands Clauses Act. Cherry's Settled Estates, In re, 4 De G. F. & J. 333; 31 L. J., Ch. 351; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 446; 6 L. T. 31; 10 W. R. 305. See now cases ante, col. 1424.

In a transferred Exchequer case, the court was only authorised by the act to order the costs of reinvestment of the purchase-money of lands compulsorily taken by a corporation. Parties having become absolutely entitled, applied for payment to them out of court of the money, instead of reinvesting it :—Held, that the corporation must pay the costs. Tiverton Market Act, In re, 26 Beav. 239.

Where a railway act authorises the payment out of court of purchase-money for the purpose of investment in land, and directs the company to pay the costs of the application for that purpose, but makes no mention of the payment of money to the persons entitled to it, the court has jurisdiction to order payment to the persons entitled, but not to order the company to pay the costs of the application. Musgrave, In re, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 797.

Where purchase-money had been paid into court by a railway company, and invested in stock :—Held, on the construction of the company's act, that the court had no power to order the company to pay the costs of obtaining a transfer to the person absolutely entitled, notwithstanding they might have been ordered under the act to pay much larger costs had the petition prayed a reinvestment in land. Laud, In re, 4 Kay & J. 81.

The like decision upon a similar act (as in Laud, In re, 4 Kay & J. 81), in a matter transferred from the Exchequer notwithstanding. Mouseley, In re, 4 Kay & J. 86, n.

Purchase-money had been paid into the Court of Chancery in 1835, under an act which provided, that it should "be lawful for the court to order the expenses of all purchases made with the fund in pursuance of this act, together with the necessary costs and charges of obtaining such order," to be paid by the company lodging it :—Held, that the court had no power to order the costs of drawing-out the fund to be paid by the company. Ulster Canal Co., In re, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 208.

Under the compulsory powers of an act, a public body purchased part of a settled estate, and paid the purchase-money into the Court of Exchequer. The act provided that money so paid in should be reinvested in the purchase of land, and that the public body should pay the expenses of all purchases to be made in pursuance of the act :—Held, that, although it was a matter transferred from the Court of Exchequer the Court of Chancery had no power to order the public body to pay the costs of a petition for the payment of the fund to persons who had become absolutely entitled to it. Harrison, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 77; L. R. 10 Eq. 532; 18 W. R. 1065.

Purchase-money had been paid into the Court of Exchequer by a company incorporated under an act prior to the Lands Clauses Act, which provided that the court should have power to order the costs of all purchases, together with the necessary costs of obtaining such order to be paid by the company. The costs of a petition praying for the payment of the dividends of the investments of the purchase-money to a tenant for life had been ordered by the Court of Exchequer to be paid by the company :—Held, that the Court of Chancery had no power to order the costs of a petition for transfer of the fund and payment out of the dividends to a person beneficially entitled, to be paid by the company. Williams, In re, L. R. 12 Eq. 488.

A sum of money had been paid into court for purchase of land by a railway company, under their special act. By a section of the act, after making provision for the reinvestment of moneys paid in, it was provided that "the costs, charges and expenses of obtaining the proper orders, and of the other proceedings for such purposes, and of the payment of the dividends and interest of the government or real securities, and of the payment of the principal of the purchase or compensation-money, and of the government or real securities purchased therewith, out of the court, should be paid by the company" :—Held, that the company must pay the costs of the application for paying the purchase-money out of court. Toft's Estate, In re, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 131.

Lands Clauses Act.]—Where money is deposited in court under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, the court has under s. 80 jurisdiction to order the company to pay the costs. Flower, Ex parte, L. B. & S. C. Ry., In re, 36 L. J., Ch. 193; L. R. 1 Ch. 599; 15 L. T. 258; 14 W. R. 1016.

A special railway act, which is repealed and in part re-enacted by a subsequent amalgamating act, is thereby incorporated with the latter within the meaning of s. 80 of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, providing for the payment of costs in cases where moneys are deposited under the provisions of that act, or of "the special act, or any act incorporated therewith." Therefore, where money had been deposited under a special act, which did not provide for the costs of obtaining payment out of court of deposited moneys, but which was re-enacted by an amalgamating act, with which the Lands Clauses Act was incorporated :—Held, that the costs of payment out of court were within the last-mentioned act. Ellison, In re, 8 De G. M. & G. 62; 25 L. J., Ch. 379; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 293; 4 W. R. 306.

Certain land belonging partly to infants having been taken by a company, the money was paid into court. The persons entitled to the fund, having attained their majority, petitioned for payment of the money to them :—Held, that the company must pay the costs of the petition. Slater's Devisees, Ex parte, 5 Railw. Cas. 700; 18 L. J., Ch. 431. See also Palmer, Ex parte, 13 Jur. 781.

After Order for Payment of Dividends.]—Notwithstanding previous orders for payment to a tenant for life of dividends on purchase-money of lands compulsorily taken, the costs of which had been borne by the company, the court will order the company to pay the costs of an application by the tenant for life for payment out of court of the corpus to trustees under the provisions of the Second Land Act, 1882. Secus where the applicant was absolutely entitled to the fund at the time when the application for payment of dividends only was made. Belfast Corporation, In re, 31 L. R., Ir. 258. S. P., Ecclesiastical Commissioners, Ex parte, 39 L. J., Ch. 623.

Sales of Stock.]—Where lands which were subject to a lease were taken for the purposes of a company, and the purchase-money in respect of such leasehold interest was invested under the Lands Clauses Act, the company was ordered to pay the costs of the half-yearly sales of stock for the purposes of distribution. Long's Estate, In re, 1 W. R. 226.

Transfer to Separate Account—Termination of Liability.]—After a fund which represents purchase-money paid by a railway company has been invested and transferred to an account not entitled in the matter of a railway company, the liability of the company to pay costs ceases in respect of any subsequent investment or petition for payment of the fund. Fisher v. Fisher, 43 L. J., Ch. 262 ; L. R. 17 Eq. 340 ; 29 L. T. 720 ; 22 W. R. 638.

Both Parties in Default.]—A tenant at will having agreed to give possession of certain lands to a railway company, for 23*l*., subsequently refused to give possession, unless his sister, who, he alleged, had an equal interest in the premises, was also satisfied. The money was offered to be paid on his giving possession, but was not formally tendered. The company having lodged the sum agreed on in court, to the separate credit of the tenant, solely alleging, in the warrant, his refusal to accept it as the reason for the lodgment ; the court held that the tenant was entitled to draw the money out of court, but refused to give any costs, holding each party to have been in default. S. E. Ry., In re, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 398.

Deduction from Purchase-money.] — After notice to treat for the purchase of houses, the owner granted leases for three years to his weekly tenants. The tenants sent in claims, which ultimately failed, but the promoters incurred considerable costs in adjudicating upon them. On a petition by the landowner for the payment out of his compensation, which had been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 76 :—Held, that the court could not authorise any deduction from the purchase-money to reimburse the promoters for their loss, or order the petitioner to pay costs ; but that the court had jurisdiction to refuse him his costs, and would do so. Topple, Ex parte, 25 L. T. 407 ; 19 W. R. 1058.

Apportionment.]—Where the court is not authorised to order the costs of an application for payment out of court of principal to be paid by the company, it will not order the costs to be apportioned because the application includes a small sum of dividends. Metford's Trust, In re, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 796 ; 8 W. R. 634.

Upon petition for payment out of court of money paid in pursuant to an award in respect of land taken by a railway company, to a portion of which land the petitioners subsequently to the arbitration discovered that they were not entitled, an apportionment under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 78, was directed by the court, the petitioners paying the costs occasioned by such apportionment. Alston's Estate, In re, 5 W. R. 189.

Parties Served and Appearing.]—Where a fund in court exceeding 500*l*. in value, and representing the purchase-money of settled lands taken by a railway company, with accumulated interest, had not been dealt with for upwards of fifteen years, and it had become necessary under the Chancery Funds Rules, 1874, r. 91, and the Chancery Funds Amended Orders, 1874, Ord. 14, to serve the official solicitor with the petition for the payment out of the fund :—Held, that his costs were not payable by the railway company. Clarke's Estate, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 88 ; 21 Ch. D. 776.

Where one of several persons entitled petitions under the act, and serves the other persons, it is not of course that the company should pay the costs of such respondents. Melling v. Bird, 22 L. J., Ch. 599 ; 17 Jur. 155 ; 1 W. R. 219. See St. Margaret's, Leicester, Prebend, In re, 10 L. T. 221.

A party who, from the heading of the account, was properly served with a petition, but whose appearance was unnecessary, refused his costs. Coventry JJ., In re, 19 Beav. 158 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 586 ; 3 W. R. 141.

Where land belonging to an infant was sold to a company, and the purchase-money paid into court ; upon a petition presented by the infant on attaining twenty-one for payment of the fund, part to himself and part in satisfaction of a debt due to the estate of his guardian, one of whose executors he was, the court refused to allow the costs of the other executors appearing on the petition. Sinclair, In re, 16 L. T. 474.

—— Trustees.]—Lands devised for the benefit of many persons in aliquot shares, were taken by a railway company, and the purchase-money paid into court. Upon a petition by the surviving trustee and four of the cestuis que trustent, for the payment out, to which the remaining cestuis que trustent were respondents, and appeared by four separate counsel, the court ordered the company to pay the costs of all such separate appearances, except that of one of the respondents, who had originally been a co-petitioner. Long, In re, 33 L. J., Ch. 620 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 417 ; 10 L. T. 21 ; 12 W. R. 460.

Where a railway takes lands vested in trustees under a will, and the purchase-money is paid into court, and carried to the account of the trustees, during the life of a cestui que trust, and the dividends ordered to be paid to them until further order, they have a right to appear upon a petition by the parties entitled to the money for payment out, and to have their costs against the company. Burnell, In re, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 289 ; 10 L. T. 127 ; 12 W. R. 568.

Petition by a cestui que trust entitled absolutely to a fund paid into court by a railway company :—Held, that the trustee had properly appeared by a separate counsel, and the company must pay the costs of his appearance. Metropolitan Ry., Ex parte, 16 W. R. 996.

A railway company, under their compulsory powers, took land comprised in a settlement, and paid the purchase-money into court. A testamentary appointment was subsequently made by the tenant for life under a power contained in the settlement, and on her death a petition was presented by her appointees for the payment of the money out of court. In consequence of the terms of the appointment, it became necessary to serve the petition upon the trustees of the marriage settlements of two of the appointees, and additional costs were occasioned:—Held, that the railway company, having taken the land subject to the possibility that in ordinary events it might be dealt with by way of settlement, must pay the costs (not being costs of adverse litigation) of all parties. Quære, whether the same principle is not applicable to costs occasioned by incumbrances effected subsequently to the payment into court. Brooshoft's Settlement, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 654; 42 Ch. D. 250; 61 L. T. 320; 37 W. R. 744.

Two Hearings.]—A petition was set down for hearing before Bacon, V.-C., only the railway company was served, and they not opposing, the Vice-Chancellor made an order sanctioning certain expenditure which was asked for by the petition. Before, however, this order had been drawn up, the making of it came to the knowledge of the remaindermen. They then applied to the Vice-Chancellor to have the petition reheard in their presence. This was done, and the Vice-Chancellor made a new order, refusing to sanction any of the expenditure asked for:—Held, that the railway company could only be called upon to pay the costs of one hearing before the Vice-Chancellor. Leigh's Estate, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 687; L. R. 6 Ch. 887; 25 L. T. 644; 19 W. R. 105.

Persons holding Common Lands—Amount.]—Common land was taken, and a sum paid under the Lands Clauses Act to a committee of commoners, was, on a bill filed, paid into court. The different persons who in chambers established their claims to share in the funds were held entitled to receive three guineas each for their costs. Waterton v. Burt, 39 L. J., Ch. 425; 18 W. R. 683.

Petition for the transfer of funds in court (amounting to upwards of 80,000*l.*) into the names of the official trustees of charitable funds. The funds had been paid into court by various public bodies in respect of charity lands situate in numerous parishes in the city of London, and which had been taken under compulsory powers. Under the powers of the City of London Parochial Charities Act, 1883, the charity commissioners had made a scheme for the administration of the funds, and such scheme was binding on the several corporations or public bodies, rectors, vicars, churchwardens and others, in whose names respectively the funds were standing. The petition had been served on these corporations or public bodies (thirty-two in number). Some of the sums in the court amounted to less than 1,000*l.*:—Held, that the thirty-two corporations or public bodies, being bound by the scheme, the service on them was unnecessary, and these costs must be disallowed. As to the mode of the application, that the charity commissioners had exercised a proper discretion, and that the costs ought not to be limited to those which would have been incurred on summonses. St. Albans, Wood Street, In re, 66 L. T. 51.

The purchase-money for land, the property of a charity, taken under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, had been paid into court, and invested in government securities. A petition was now presented by the trustees of the charity for the transfer of the fund to the account of "The Official Trustees of Charitable Funds":—Held, that this must be considered as a petition for payment of money out of court; and, therefore, that the parties taking the land must pay the costs of the petition. Bristol Free Grammar School, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 317.

Land belonging to a charity was taken by a corporation under the Lands Clauses Act and the purchase-money paid into court. The charity commissioners having approved a scheme for the reinvestment of the purchase-money in land, and directed that the money when paid out to the official trustee of charity funds should be applied in the proposed purchase, the trustees of the charity petitioned for the transfer of the fund in court to the official trustee, and that the costs, including the costs of reinvestment, might be paid by the corporation:—Held, that payment to the official trustee was payment to a person absolutely entitled, and the corporation were not liable to pay any further costs. Bishop Monk's Horfield Trusts, In re, 43 L. T. 793; 29 W. R. 462.

Where a change of interest in certain charity lands, after payment into court of the purchase-money, was caused by the charity being superseded by the school board, and new scheme sanctioned and new governors substituted for the old trustees:—Held, on a petition by the new governors for payment out of the moneys in court, that the change of interest was not caused by the act of the trustees, and that the company was liable for the costs. Shakespeare Walk School, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 677; 12 Ch. D. 178; 28 W. R. 148.

When a petition was presented by the trustees of a charity for the transfer of the purchase-money of lands taken by the commissioners of woods and forests under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 87, the court refused to make any order as to costs, except that the trustees were to have theirs out of the fund. St. Dunstan's Charity Schools, In re, L. R. 12 Eq. 537; 24 L. T. 613; 19 W. R. 887.

(c) Tenant in Tail (Disentailing Deed).

A tenant in tail had part of his land taken by a railway company, and barred the entail in the money which had been paid into court, and which he petitioned might be paid out to him; the company were held not to be liable to the costs. Thoroton, Ex parte, 17 L. J., Ch. 167; 12 Jur. 130.

A disentailing assurance necessary to enable a landowner to obtain the purchase moneys of land taken by a company and paid into court:—Held, to be "costs in consequence of the purchase," and payable by the company. Brooking v. South Devon Ry., 2 Giff. 31; 29 L. J., Ch. 151; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 441; 2 L. T. 204. See Vaudrey, Ex parte, North Staffordshire Ry., In re, 3 Giff. 224; 30 L. J., Ch. 885; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 753; 4 L. T. 735.

Upon a petition for the transfer to the petitioner of funds lodged in court as the purchase-money of lands taken by commissioners under their compulsory powers, of which lands the petitioner was tenant in tail in possession, the court refused to direct that the costs of a deed disentailing the funds in court were payable by the commissioners. Allen, Ex parte, 7 L. R. Ir. 124.

(d) Where Several Companies.

Moneys paid into court by two companies under the Lands Clauses Act, ordered to be paid out on one petition, and the costs appropriated between the two companies. Sheffield Corporation, Ex parte, 21 Beav. 162; 25 L. J., Ch. 587; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 31; 4 W. R. 70.

Sums of money were paid into court for lands belonging to the see of Canterbury, taken by the secretary of state for war, the copyhold commissioners (who were not liable to pay any costs), and fifteen public companies, of which four, by their acts, had not been incorporated with the Lands Clauses Act, and eleven had been incorporated with that act. The ecclesiastical commissioners petitioned to have the funds transferred and paid to them, and the costs paid by all the companies; but the court ordered that the four companies not incorporated should neither receive nor pay costs, and that the other companies should pay the costs in seventeenths. Ecclesiastical Commissioners, Ex parte, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 460; 12 L. T. 294; 13 W. R. 575.

A local board of health and a railway company which had each taken part of the settled estate, and whose purchase-money had also been paid into court, were respondents to the petition, by which it was proposed also to deal with the purchase-money of the local board:—Held, that the costs of one hearing before the Vice-Chancellor must be paid in moieties by the railway company and the local board. Leigh's Estate, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 687; L. R. 6 Ch. 887; 25 L. T. 644; 19 W. R. 105.

Some Amalgamated.]—A sum of money was paid into court upon the purchase of certain land by a railway company, whose acts provided for the costs of obtaining the money out of court. That railway was incorporated with a second railway, and the act of the first railway was repealed. The act of the second railway did not provide for the costs. The second railway was then amalgamated with a third railway, and both the previous acts were repealed; but it was provided that where any money had been, or should be, paid into court by either of such dissolved companies, upon the purchase of lands, such moneys should be held and disposed of pursuant to the act under which the same had been paid, and the provisions in such act relating to the money so paid should remain in full force:—Held, that the costs of obtaining the money out of court should be paid by the third railway company. Chetwode, Ex parte, 18 L. J., Ch. 418.

Portions of the same estate were taken by four different companies, three of which were afterwards amalgamated:—Held, that the costs of a petition for payment out of the purchase-moneys must be borne by the subsisting companies equally. Gaskell, Ex parte, Manchester and Leeds Ry., In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 368; 2 Ch. D. 360; 24 W. R. 752.

Brokerage or Commission.]—Under the act enabling the corporation of the Trinity House to purchase property, and in certain cases to pay the purchase-money into court to be laid out in stock for the benefit of the parties entitled, providing that the costs of the investment of the purchase-money shall be paid by the corporation, the broker's commission on the purchase of stock is a part of the costs of investment to be borne by the corporation. Trinity House Corporation, Ex parte, 3 Hare, 95. S. P., Wilson, In re, 1 W. R. 504.

The accountant-general's brokerage on compensation money ordered to be paid by the railway company, so as not to be deducted out of the money paid into court. Kendal and Westmoreland Ry., In re, Braithwaite's Trust, In re, 1 Sm. & G. (App.) xv.; 22 L. J., Ch. 915; 17 Jur. 573.

Petition for investment of money paid into court by a railway company for the purchase of settled lands. Brokerage charged by the accountant-general ordered to be paid by the petitioner, and allowed to her in her costs against the company. Form of order. Braithwaite's Trust, In re, 22 L. J., Ch. 915; 17 Jur. 753.

Where a sum of money is invested under the Lands Clauses Act, the accountant-general deducts the brokerage from the sum, and the company pays the amount of brokerage to the petitioner. Harborough, Ex parte, 23 L. J., Ch. 260; 2 Eq. R. 320; 17 Jur. 1045; 2 W. R. 53.

Railway purchase-money invested in 1844, and asked to be paid out by trustees of a settlement to mortgagees on the property, and that the company might pay brokerage both of investment and selling out, as well as costs of tenant for life, and mortgagees appearing separately:—Held, that the investment being made before the recent rule of deducting brokerage made no difference, but it would be payable by the company, except in this case there had been no taxation of costs of investment, and therefore the company were only liable to brokerage, on selling out; and that mortgagees and tenants for life had a right to appear separately and have their costs. Legh's Settled Estate, In re, 2 W. R. 109.

Separate Solicitor.]—Where a public company takes land held in undivided shares, each part owner, bonâ fide employing a separate solicitor, is entitled to his costs of obtaining his share of the purchase-money; but two or more of such part owners employing the same solicitor are, in the absence of special circumstances, not entitled to more than one set of costs. Nicholl, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 516; 14 W. R. 475.

Surveyor's Charges.]—Upon the taxation of a bill of costs relating to the reinvestment in land of moneys paid into court, the master allowed a lump sum for surveyor's charges, being a commission on the amount of the purchase-money according to Ryde's scale, which is a scale prepared on the principle that a commission varying from five to one-half per cent. should be paid to the surveyor according to the amount of the purchase-money. An application was made to the court to direct the master to review his taxation in respect of this item:—Held, that the question was in reality one not of principle but of amount, and that the court would not interfere; but that if it was a question of principle a prevailing practice of paying surveyors by commission ought not to be disturbed. Att.-Gen. v. Drapers' Co., L. R. 9 Eq. 69; 21 L. T. 651.

Court will not Specify.]—Semble, the court will not specify what costs are properly payable within s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, but will leave all questions on that point to the decision of the taxing-master in the first instance. Allen, In re, 7 L. R., Ir. 124.

Power of Attorney.]—The costs of preparing and verifying the execution of a power of attorney from parties residing in Jersey, to draw out of court purchase-money lodged in court, under the provisions of a railway act, are chargeable against the company as costs incident to the drawing out of the money. Godley, In re, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 222.

"Taking Land"—Amount of Compensation.]—A railway company gave notice to treat for a piece of land, and no agreement having been come to with the owners, they entered on the land under the powers of s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, and paid the deposit into court. Afterwards the company obtained an act by which they were empowered to abandon that part of their undertaking, but it was enacted that the abandonment should not prejudice any landowner's rights to compensation for damage done by entry and occupation, and that the compensation should be determined in the manner provided by the Lands Clauses Act. The owners of the land then entered into an agreement with the company fixing the amount of compensation at 1,350*l.*, but providing that this should not include costs, charges, and expenses which the owners might be entitled to recover under the company's acts, but that such costs, charges, and expenses should be recoverable from the company in addition to the compensation as if the agreement had not been entered into. The company objected to pay the costs of ascertaining the amount of the compensation on the ground that the land had not been taken within the meaning of s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act. They also objected to pay the costs of the preparation of the agreement:—Held, that the land had been "taken" within the meaning of s. 80, and that the company must pay the costs of ascertaining the amount of compensation and of the preparation of the agreement. Charlton v. Rolleston, 54 L. J., Ch. 233; 28 Ch. D. 237; 51 L. T. 612—C. A.

Change of Investment.]—Where a change of investment of a fund representing money paid into court by a railway company under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is rendered necessary, not by any caprice of the holder, but by the act of the government, the railway company ought to pay the costs of the reinvestment. Brown, In re, 59 L. J., Ch. 530; 63 L. T. 131; 38 W. R. 529—C. A.

Money paid by Mistake to wrong Account.]—Where by mistake, the purchase-moneys in court, which belonged to two charities, were carried over to the account of only one of the charities, the company was not ordered to pay the extra costs occasioned by reason of this mistake. Lathropp, In re, 35 Beav. 297; L. R. 1 Eq. 467; 13 L. T. 784; 14 W. R. 326.

Two Petitions.]—Two petitions were presented by the same petitioners for payment out of court of money paid in by a railway company. The petitioners were entitled to part of the money under a will, and to the other part under a settlement. The trustees of the will were made parties to one petition, and the trustees of the settlement to the second petition, and both sets of trustees appeared by separate solicitors and counsel:—Held, that the statements in the two petitions should have been included in one; and the company was ordered to pay the costs of the first petition and five guineas only towards the petitioners' costs of the second petition, and three guineas for the costs of each set of trustees. Pattison, In re, 4 Ch. D. 207.

Two portions of a settled estate had been taken under the Lands Clauses Act by different corporations, and the purchase-money had been paid into court and dealt with by different branches of the court. It being desired to invest the two funds together in the purchase of land, two petitions were presented. The court allowed the costs of one only as costs under the act. Gore-Langton's Settled Estate, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 405; L. R. 10 Ch. 328; 32 L. T. 785; 23 W. R. 842.

—— Funds not in same Court.]—When two funds paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act have been dealt with by different branches of the court, and it is desired to deal with both funds at the same time, the court will give leave to present one petition in both matters in one branch of the court without transferring either of the matters. Arden's (Lord) Estates, In re, L. R. 10 Ch. 445; 24 W. R. 190.

Two Motions.]—Three distinct parts of an estate, belonging to the same person as tenant for life, were taken by three several railway companies, under their compulsory powers. The purchase-money payable by each company was paid into court, and petitions being presented for investment, one of these became attached to the Rolls Court and the other two to the Vice-Chancellor's Court. Two of the companies were afterwards amalgamated. Three motions for payment in discharge of an incumbrance were served on behalf of the tenant for life in the three matters, and the matter attached to the Rolls Court having been transferred to the Vice-Chancellor:—Held, that only the costs of two motions should be allowed. Midland Great Western Ry., In re, 9 L. R., Ir. 16.

One Hearing—Rehearing.]—When the petition was set down for hearing before the Vice-Chancellor, only the railway company was served, and they not opposing, the Vice-Chancellor made an order sanctioning all the expenditure which was asked for by the petition. Before, however, this order had been drawn up, the making of it came to the knowledge of the remaindermen. They then applied to the Vice-Chancellor to have the petition reheard in their presence. This was done, and the Vice-Chancellor made a new order, refusing to sanction any of the expenditure asked for:—Held, that the railway company could only be called upon to pay the costs of one hearing before the Vice-Chancellor. Leigh's Estate, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 687; L. R. 6 Ch. 887; 25 L. T. 644; 19 W. R. 1105.

Orders for the payment and taxation of the costs of petitions respecting the application of purchase-money of property taken by railway companies under their statutory powers must follow the words of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Edmunds, In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 538; 14 L. T. 243; 14 W. R. 507—L.JJ.

Hereditaments were purchased and taken by the corporation of London, under the provision of the Metropolitan Act, 1860, with which was incorporated the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the purchase-money paid into court, on a petition praying that the costs of purchase, including all reasonable charges relating thereto, might be taxed and paid by the corporation. The only order the court would make was, "costs according to the Act." St. James Garlickhithe (Rector), Ex parte, Hayward, In re, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1222 ; 9 L. T. 320.

The Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 80, only authorises the court to make an order on the company to pay costs, not an order to pay them out of any particular fund. Neath and Brecon Ry., Ex parte, 43 L. J., Ch. 277 ; L. R. 9 Ch. 263 ; 30 L. T. 3 ; 22 W. R. 242.

The omission of the words, "except such costs (if any) as are occasioned by litigation between adverse claimants," ought not to be allowed except in very clear cases. Cant, In re, 1 De G. F. & J. 153 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 119 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 183 ; 1 L. T. 254 ; 8 W. R. 105.

Purchase of other Lands.]—The company are entitled to the insertion of the words "upon the approval and execution of the conveyance." Eton College, In re, 7 W. R. 710.

1. GENERALLY.

Not "Compulsory taking."]—An entry on land is not a "compulsory taking" within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845—Per Lords Bramwell and Watson. Great Western Ry. v. Swindon and Cheltenham Ry., 53 L. J., Ch. 1075 ; 9 App. Cas. 787 ; 51 L. T. 798 ; 32 W. R. 957 ; 48 J. P. 821—H. L. (E.)

Effect of, on Agreement.] — A landowner entered into an agreement with promoters to sell land to them for a railway, the special act was subsequently passed and afterwards the company served the landowner with a notice to treat, and then entered under s. 85 :—Held, that these proceedings assumed the non-existence of any agreement and specific performance of it was refused. Bedford and Cambridge Ry. v. Stanley, 2 J. & H. 746 ; 1 N. R. 162 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 60 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 152 ; 7 L. T. 477 ; 11 W. R. 139.

What constitutes an "Entry."]—A railway company having power to purchase a plot of land for their railway entered upon the same to survey and take level thereof, and probe or bore to ascertain the nature of the soil, and set out the centre line of the railway, and for that purpose they dug a trig line or trench, two inches deep and fourteen inches wide, across the plot of land, but they gave the owner of the land no previous notice of such entry as required by s. 84 of the Lands Clauses Act ; five days after the trig line was made, the owner of the land discovered the fact, and nine days from such discovery he filed his bill for an injunction ; upon the affidavits on the part of the company, that the surveying and setting out of the line of railway was completed on the day the line was made, and that they had no occasion to enter, and did not intend again to enter upon the land, until they had taken the legal steps for permanently using it, the court refused the injunction, but reserved the costs. Fooks v. Wilts, Somerset and Weymouth Ry., 5 Hare, 109 ; 4 Railw. Cas. 210.

A corporation having, under an act of parliament, a right to take land for the purpose of certain public works, gave notice to the owner of the inheritance of an intention to take it. They then entered regularly upon the land for the purpose of surveys, &c., and afterwards their contractors, without the knowledge of the corporation, but with the assent of the occupying tenants, brought some waggons and rails, and other implements on the land, and there left them, but did not commence the works or do any damage. This was done without obtaining the assent of the plaintiff, but it became known to his agent in the end of December. In the beginning of the following February, without any previous communication with the defendants, he filed his bill for an injunction to restrain them from allowing the waggons, &c., to remain on the land, and from taking possession of the land, until they had complied with the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act :—Held, that though the corporation were bound by the acts of their contractors, the acts done were not a taking possession within the meaning of the act, and the bill was improperly filed. Standish v. Liverpool Corporation, 1 Drew. 1.

The entry by a railway company on land for the purpose of diverting over it a public way which ran over lands already in the occupation of the company, is an entry with a view to the permanent user of the land within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act, s. 84, and no entry for such purpose is lawful, except on payment of the proper purchase-money. Rangeley v. Midland Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 313 ; L. R. 3 Ch. 306 ; 18 L. T. 69 ; 16 W. R. 547.

When Allowed.]—A railway company can only take advantage of the powers of entering on land given by s. 85, where the necessity for immediate entry is so urgent as to preclude them from following the slower modes of procedure which the act provides. Field v. Carnarvon and Llanberis Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 176 ; L. R. 5 Eq. 190 ; 18 L. T. 534 ; 16 W. R. 273.

It is generally incumbent on a company seeking to avail themselves of the provisions of the 85th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to show satisfactorily and clearly that they have fulfilled its conditions and complied with its requisitions ; and if there is room for doubt, the landed proprietor should have the benefit of the doubt. Barker v. North Staffordshire Ry., 2 De G. & Sm. 55 ; 5 Railw. Cas. 401 ; 12 Jur. 324 ; 575, 589.

Notice given to a landowner by a railway company of their intention to summon a jury, does not render it inequitable for them to proceed in the meantime, under the 8 Vict. c. 18, s. 85, to obtain possession ; nor is it a sufficient ground to restrain the company from changing the aspect of the property, that the jury may thereby be prevented from accurately awarding compensation with reference to its original state. Langham v. G. N. Ry., 1 De G. & Sm. 486; 5 Railw. Cas. 269; 16 L. J., Ch. 437; 11 Jur. 839. And see Bolton v. London School Board, 47 L. J., Ch. 461; 7 Ch. D. 766; 26 W. R. 549.

The valuation which, by s. 85, a railway company is required to obtain before exercising the power of entry given by that section, must include compensation for severance, &c. Field v. Carnarron and Llanberis Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 176; L. R. 5 Eq. 190; 18 L. T. 534; 16 W. R. 273.

A railway company exercising that power since the 20th of August, 1867, the date of the passing of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, is not entitled to proceed upon a valuation made prior to that date, but must comply with the provisions of s. 36. Ib.

Receiver in Possession.]—A railway company, without the leave of the court, took proceedings under the Lands Clauses Act to take possession of lands in the possession of the receiver under the court. On an ex parte motion they were restrained. Tink v. Rundle, 10 Beav. 318.

Laches—Injunction.]—A company had taken land not comprised in a notice to treat, and had erected works upon it. The plaintiff claimed this land, which claim was opposed by the company. The plaintiff thereupon proceeded to interrupt and pull down some of the works commenced by the company:—Held, that his remedy should have been by ejectment. That not having applied for an injunction to restrain the proceeding with the company's works, he was not entitled to an injunction. Lind v. Isle of Wight Ferry, 7 L. T. 416; 1 N. R. 13.

Notice to Treat—Laches.]—In 1846 a railway company served upon the plaintiff, a lessee for years, the usual notice that they required a certain part of his garden for the purposes of their railway. The plaintiff then sent in his claim for compensation, and no further steps were taken until August, 1848, when the company, under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, having procured a valuation of the plaintiff's interest "in invitum," and paid the amount into the bank, and executed a bond for a like sum, entered into possession of the land. The sum paid in and the bond given were afterwards held not to be a compliance with that section, and the company then paid the whole amount of the plaintiff's claim into the bank, and executed to him a bond for the like sum:—Held, that the laches of the company, in not following up their notice of 1846, did not preclude them from taking advantage of s. 85. Willey v. S. E. Ry., 1 Mac. & G. 58; 1 H. & Tw. 56; 6 Railw. Cas. 108; 18 L. J., Ch. 201; 13 Jur. 241.

"Wilful Entry"—What is.]—The words "wilfully enter upon and take possession of any lands" in the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 89, do not apply to a case where the parties have entered under a mistaken belief of their right to enter upon the lands. Steele v. Midland Ry., 21 L. T. 387.

A railway company, being desirous of entering upon land before an agreement had been come to for compensation pursuant to s. 85, proceeded, under s. 59, to have a surveyor nominated for determining such compensation. One of the justices who nominated him was a shareholder in the company, but this fact was unknown at the time to the company, and the company thereupon entered upon the land:—Held, that this was not a wilful entering within s. 89. Ib.

An act enabled a company to take land for the purposes of a railway, the amount of compensation to the owners to be assessed by a jury, if no agreement could be come to respecting it; and empowering the company to deposit the purchase-money or compensation in the Court of Chancery, to the credit of the party entitled to the same. A subsequent section enacted, that if the company should wilfully take possession of any land without having made payment or deposit, they should be liable to a penalty; and, if after conviction or notice from the party in possession, should continue in unlawful occupation of any lands, they should forfeit 25*l.* for each day while they continued in possession. At the end of this section there was a proviso that the company should not be subject to such penalties, if bonâ fide and without collusion they should pay or deposit the compensation money to a wrong party, whom they reasonably believed entitled to it. The company having bonâ fide and without collusion, but without complying with the requisites of the act, taken possession of land belonging to the plaintiff, and deposited the compensation money for his use:—Held, that they were protected by the proviso against the penalties given in the first part of the section, and that the word "wilfully," in the clause, applied only to the first branch of it. Hutchinson v. Manchester, Bury, and Rosendale Ry., 15 M. & W. 314; 3 Railw. Cas. 748; 15 L. J., Ex. 293; 10 Jur. 361.

Expiration of Period for Completion of Works.]—The special act of a railway company enacted that "the powers of the company for the compulsory purchase of lands for the purposes of this act shall not be exercised after the expiration of three years from the passing of this act;" and that "if the railways are not completed within five years from the passing of this act, then on the expiration of that period the powers by this act granted to the company for making and completing the railways or otherwise in relation thereto shall cease to be exercised, except as to so much thereof as is then completed." A few years before the expiration of the three years the company served on a landowner a notice to treat for part of his land. A correspondence ensued, no agreement was come to, and the compensation was not assessed. Thirteen days before the expiration of the five years the company, having complied with the requirements of s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, entered and proceeded to make the railway, the landowner objecting and resisting. The land was bonâ fide required for the railway:—Held, that whether the railway could or could not have been completed within the thirteen days, the entry under s. 85 was lawful; that the company could not be restricted by injunction, but were entitled to remain and complete the railway after the expiration of the five years. Tiverton and North Devon Ry. v. Loosemore, 53 L. J., Ch. 812; 9 App. Cas. 480; 50 L. T. 637; 32 W. R. 929; 48 J. P. 372—H. L. (E.)

By an act of parliament, with which the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act was incorporated, it was enacted that the powers of taking land compulsorily for the purpose of making a certain railway should not be exercised after the expiration of three years from the period of the passing of the act. The company gave notice to a landowner of their intention to take a part of his land, but took no other step till three days before the expiration of their compulsory powers, when they delivered a bond, and proceeded to take possession under the 85th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. The landowner thereupon filed his bill, praying an injunction to restrain the company from proceeding further with the purchase, on the ground that their compulsory powers had ceased. Interim injunction granted, but case directed for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer. Kinnersly v. North Staffordshire Ry., 6 Railw. Cas. 662.

Where a company has complied with the provisions of s. 85, and has entered upon and taken land within the prescribed period for exercising their compulsory powers, their continuance in possession after the prescribed period, without having the compensation assessed, and the land conveyed to them, is not unlawful, and ejectment cannot be maintained against them under such circumstances. Doe d. Armistead v. North Staffordshire Ry., 16 Q. B. 526; 20 L. J., Q. B. 249; 15 Jur. 944.

Where promoters of a railway company have, within three years after the passing of their special act, entered upon land by virtue of s. 85 of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, the mere fact of the purchase and compensation not being completed within the three years does not render the possession of the company after the three years unlawful. Worsley v. South Deron Ry., 16 Q. B. 539; 20 L. J., Q. B. 254; 15 Jur. 970.

For Purpose of Tunnel.]—In an action for breaking a close and cutting a tunnel through it, a company justified under a local act, by which they were incorporated and empowered to make a railway; averring that the close was a highway, and delineated on their plans and in their books of reference as part of the lands through which the railway was to pass; to which the plaintiff replied, that the close was required to be purchased and permanently used for the railway; and that he being entitled to the soil thereof, subject to a public right of way over the same, the company entered and made the tunnel without his consent, and without giving him notice to sell and convey the same and take it for the purpose of permanently using it for the purpose of the railway:—Held, that it must be taken on these pleadings that the tunnel was made with a view to its permanently forming part of the railway, and that the company was not justified, under 8 & 9 Vict. cc. 18, 20, in having entered on the land through which the permanent tunnel was to pass, without first paying compensation to the owner of it. Ramsden v. Manchester South Junction and Altrincham Ry., 1 Ex. 723; 5 Railw. Cas. 552; 12 Jur. 293.

A railway company was entitled by a special act to acquire compulsorily an easement of tunnelling under land, unless a jury should determine that such easement could not be acquired by the company without material detriment to the remainder of such land:—Held, that the company might enter upon the land for the purpose of making the tunnel under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act upon depositing the value of the easement, and could not be compelled to deposit the value of the whole land. Hill v. Midland Ry., 51 L. J., Ch. 774; 21 Ch. D. 143; 47 L. T. 225; 30 W. R. 774.

Power to take Subsoil apart from Surface.]—A clause in the special act of an underground railway, which act incorporated the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, empowering the company to "appropriate and use the subsoil and undersurface" of lands apart from the surface, provided they be not relieved from liability to compensation under s. 68 of the act of 1845, does not entitle the company to enter upon such subsoil without complying with the provisions of the act of 1845 as to the compulsory purchase of or entry upon lands. Farmer v. Waterloo and City Ry., 64 L. J., Ch. 338; [1895] 1 Ch. 527; 13 R. 306; 72 L. T. 225; 43 W. R. 363; 59 J. P. 295.

Diverting Stream.]—The diversion of a stream is a taking and using it within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act, s. 85, and before such diversion can be made, the value of the stream must be ascertained and secured to the owners of the land through which it passes. Ferrand v. Bradford Corporation, 21 Beav. 412; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 175.

At what Date Tenant's Interest is to be Calculated.]—A notice to treat was given by a railway company for a strip of land which formed part of lands held by the tenant under a lease. Nothing was done under this notice to treat, but about a year afterwards the company required and took possession of the strip under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. At the time the notice to treat was given the tenant had an interest for more than a year, but at the time the strip was taken he had an interest for less than a year in the strip taken. The tenant claimed compensation for the strip taken, and for severance damage:—Held, that the time at which the tenant's interest was to be considered was the time when the strip was taken under s. 85, and not the time when notice to treat was given, under which nothing was done: that the tenant had, therefore, an interest in the strip of land less than for a year, and a magistrate had jurisdiction to assess the compensation under s. 121. Reg. v. Kennedy, 62 L. J., M. C. 168: [1893] 1 Q. B. 533; 5 R. 270; 68 L. T. 454; 41 W. R. 380; 57 J. P. 346.

By Commissioners, for Laying out Streets—Time for.]—In 1830 A. projected the formation of a seaside town, to be built on his lands, and a plan was prepared which showed the sites of various streets, roads, and squares, proposed to be made and formed on such lands. In June, 1833, a private act was obtained by which the lands described on the plan were made a distinct parish for the purposes of the act, and by which commissioners were appointed in whom were vested all roads, streets, and ways, then made and used by the public, or thereafter to be made and adopted by the commissioners as public ways under the act. The act also conferred plenary powers on the commissioners with regard to the paving, lighting, draining, and repairing of such streets, roads, and ways. In February, 1833, A. had sold and conveyed to B., who was one of the principal promoters of the act, and one of the first commissioners appointed thereunder, several of the plots of land described on the plan, and on which were delineated the sites of certain of the proposed roads, streets, and squares. Previously and subsequently to the act, numerous houses had been built, and some of the roads, streets, and ways shown on the plan had been wholly or partially formed, and had been adopted by the commissioners, but no houses were at any time erected on the lands conveyed to B., and the same (including such parts as comprised the sites of the proposed roads, streets, and squares) were from 1833 to 1867 uninterruptedly held and enjoyed and cultivated as arable and pasture lands by B. and his lessees. In 1868 the commissioners gave B.'s devisees notice of their intention to take possession of the sites of the proposed streets, roads, and squares shown on the plan, and in 1871 they proceeded to mark, grip up, and stump out such sites, on the grounds that the same had been dedicated to the purposes of the act by the promoters of the act, and that they were acting within their statutory powers. On a bill filed to restrain the commissioners from so doing :—Held, that, upon the construction of the act of 1833, the commissioners had no present right to enter upon the plaintiff's land. Mackett v. Herne Bay Commissioners, 37 L. T. 812—C. A.

Held, also, that the powers of the commissioners could not be exercised over land scheduled in their act and marked out as the site of intended roads and streets, until the roads had been made, laid out, and duly adopted by the commissioners. Ib.

2. WHERE PURCHASE-MONEY OR COMPENSATION UNPAID OR UNSECURED.

Temporary Possession.]—A notice given by a railway company, under s. 32 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, of their intention to take temporary possession of land, ought to state for which of the purposes mentioned in that section the land is meant to be used. A notice that the company intend to enter upon the land for those purposes, or some or one of them, is not sufficient. Poynder v. G. N. Ry., 16 Sim. 3 ; 11 Jur. 646. And see S. C., 2 Ph. 330 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 444.

Not Covered by Agreement.]—Plaintiff agreed to sell to a railway company a certain portion of a field for the price of 229*l.* in the whole, being 120*l.* for the land, and 109*l.* for compensation for damage by severance to the remaining portion, and stipulated that in case additional land shall be wanted, the same shall be taken and paid for after the same rate per acre. The company subsequently took possession of a second portion of the field for purposes authorised by their act, and entered upon the same without having previously paid the purchase-money for that second portion after the rate specified in the agreement, and without having previously agreed upon or ascertained, by reference to a jury, the damage occasioned by the severance of the second portion from the remaining portion of the field :—Held, that the agreement only provided for the amount to be paid to the plaintiffs for the value of the second portion of the field, and that neither by intention nor legal construction did such value include the amount of damage by severance to the remaining portion of the field, which amount was either to be agreed upon by the parties, or ascertained by a jury ; that, until such amount was agreed upon or ascertained, the company were not entitled to enter upon the second portion. Jones v. G. W. Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 684.

Before Payment.]—A railway act provided for the payment into the Court of Exchequer of the money agreed or awarded to be paid for the purchase of lands, to which a title shall be not made out to the satisfaction of the company ; and that, upon payment, tender, or deposit of such purchase-money, the company shall be entitled to enter upon such lands. The company agreed for the purchase of lands, and, before acceptance of title, or payment, tender or deposit of the purchase-money, entered upon the land :—Held, that such entry was illegal ; but that, on payment of the purchase-money into the court in which the bill was filed, the company were entitled to enter. Hyde v. G. W. Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 277.

On a petition for payment into court of the difference between the sum deposited in the bank under s. 85, and the whole of the purchase-money ultimately agreed upon, and for investment and payment of dividends of the whole to the tenant for life :—The court made the order. London, Tilbury and Southend Ry., Ex parte, 1 W. R. 533.

A railway company having served notice to treat with the owner of land under 8 Vict. c. 18, had been furnished with a title, and a claim of 500*l.* compensation. It obtained possession from the occupying tenant and commenced the works without paying the money or lodging it in court and giving security required by the act. The court granted an injunction against the company's proceeding with the works, and to compel it to restore the land to its former condition. The injunction not to issue on the company's undertaking to lodge the sum claimed and give the bond required. Armstrong v. Waterford and Limerick Ry., 10 Ir. Eq. R. 60.

In 1856 a railway company took possession of a piece of land, a portion of which, undefined by boundaries, belonging to F. Such possession was taken without her consent, and without compliance with the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (ss. 84 and 85), and F. being unable to define the boundaries of her land, the company continued in possession, and constructed a railway on the land without her consent, and refused to pay her anything in respect of her land. In 1868, the plaintiff claiming title under F. brought ejectment against the company, and recovered judgment, and possession was delivered to him by the sheriff under a writ of possession. The company, however, continued to run their trains over the land, and the plaintiff filed a bill against them for an injunction to restrain the trespass. Thereupon the company served the plaintiff with notice of their intention to summon a jury for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the land, under a notice to treat served upon F. in 1856, but which notice had until then been treated by both parties as non-existent, and the plaintiff filed a second bill for an injunction to restrain the company from summoning a jury :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to both injunctions. Stretton v. Great Western and Brentford Ry., 40 L. J., Ch. 50 ; L. R. 5 Ch. 751 ; 23 L. T. 379 ; 18 W. R. 1078.

A railway company by taking possession of land without any agreement, and without taking the steps required by the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, are trespassers. Bristol and North Somerset Ry. v. Somerset and Dorset Ry., 22 W. R 601 —L.JJ.

A railway company which compulsorily has taken land, and applied it to the purposes of the railway, should pay the purchase-money into court before notice of motion for that purpose is served. Williams v. Llanelly Ry., 19 L. T. 310.

When difficulties have arisen as to the title, the company having taken possession and used the land, the costs of a motion to pay the purchase-money into court directed to be costs in the cause. Ib.

A railway company which had entered into possession of land pending negotiations for purchase, ordered to pay the purchase-money into court before answer. Griffiths v. Crystal Palace and South London Junction Ry., 12 Jur. (N.S.) 560; 14 L. T. 753.

The entry by a railway company on land for the purpose of diverting over it a public way which ran over lands already in the occupation of the company, is an entry with a view to the permanent user of the land, and no entry for such purpose is lawful, except on payment of the proper purchase-money. Rangeley v. Midland Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 313; L. R. 3 Ch. 306; 18 L. T. 69; 16 W. R. 547.

Arbitration — Consent Revoked.]— Where, after an agreement to refer to arbitration, the owner revoked his assent to the reference, but the arbitrators nevertheless proceeded to make their award, and the owner filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the defendants, acting under powers given them by act of parliament, from taking possession, but did not show any good reasons for the revocation of his assent, the injunction was refused. Pope v. Duncannon (Lord), 9 Sim. 177; 2 Jur. 178.

—— Injunction—Costs.]—An injunction was sought to restrain a railway company from entering on land before payment of the purchase-money. They remained in possession three months, and then paid the purchase-money:—Held, that they must pay the costs of the suit. Kensington (Lord) v. Metropolitan Ry., 14 L. T. 580; 14 W. R. 754.

A railway company, assuming to act under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, took possession of some lands belonging to A., whereupon A. filed an injunction bill against the company, and moved accordingly. By an arrangement made at the hearing, the company undertook to bring the question of the value before a jury as soon as possible, and the value was accordingly ascertained, and the amount paid to A. A motion by A., that the taxing-master might tax costs of the suit, and that the company might pay them, and that all further proceedings in the suit might be stayed, was refused, but the costs of it were reserved. Langham v. G. N. Ry., 5 Railw. Cas. 263; 17 L. J., Ch. 436; 12 Jur. 574. And see 16 L. J., Ch. 437; 11 Jur. 839.

A railway company must pay the costs of a motion to dissolve an injunction obtained against them from their having failed to comply with the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act. Plaintiff at liberty to make application to the court for the purpose of disposing of the suit in which the injunction has been obtained, and the costs of it. Woodward v. Eastern Counties Ry., 3 W. R. 330.

Part Payment.]—A railway company paid part of the purchase-money of land required by them, and took possession, but retained the balance until the vendor should make a good title:—Held, that the company had purchased the right of possession, and would not be compelled to give up possession, or to pay the balance into court. Capps v. Norwich and Spalding Ry., 9 Jur. (N.S.) 635; 11 W. R. 657.

C. contracted with a railway company to sell land, with a stipulation that they should have possession and pay the purchase-money in two years with interest. They took possession, but only paid one-third of the purchase-money, and a bill was filed for specific performance and payment of the purchase-money unpaid and interest. Before answer the plaintiff moved for payment of the balance of the purchase-money into court, or delivery up of the land. Order made for payment or delivery up within a month; and if the land should be delivered up payment into court by the vendors of the one-third received by them in a fortnight after delivery up of possession. Cooper v. L. C. & D. Ry., 14 W. R. 985.

A railway company purchased some land, took possession, and constructed their railway, but part of the purchase-money remained unpaid. They subsequently leased their line to another railway company. Upon a bill by the landowner to obtain payment of the purchase-money remaining unpaid, asking for an injunction to restrain both companies from using the line:—Held, that such an injunction might be granted, to be put in force if the money should not be paid within a limited time. Cosens v. Bognor Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 104; L. R. 1 Ch. 594; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 738; 15 L. T. 168; 14 W. R. 1002.

Default in Payment of Bond.]—A railway company, by agreement with a landowner, were let into possession of land which they required for part of their line, and made their railway over it, giving a bond for payment of the purchase-money on a future day. Default was made in payment of the bond:—Held, that the landowner was not entitled to an injunction to restrain the company from continuing in possession until the purchase-money was paid. Pell v. Northampton and Banbury Junction Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 319; L. R. 2 Ch. 100; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 897; 15 L. T. 168; 15 W. R. 27.

Private Act.]—The commissioners appointed under the local acts of parliament, for improving the town of Cambridge, have, upon the true construction of those acts, a continuing right to exercise, from time to time, the power thereby vested in them, of taking property for the purposes of the acts, and of referring the assessment of the price to a jury, so long as may be required for carrying into full effect the purposes contemplated by the acts. A person whose property is required by the commissioners for the purposes of the acts is not entitled to restrain them, by injunction, from taking the steps prescribed by the acts for obtaining possession of the property, until they shall have shown a sufficient fund in hand to satisfy the price which may be awarded to him, or until they shall have shown the means by which they propose to procure it. Salmon v. Randall, 3 Myl. & C. 439.

A railway act, by s. 12, empowered the company to take lands for the purposes of the act, and to enter upon lands adjoining to the railway, and to dig and use materials obtained therein; making full satisfaction for the lands, and for damage by reason of the execution of all or any of the powers thereby granted. Sect. 31 enabled persons interested in such lands to receive payment for the value, and compensation for any damage by the severance of such lands, &c.

Sect. 32 provided for the impanelling of juries to assess the amount of the purchase-moneys and compensation. Sect. 53 enabled the company, upon payment, &c., of the money agreed upon or awarded for the purchase of any lands, immediately to enter upon such lands; provided, that before such payment, &c., it should not be lawful for the company to enter upon such lands for any of the purposes of the act. Sect. 54 provided that, before taking temporary possession of any lands, the company should agree with the owners or occupiers for an annual rent in respect thereof; and, if required, should give security for payment of compensation for any permanent injury which might be sustained. The company having entered upon lands of the plaintiff, for the purpose of taking the subsoil to form an embankment, he filed his bill, praying that they might be restrained from so doing, until they should have agreed with him for a fixed annual rent during their occupation of the land, and given security for compensation:—Held, that the acts complained of were not within s. 54, but were, by the proviso of s. 53, brought within the conditions of s. 12. Innocent v. North Midland Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 242.

Lands not entered on—Injury to.]—In the case of damage to a party whose lands are not entered upon, but are injuriously affected by the exercise of the powers of a railway company upon their own lands, or upon the lands of another party, and for which damage compensation is required to be made by s. 6 of the Railways Clauses Act, it is not unlawful for the company to execute the works which occasion the damage before the amount of compensation for the same is ascertained, paid, or deposited. Hutton v. L. & S. W. Ry., 7 Hare, 259; 18 L. J., Ch. 345; 13 Jur. 486. See also Pollock, In re, 13 Jur. 760.

Lands Deteriorated.]—A railway company had taken possession of houses under an agreement with the vendors, but had so acted with the property after they had taken possession that it became much deteriorated in value. The court ordered the payment of the purchase-money into court without allowing the company the alternative of giving back possession. Pope v. G. E. Ry., L. R. 3 Eq. 171; 15 L. T. 239; 15 W. R. 192.

Railway Opened.]—An injunction granted after a decree to restrain a railway company from continuing in possession of land agreed to be sold until payment of the purchase-money and arrears of rent-charges and costs, where the agreement contained a clause providing that the land should revert to the owner in case of non-completion of the railway by a specified time, the railway having been completed and opened after the specified time. Nelson (Lord) v. Salisbury and Dorset Junction Ry., 16 W. R. 1074.

A railway company contracted to purchase lands from the chairman of the company, and was allowed to take possession without payment. It subsequently agreed with his devisees for other lands, but the purchase-money for those other lands not being paid, a suit for specific performance was instituted, and a decree made fixing a day for payment. That day having long passed, a motion was made for sale, and payment out of the proceeds, although the railway was in operation:—Ordered, that if the company did not pay on or before that day three months, the railway was to be sold. Jersey (Earl) v. South Wales Mineral Ry., 19 L. T. 446.

Death of Landowner—Agreement.]—A railway company after serving notice to take land, agreed in writing with the owner to accept the title, and the conveyance was executed by him and delivered to his solicitors as an escrow with a written authority to the company to pay the money to them. The owner died, having made a will and appointed executors, and the company requiring the land, but the executors not having proved, paid the money into the bank under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, and took possession. The executors filed a bill to restrain such taking possession, and for an injunction:—Held, that the escrow could have been made effectual upon the condition upon which it was authorised to be delivered, but that the authority died with him by whom it was given; and that there being a contract, the case was withdrawn from the operation of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, and the injunction refused on the term of the company bringing the purchase-money and interest, provided for by the contract, into court. Newton v. Metropolitan Ry., 10 W. R. 102.

3. Acquiescence or Consent of Landowner.

Without Consent of Commoner.]—Under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, ss. 99—107, if a railway take possession, by virtue of their act, of land over which there are rights of common, after payment to the lord of the manor of compensation in respect of his ownership in the soil and a conveyance by him to the company, and they construct their railway on the land without having first paid compensation to the commoners in respect of their rights of common, a commoner may maintain an action against the company for the disturbance of his rights of common. Stoneham v. L. B. & S. C. Ry., 41 L. J., Q. B. 1; L. R. 7 Q. B. 1; 25 L. T. 788; 20 W. R. 77.

Without Aid of Sheriff.]—Where a landowner refuses to allow a company to enter on land on which they are entitled to enter under s. 85, but does not actually resist their entry, they are justified in entering peaceably without calling on the sheriff under s. 91 to give them possession. Loosemore v. Tiverton and North Devon Ry., 51 L. J., Ch. 570; 22 Ch. D. 25; 47 L. T. 151; 30 W. R. 628. S. C., in H. L., supra, col. 1486.

Effect of Consent of Landowner.]—A railway company having entered upon land for the purposes of their act, with the consent of the owner, he is not at liberty to treat them as trespassers. Knapp v. L. C. & D. Ry., 2 H. & C. 212; 32 L. J., Ex. 236; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 761; 8 L. T. 541; 11 W. R. 890.

A company was empowered to purchase land and enter upon and use the same for the purposes of a railway. But they were not, "except by the consent of the owner or occupier," to enter upon any such lands until they should have paid or deposited in the Bank of England the purchase-money or compensation agreed or awarded to be paid for all interest in the same. The company, with the consent of the owner, entered, in 1847, upon lands, required for the purposes of the railway, the amount of compensation having been by an agreement between them referred to an arbitrator, who, in 1849, awarded a sum as compensation. No tender of a conveyance, nor payment of the sum awarded had been made, and after the award a demand of possession was served upon the company:—Held, that ejectment could not be maintained against the company, the owner's only right being to enforce the payment of compensation under the award. Doe d. Hudson v. Leeds and Bradford Ry., 16 Q. B. 796; 20 L. J., Q. B. 486; 15 Jur. 946.

A canal company, having power to purchase lands for gross sums, or for annual rent-charges, to be determined by commissioners in cases of disabilities, took possession of the lands of an infant on an agreement with his tenant, and after an award by the commissioners of the gross sum or annual rent-charge, which ought to be paid, but which award was invalid, no one being party to it who had power to bind the infant's interest, the awarded gross sum was paid by the company to the steward on an agreement for its return if the land were not conveyed to the company on the infant attaining his majority. No conveyance was executed, and the purchase-money was returned, but the company continued in the use of the land for their canal, paying to the landowner, for forty years after he attained his majority, a rent of nearly the amount awarded by the commissioners. The company also, with his knowledge, purchased the interests of leaseholds in the lands:—Held, that an ejectment brought by the landowner, and the intended erection of a bridge by him, ought to be restrained by injunction, on the ground of acquiescence, the company undertaking to put in force their parliamentary powers (which had not expired) to acquire the land. Somersetshire Coal Canal Co. v. Harcourt, 2 De G. & J. 596; 27 L. J., Ch. 625; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 671; 6 W. R. 670.

Before the amount to be paid by a railway company for land, required by them for the purposes of their railway, had been determined, a verbal consent, by one party stated to be qualified, by the other alleged to be general, was given, whereupon the company entered upon the land, and commenced works which would permanently affect it:—Held, that the court would not interfere, by injunction, to stop the works, if perfect justice could be done by compelling the company to pay for the land, but ordered the proximate value to be deposited until the amount could be determined. Langford v. Brighton, Lewes and Hastings Ry., 4 Railw. Cas. 69. See also Cromford Canal Co. v. Cutts, 4 Railw. Cas. 442.

In 1794 an act authorised the making of a public canal through lands of which A. was the owner and B. his lessee, and upon payment of the compensation, the land was to vest in the company. An arrangement was made in respect of compensation with B., but not with A. The canal was made "with the full consent and approbation of and in accordance with the wishes of A.," whose name was mentioned in the act, and it was enjoyed until the expiration of the lease in 1844. The representatives of A. then recovered at law the land taken for the canal:—Held, in equity, that A., having thus sanctioned the formation of the canal, was not entitled to retake possession, but only to a fair compensation, to be determined by the agricultural value of the land taken, as calculated in 1843, and not in 1794. Held, secondly, that persons who had bought A.'s property, with notice in the conditions of sale as to the canal, were equally bound by the same equity. Beaufort (Duke) v. Patrick, 17 Beav. 60; 22 L. J., Ch. 489; 17 Jur. 682; 1 W. R. 280.

The owner of land, upon which a railway company, empowered by parliament, are about to enter, is not entitled to an interlocutory injunction to restrain them from so entering if, by his silence and conduct, he has permitted the company to carry on their works upon the supposition that they were entitled to enter on and take the land in question. Greenhalgh v. Manchester and Birmingham Ry., 3 Myl. & C. 784; 8 L. J., Ch. 75; 3 Jur. 693.

A., on whose fields a railway company had entered without notice or permission, filed a bill and applied for an injunction to restrain them from digging away a part of one field, and depositing it on a certain other field; but it appearing that there had been a disposition to treat on the part of A., and that the steps taken were necessary for the public safety, on the company undertaking to pay into court the probable value of the land taken, the injunction was refused. Tower v. Eastern Counties Ry., 3 Railw. Cas. 374.

A subsequent treating with a railway company will be considered by the court as a waiver of objections to proceedings, the subject of the treaty, although such proceedings be not, in fact, authorised by the railway act. Ib.

Where an act authorises the construction of a railway over the land of another upon making compensation, and the railway is made without authority from the owner of the land, but is afterwards used for fifteen years with his knowledge, he will not be permitted to interfere with the possession. All he is entitled to is to have the compensation assessed and paid. Mold v. Wheatcroft, 27 Beav. 510.

Disputed Ownership.]—After a railway company had purchased a piece of land from A., who was mentioned in the book of reference to be the owner of it, B., a neighbouring landowner, part of whose land the company had also taken, claimed to be owner of the piece of land, and filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the company from continuing in possession of it, and from committing waste on it. But the affidavits as to title on both sides being inconclusive, the court refused the injunction. Webster v. S. E. Ry., 1 Sim. (N.S.) 272; 6 Railw. Cas. 698; 20 L. J., Ch. 194; 15 Jur. 73.

4. Omitted Interests.

Interest acquired after Notice to Treat.]—A railway company gave notice to a tenant-at-will to take part of the lands, and the company was allowed to take possession and complete their line. Afterwards, a person, who had subsequently to the notice purchased one-ninth of the land, filed a bill, merely praying an injunction to restrain the railway company from entering upon, continuing in possession of, or otherwise interfering with the land. The bill was dismissed with costs. Carnochan v. Norwich and Spalding Ry., 26 Beav. 169. See also Notice to Treat, supra, cols. 1315 et seq.

Interest Acquired contemporaneously by Mistake.]—A landlord entered into some arrangement with his tenant for a lease for eight years. Afterwards, a railway company being in want of part of the farm, agreed with the landlord for its purchase. Subsequently to this, by some mistake, the landlord, on the same day, granted a lease of the whole farm to the tenant, and conveyed a part of it to the company. A question also arose, under the agreement, whether the landlord or the company was to make compensation to the tenant. The company took possession and the tenant brought ejectment :—Held, under these circumstances, that the company could maintain a suit to stay the ejectment and ascertain the rights, and an inquiry was directed. Norwich Ry. v. Wodehouse, 11 Beav. 382; 13 Jur. 435.

All Interests must be Settled.]—Semble, a railway company is not entitled to take possession of land under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, until it has settled, not only with the persons in possession of the land, but also with all persons having any interest. Inge v. Birmingham, Wolverhampton and Stour Valley Ry., 3 De G. M. & G. 658; 1 W. R. 300.

The E. C. and the L. & B. Railway Companies were duly empowered to make a railway, and to take certain lands for that purpose. After giving the usual notice, as required by the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, to the lessee in possession of the lands, the companies, with his permission, entered into possession, and commenced the necessary works. The lessee made no statement of his interest, and no information was given to the companies of the interests of the plaintiffs. Afterwards the companies paid valuable consideration to, and obtained a conveyance from, parties who claimed to be owners of the property, and to be capable of conveying it. Other parties who claimed to be part owners, who had not been served with notices, and who were ignorant of the above proceedings, then came forward, and, together with the lessee, denied the right of the former parties to grant a conveyance. On motion for an injunction by the new claimants, the court would not interfere with the possession by the companies, but required the companies to undertake to proceed forthwith to determine the value of the land, to undertake to pay the value when determined, and to give the new claimants the usual bond under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, and thereupon directed an inquiry whether the new claimants could make a title, without prejudice. The order did not give liberty to adverse claimants to come in and prove their claims, as they could apply by summons at chambers. Alston v. Eastern Counties Ry., 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1009; 3 W. R. 559.

Mortgagees.]—Some property was mortgaged to the plaintiffs, who were not to receive their money until a future day. A railway company, with knowledge, treated with the mortgagor alone, and, not agreeing, paid into court, to the credit of the mortgagor, the amount of compensation, but made no provision for the compensation to the mortgagees, under s. 114 of the Lands Clauses Act. The company then took possession, and commenced pulling down the building. The court restrained the company from proceeding, until the value of the mortgagee's interests had been ascertained and paid or secured. Ranken v. East and West India Docks, 12 Beav. 298; 19 L. J., Ch. 153; 14 Jur. 7.

A railway company served H. with notice of their intention to take lands, of which he was in possession as tenant for life, but who was treated as owner, and so scheduled in the book of reference, though the company had notice of his limited interest. An agreement was entered into between the company and a land valuer (acting as the agent of H.), who agreed to sell the lands for 300*l*. H. invested the purchase-money in shares, and the company entered his name on the register of shareholders. The company took possession of the lands, and had used the same for the purposes of the railway works. Mortgagees alleged that H. had no power to sell, and he himself denied that he had authorised the agreement made in his name, or had let the company into possession. The company filed a bill against H. for specific performance, but subsequently ordered it to be dismissed. The company contended that they were rightfully in possession, and that the mortgagees ought to have proceeded under s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act to have the compensation, the right to which they did not deny, ascertained as therein directed :—Held, that the company was not rightfully in possession, and that s. 68 applied, not only where a company must be rightfully in possession, but where compensation was sought by persons having a limited interest; and the court granted an injunction to restrain the company continuing in possession until compensation had been made to every person having an interest in the lands. Perks v. Great Wycombe Ry., 3 Giff. 662; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1051; 7 L. T. 150; 10 W. R. 788.

5. Mistake of Company.

Restraining Proceedings.]—Where a railway company acting bonâ fide has made a mistake as to the lands they have valued and taken possession of, and the question between the company and the landowner is merely one of value, the court will not, by injunction, stay the works on the property taken. The court, in such cases has regard to the injury which may be done to the public. Wood v. Charing Cross Ry., 33 Beav. 290.

Where a railway company have taken possession under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, when in consequence of unintentional error, they were not entitled so to do, the court will authorise their continuing in possession upon afterwards complying with the requisitions of the statute. Willey v. S. E. Ry., 1 Macn. & G. 58; 1 H. & Tw. 56; 6 Railw. Cas. 108; 18 L. J., Ch. 201; 13 Jur. 241.

By Agent—Possession given up.]—The plaintiff, the rector of Stoke-upon-Trent, was empowered by an act of parliament to sell the glebe lands, or to lay out the same for building purposes. The provisional committee of a railway company, who were soliciting an act of incorporation, by an agreement in writing, contracted with the plaintiff to purchase a portion of the glebe, which had been laid out for building, and the plaintiff, as part of the terms of the agreement, withdrew his intended opposition, and assented to the railway bill, which passed into an act. At the time of entering into the agreement all the lands, except one field, which was let to a tenant, were lying waste; and, after the agreement, an agent of the company, conceiving that they had purchased and paid for the land, agreed to let the unoccupied portion from week to week, and received a small sum from the tenants of that portion of the land; but discovering his mistake, on the remonstrance of the plaintiff, he put an end to the tenancy, and tendered to the plaintiff the rent received. It was not determined whether the railway would pass through the glebe land. On a motion, that the company might be ordered to pay into the court the amount of the purchase-money for the land:—Held, that although where a purchaser has taken and continues possession, he cannot retain it without paying the purchase-money into court; yet, that, in the present case, the agent of the company having entered by mistake, and having quitted possession, the rule did not apply. Tomlinson v. Manchester and Birmingham Ry., 2 Railw. Cas. 104.

6. Bond and Deposit.

Surveyor—Appointment and Valuation.]—A valuation of a house taken by a railway company by a surveyor who did not enter the house valued is not a proper valuation. Cotter v. Metropolitan Ry., 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1014; 10 L. T. 777; 12 W. R. 1021.

It is not necessary for a company, acting under the provisions of s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, to give notice to the party with whom they are dealing for the land. Bridges v. Wilts, Somerset and Weymouth Ry., 4 Railw. Cas. 622; 16 L. J., Ch. 335; 11 Jur. 315.

The instrument, by which a surveyor is appointed under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, need not specify either the lands which the surveyor is to value, or the course of the railway. Poynder v. G. N. Ry., 16 Sim. 3; 2 Ph. 330; 16 L. J., Ch. 444; 11 Jur. 646.

—— Validity of Bond.]—A nomination by the justices, under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, of the surveyor employed by the company, and who has already in the course of such employment valued the land, does not necessarily invalidate a bond under the section. Langham v. G. N. Ry., 1 De G. & Sm. 486; 5 Railw. Cas. 269; 16 L. J., Ch. 437; 11 Jur. 839.

Bond—Form.]—A railway company under the powers of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, gave the usual notice of a reference to a jury to assess the value of a portion of a house, shop, and outbuildings which had been occupied together, coffee being roasted in the outbuildings, and sold in the shop. They gave a bond to the lessee, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and paid into court 600*l.*, the amount at which the value of the buildings taken by them had been estimated under the provisions of the act; they then proceeded to enter into possession, and to pull down the buildings. The lessee filed her bill, to which neither the superior landlord nor her sub-lessee was a party, for an injunction to restrain the company from continuing in possession of the buildings on the ground that the bond given was invalid by reason of its being conditioned for payment of the sum specified to the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the lessee. The court refused to interfere. Dakin v. L. & N. W. Ry., 3 De G. & Sm. 414; 13 Jur. 579.

Where a railway company treat with a claimant as the party interested in the land, it is sufficient that the bond to be given under s. 85 secures payment of the compensation-money to the claimant, his executors, &c., without referring to "the parties interested in the premises." Willey v. S. E. Ry., 1 Macn. & G. 58; 1 H. & Tw. 56; 6 Railw. Cas. 100; 18 L. J., Ch. 201; 13 Jur. 241.

Semble, that the condition of the bond must be for payment absolutely, and not on demand. Langham v. G. N. Ry., infra.

A bond given, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 85, where the value of the premises taken was less than 200*l.*, and exceeded 20*l.*, instead of being conditioned for "payment to the party, or deposit in the Bank of England for the benefit of the parties interested," was conditioned for payment "to the party, her heirs, executors, administrators or assigns," and for "deposit in the Bank of England or otherwise for the benefit of the parties interested, as the case may require, under the provisions contained in the Lands Clauses Act":—Held, that the introduction of the words "or otherwise" was not authorised by the act, and that the bond was not, therefore, in compliance with it. Hosking v. Phillips, 5 Railw. Cas. 560; 3 Ex. 168; 18 L. J., Ex. 1; 12 Jur. 1030.

The condition of a bond given by a company, on taking possession of land before the purchase-money was ascertained, was on demand to pay to the owner, or on demand to deposit in the Bank of England the amount of such purchase-money when determined:—Held, that the condition was bad, as giving the party claiming to be owner the option of compelling payment either to himself or into the bank, whatever the title might turn out. Poynder v. G. N. Ry., 2 Ph. 330; 5 Railw. Cas. 201; 16 L. J., Ch. 444.

A bond, conditioned for payment "at any time hereafter" to A., or deposit in the Bank of England for the benefit of the parties interested, of purchase-money or compensation, is not a proper bond. Cotter v. Metropolitan Ry., 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1014; 10 L. T. 777; 12 W. R. 1021.

—— Sureties.]—Two sureties are required as well when the bond is given by a corporation as by an individual. Semble, that the several bond of the company and joint bond of the sureties is sufficient. Barker v. North Staffordshire Ry., 2 De G. & Sm. 55; 5 Railw. Cas. 401; 12 Jur. 324, 589.

The approval of sureties in a bond under s. 85 may be given by the justices on an ex parte application of the company. But if such a bond be made to landowners jointly, they being tenants in common of the land, it is not a sufficient compliance with the act. Langham v. G. N. Ry., 5 Railw. Cas. 263; 1 De G. & Sm. 486; 16 L. J., Ch. 437; 12 Jur. 574; 11 Jur. 839.

Amount of Valuation.]—When a railway company, having given notice of their intention to take part of a house or a factory, is obliged to take the whole, they cannot take possession of the part they require, without paying into the bank the value of the whole which they are obliged to take. Giles v. L. C. & D. Ry., 1 Drew. & Sm. 406; 30 L. J., Ch. 603; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 509; 5 L. T. 479; 9 W. R. 587.

If when a company gives notice to take part of property, and is required by the owner to take the whole, the amount to be secured by deposit and bond, under s. 85, before the company can take possession of the property they require, is the value of the entire property, not of the portion actually required by the company. Underwood v. Bedford and Cambridge Ry., 31 L. J., Ch. 215; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 941.

A railway company gave notice of their intention to take ten pieces of land, authorised to be taken by their special act, according to s. 18 of the Lands Clauses Act. They afterwards entered upon eight of such pieces only, and had them valued, and deposited the amount of valuation in the bank, and gave security by bond under their corporate seal, but without sureties, to the landowners, under s. 85:—Held, that the company could not enter on less than all the lands comprised in their original notice, and deposit the value of and give security for such less security. Barker v. North Staffordshire Ry., 2 De G. & Sm. 55; 5 Railw. Cas. 401; 12 Jur. 324, 589.

The compensation in respect of which the bond is given by a railway company under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, on entering upon lands before agreement, does not include compensation for minerals under the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, ss. 78, 81. Neath and Brecon Ry., Ex parte, 45 L. J., Ch. 196; 2 Ch. D. 201; 24 W. R. 357.

The valuation which by s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act a railway company is required to obtain before exercising the power of entry given by that section must include compensation for severance, &c. Field v. Carnarron and Llanberis Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 176; L. R. 5 Eq. 190; 18 L. T. 534; 16 W. R. 273.

A railway company was entitled by a special act to acquire compulsorily an easement of tunnelling under land, unless a jury should determine that such easement could not be acquired by the company without material detriment to the remainder of such land:—Held, that the company might enter upon the land for the purpose of making the tunnel under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act upon depositing the value of the easement, and could not be compelled to deposit the value of the whole land. Hill v. Midland Ry., 51 L. J., Ch. 774; 21 Ch. D. 143; 47 L. T. 225; 30 W. R. 774.

Where a railway company took possession of the plaintiff's land, under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 85, paid into court 868*l.* as the value of the land, and the land was afterwards duly valued at 1,227*l.*, and the plaintiff moved for an order directing the company to pay the difference in the value into court:—Held, that the difference must be paid in forthwith. Ashford v. L. C. & D. Ry., 14 L. T. 787.

To what Account.]—Money paid into the bank under s. 86 to the credit of "Ex parte, the promoters of the undertaking, the account of the landowner":—Held, to be rightly paid in. Poynder v. G. N. Ry., 16 Sim. 3; 5 Railw. Cas. 196; 11 Jur. 646. And see 2 Ph. 330; 5 Railw. Cas. 201; 16 L. J., Ch. 444; 11 Jur. 648.

Investment.]—A petition by a railway company for investment of money paid into court by them under the provisions of the 85th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, need not be served upon the landowner for whose security the money was deposited. Carmarthen and Cardigan Ry., Ex parte, 2 N. R. 515.

Landowner cannot Claim Benefit and Repudiate.]—A landowner is not entitled to avail himself of the security provided by s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act in the deposit of the money, and at the same time to repudiate the proceeding, the benefit of the result of which it was the object of the act thus to secure to him. Fooks, In re, 2 Macn. & G. 357.

For what available.]—The sum deposited under the act as a security for what the jury should find, is not available for any other purpose, and consequently mortgagees of the land have no lien upon it, but, as equitable mortgagees, they are entitled to a lien on the property comprised in the memorandum of deposit, and, in default of payment, to an assignment to them by the company of such property. Martin v. L. C. & D. Ry., 35 L. J., Ch. 795; L. R. 1 Ch. 501; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 775; 14 L. T. 814; 14 W. R. 880.

Interest.]—Sect. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act makes 5*l.* per cent. interest payable on a sum recovered, under s. 68, for neglecting to issue a warrant to the sheriff within twenty-one days after notice that the proprietor wishes to have the question of compensation settled by a jury. Aberdare Ry., In re, 8 W. R. 603.

7. Repayment of Deposit.

Deduction of Costs.]—Money paid into the bank by a railway company, under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, ordered to be repaid to them under s. 87, without any deduction for costs payable by them to the landowner. Stevens, Ex parte, London and Southampton Ry., In re, 16 Sim. 165; 12 Jur. 238. Affirmed, 2 Ph. 773; 5 Railw. Cas. 437; 13 Jur. 2.

A railway company, being desirous of taking land under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, paid into court the amount at which the land was valued by the surveyor, and also gave the owner of the land the bond prescribed by that section. Subsequently, the amount at which the land was valued by the jury was paid by the promoters, and the bond returned to them; they now petitioned to have the money returned which they paid into court. The owner of the land opposed this petition, on the ground that the petitioners had not yet paid the costs of investigating the title, of the conveyance, of the inquiry before the jury, and of a suit by the owner in another branch of the court for an injunction, which the promoters had rendered necessary:—Held, that the costs of the suit were not costs provided for by the act, and that they should be disposed of by that branch of the court to which the suit was attached; and that, as to the other costs, the court had not discretion, under s. 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, to order them to be paid out of the fund in court, the remedy as to those costs being otherwise and fully provided for by the act. G. N. Ry., Ex parte, 16 Sim. 169; 5 Railw. Cas. 269; 17 L. J., Ch. 314; 12 Jur. 885.

A railway company took possession of land under the powers and for the purposes of their act, and duly paid money into court for the land. The parties differed as to the completion of the contract, and a jury ultimately assessed the purchase- and compensation-money at a fixed sum. The vendor brought an action against the company for that sum with interest, and for certain costs due to him from the company. Those costs were, however, disallowed by the master. The company pleaded never indebted to the action, except as to so much as they paid into court, which sum did not include the amount of the disallowed costs. Issue was afterwards joined in the action, but no notice of trial given. The company then presented a petition praying payment out of the court to them of their deposit, but the vendor opposed them, on the ground that the disallowed costs were still unpaid, and the action pending:—Held, that the company were entitled to their deposit, and the vendor was not allowed any costs of the petition. Wimbledon and Dorking Ry. Act, In re, 9 L. T. 703.

A railway company served a notice to treat, and gave the usual bond, and made the deposit required by s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act. The landowner filed a bill to restrain the company from entering, but a motion for injunction stood over by arrangement, and no further steps were taken. Ultimately, the company abandoned the purchase with the concurrence of the owner:—Held, on a petition for a re-transfer of the deposit to the company, and for the cancelling of the bond, that the owner was not entitled to have the costs of the suit out of the deposit. Birmingham, Wolverhampton and Dudley Ry., Ex parte, 1 Hem. & M. 772; 3 N. R. 290.

But, semble, he would have been so entitled if the purchase had been abandoned by reason of the inability of the company to complete. Ib.

Transfer of Mortgage.]—A railway company having taken lands under their compulsory powers, and paid the deposit into court, may take a transfer of a mortgage on the land and recover the deposit by virtue thereof. London, Tilbury and Southend Ry., Ex parte, Marriage, In re, 9 W. R. 843.

Petition for Payment.]—Where a corporation after paying a deposit into court and entering on lands under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, has afterwards concluded the purchase by contract, the deposit will be returned, upon the petition of the corporation, without service upon the vendor, if the consent in writing of the latter to the prayer of the petition be obtained. Huddersfield Corporation, Ex parte, Dyson, In re, 46 L. T. 730.

Where a railway company, prior to entering upon lands, has made a deposit in the bank and given a bond under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the court has jurisdiction, under s. 87, in the event of the nonperformance of the condition of the bond, to order payment out of the deposit to the landowner on a petition presented by him for that purpose adversely to the company. Mutlow's Estate, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 198; 10 Ch. D. 131; 27 W. R. 245.

Where a railway company has paid the estimated value of a piece of land into court under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, and afterwards concludes the purchase by contract, the court will not order the payment out to the company of the sum deposited, unless the vendor joins in the petition, or a copy of it be served upon him. South Wales Ry., In re, 6 Railw. Cas. 151.

Upon petition by a railway company for repayment to the secretary of money paid into court under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 85:—Held, that payment to the secretary might be ordered upon the petition being stamped with the seal of the company, without the necessity of verifying the seal. L. C. & D. Ry., Ex parte, 8 W. R. 636.

Evidence that Bond satisfied.]—The court considered the production by a railway company of a bond given by the company under s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, sufficient evidence that the conditions thereof had been satisfied, and ordered money which had been paid into court thereunder to be paid to the company. L. & N. W. Ry., In re, 26 L. T. 687.

A railway company, being desirous of entering upon certain lands before agreement, made the usual deposit and gave the usual bond. Afterwards, by an agreement in writing between the company and landowner, it was referred to an arbitrator to determine the purchase-money for the lands taken by the company, and also the "compensation for any damage sustained by the landowner by reason of the execution of their works, and which, under the special act, the Lands Clauses Act, or the Railway Clauses Act, the landowner was entitled to claim against the company":—Held, that the bond did not include compensation awarded by the arbitrator in respect of minerals under the Railway Clauses Act, ss. 78 and 81, and that the company, having paid the sum awarded as the purchase-money and compensation in respect of the lands taken by them, had performed the condition of the bond, and was entitled to the return of its deposit. Neath and Brecon Ry., Ex parte, 45 L. J., Ch. 196; 2 Ch. D. 201; 24 W. R. 357.

A. IN RESPECT OF WHAT INJURIES.

Land must be Taken, Affected or Entered on.]—The words "lands which shall have been taken for or injuriously affected by the execution of the works," in s. 68 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, include such lands only as are actually taken or actually affected by the works of a railway company. Burkinshaw v. Birmingham and Oxford Junction Ry., 6 Railw. Cas. 600; 5 Ex. 475; 20 L. J., Ex. 246.

They apply to the case of lands entered upon and used under s. 85, and the landowner is in such case bound to initiate proceedings for settling the compensation. Doe d. Armistead v. North Staffordshire Ry., 16 Q. B. 526; 20 L. J., Q. B. 249; 15 Jur. 944. S. P., Adams v. London and Blackwall Ry., 2 Mac. & G. 118; 2 Hall & T. 285; 19 L. J., Ch. 557; 14 Jur. 679.

A canal company was empowered by act to take lands, &c., "making satisfaction to the owners or proprietors of, or persons interested in the lands," &c., so taken, for any damages by them sustained. By another clause it was enacted, that in the event of the company, owner or parties interested, not agreeing as to the sum to be paid for the absolute purchase of the land, certain commissioners were to settle what sum was to be paid for the purchase, and also what distinct sum was to be paid as a compensation to "parties interested." The company purchased from L. land over which the plaintiff had a railroad, by way of easement. They entered upon the land in December, 1834, but did no injury to the plaintiff's railroad until February, 1836. The plaintiff gave no notice to the company of his having any interest in the land, and nothing was paid to him by the company as compensation:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to compensation under the act until he had sustained some actual injury; and that the company was bound to give compensation at any time after the injury. Thicknesse v. Lancaster Canal Co., 4 M. & W. 472; 8 L. J., Ex. 49.

—— Evidence of Taking Possession by Company.]—A person who had a leasehold interest in premises held by a tenant from year to year, received notice from a projected railway company that the premises were required for the purposes of their undertaking; and the company subsequently arranged with the tenant, and received from him the key. She thereupon gave the company notice of the amount of her claim and the nature of her interest in the premises, and requiring them to issue their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury; and, upon their neglecting so to do, she brought an action for the sum claimed:—Held, that these facts warranted the jury in finding that the company had actually taken the premises, and consequently that they were liable for the amount demanded. Barker v. Metropolitan Ry., 17 C. B. (N.S.) 785; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1127; 11 L. T. 312; 13 W. R. 82.

Right of Action if Act not Passed.]—In order to found a claim for compensation under s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, some special or peculiar damage must be done to the lands by reason of the construction of the works, which diminishes the value of the lands, which damage would have been the subject of an action at law before the statute. But no compensation is given for damage if the thing done was one for which, if done without any statutory power, no action could have been maintained; nor when a right of action, which would have existed if the works had not been authorised by statute, would have been merely personal. Caledonian Ry. v. Walker's Trustees, 7 App. Cas. 259; 46 L. T. 826; 30 W. R. 569; 46 J. P. 676—H. L. (Sc.). S. P., Beckett v. Midland Ry., 37 L. J., C. P. 11; L. R. 3 C. P. 82; 17 L. T. 499; 16 W. R. 221.

No claim can be made in respect of damage for which the claimant would not have had an action, supposing the railway act had never been passed. City of Glasgow Union Ry. v. Hunter, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 78. S. P., Wood v. Stourbridge Ry., 16 C. B. (N.S.) 222.

In order to entitle a claimant to compensation there must be an injury to the land or some interest in it which would have been the subject of an action before the statute. Reg. v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 10 B. & S. 391; 38 L. J., Q. B. 201; L. R. 4 Q. B. 358; 17 W. R. 1094; S. P., Hopkins v. G. N. Ry., 46 L. J., Q. B. 265; 2 Q. B. D. 224; 36 L. T. 898—C. A.

The test to be applied is, whether the act done would be sufficient ground to maintain an action if it was not authorised by the act of parliament. Metropolitan Board of Works v. McCarthy, 43 L. J., C. P. 385; L. R. 7 H. L. 243; 31 L. T. 182; 23 W. R. 115.

A private act, incorporating the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, contained special clauses giving compensation for damage caused by the exercise of the powers of the act to the proprietors of certain specified estates:—Held, on the construction of these clauses, that they were limited to damage which, but for the act, would have been actionable. Rhodes v. Airedale Drainage Commissioners, 45 L. J., C. P. 861; 1 C. P. D. 402; 35 L. T. 46; 24 W. R. 1053—C. A.

A corporation, being authorised by act of parliament to stop up or level a street for the purpose of its act, in the course of operations wrongfully cut into the cellars of a house, which were under the street, leaving them open and exposed. The corporation, also, in the course of the works, partially stopped the traffic along the street. An injunction having been obtained restraining the corporation from cutting into the cellars, with an inquiry as to damages:—Held, that although the owner was entitled to damages for the structural injury to his cellars, he was not entitled to damages for depression caused to his trade by reason of the difficulty of access to his shop, it not being shewn that the depression arose from the wrongful, as distinguished from the authorised, act of the corporation. Bigg v. London Corporation, L. R. 15 Eq. 376; 28 L. T. 336.

—— Exception to Rule—Part of Land Taken.]—The rule that compensation is only given by s. 6 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, and s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Acts, 1845, where what would have been actionable against a company in the absence of statutory powers is permitted by those powers, and compensation allowed in lieu and by reason of such right of action being taken away is not applicable where part of the land is taken and compensation is sought, not only for the value of the part taken, but for the rest of the land being injuriously affected either by severance or otherwise. Stockport, Timperley and Altringham Ry., In re, 33 L. J., Q. B. 251; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 614; 10 L. T. 426; 12 W. R. 762.

Where a railway, by passing through a farm, separated the farm buildings from the arable land so that they could not be conveniently used :—Held, to be an injury to the farm buildings within the meaning of s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Milward, Ex parte, Oxford, Worcester and Wolverhampton Ry., In re, 29 L. J., Ch. 245 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 478 ; 1 L. T. 153.

Though compensation may not be granted to a person annoyed by the smoke and vibration occasioned by trains passing along a railway constructed under the authority of an act of parliament where no part of his land has been taken, compensation may be given for deterioration in the value of his property occasioned in a similar manner where a part of his land has been taken for the construction of a work authorised by an act. Buccleuch (Duke) v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 41 L. J., Ex. 137 ; L. R. 5 H. L. 418 : 27 L. T. 1.

Under statutory powers incorporating the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, the respondents gave the appellant notice to treat for the purchase of part of his land, which they required for sewage works. In an inquisition held under that act evidence was given that the existence of sewage works, even if conducted so as not to create an actionable nuisance, depreciated the market value of the appellant's other lands for building purposes. The land taken was let on long building leases ; of the other lands part was in hand and part was let for short periods for brick making. The land taken was separated from the other lands, in part by other property of the appellant's, and in part by a railway. The jury gave a verdict for the value of the land taken and a further sum for all damage sustained or to be sustained by reason of the injuriously affecting the other lands by the exercise of the respondents' statutory powers :—Held, that the jury had not exceeded their jurisdiction in awarding the further sum. For part of the appellant's land having been taken for the sewage works, compensation might be awarded for damage to be sustained by reason of the injuriously affecting his other lands, not only by the construction of the sewage works but by their use. Stockport, Timperley and Altringham Ry., In re (33 L. J., Q. B. 251) approved. Essex v. Acton Local Board, 58 L. J., Q. B. 594 ; 14 App. Cas. 153 ; 61 L. T. 1 ; 38 W. R. 209 ; 53 J. P. 756—H. L. (E.)

The plaintiff had constructed a reservoir on part of his land, the only use of which was to supply with water mills and other buildings which might be erected on the rest of his land, which was suitable for building purposes. A railway company gave notice to treat for a large portion of this building land, and the amount to be paid to the plaintiff for purchase-money, compensation and damage, was by agreement referred to arbitration. At the arbitration he claimed compensation for the loss he would sustain by reason of his losing the sale of the water from his reservoir to buildings that might have been erected on the land taken by the company, and in support of this claim he gave evidence as to the profits he expected to realise on this account :—Held, that the land with the reservoir upon it was "injuriously affected" by the severance, that the arbitrators were justified in considering such claim and in receiving such evidence in support of it, and that the award made by them was valid. Ripley v. G. N. Ry., L. R. 10 Ch. 435 ; 31 L. T. 869 ; 23 W. R. 685.

Statutory compensation cannot be claimed by reason of noise or smoke of trains, whether part of the claimant's lands is taken or not. City of Glasgow Union Ru. v. Hunter, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 78.

Anticipated damage from the noise and smoke of trains does not appear to be a proper subject of estimate for compensation under the railway statutes. Ib.

Where Action lies for Injury.]—Sect. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, has reference to cases where a party is injuriously affected by reason of acts authorised to be done by a public company, in pursuance of the provisions of their private act, and is inapplicable to cases where the injury complained of may (as under s. 29 of the Gas Clauses Act, 1847) be compensated by recourse to an action for damages. Imperial Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Broadbent, 7 H. L. Cas. 600 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 377 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1319.

The legislature having given the promoters no power to annoy the occupiers of neighbouring property with smoke, an injury from this cause is not the subject of compensation but a ground of action. A man may have a right of action where he cannot claim statutory compensation. City of Glasgow Union Ry. v. Hunter, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 78.

A person who sustains an injury from the execution of works authorised by a statute is not, generally speaking, entitled to compensation under the compensation clauses of the statute, unless the injury sustained is such as, had the works not been authorised by the statute, would have given the claimant a right of action. New River Co. v. Johnson, 2 El. & El. 435 ; 29 L. J., M. C. 93 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 374 ; 1 L. T. 295 ; 8 W. R. 179.

A company, in the execution of works authorised by a local act which incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, intercepted water from percolating underground into a well belonging to J., and also abstracted from the well water which had already so percolated into and was in it. By 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 12, in the exercise of the powers conferred by the act, the undertakers shall do as little damage as can be, and shall make full compensation to all parties interested for all damage sustained by them through the exercise of such powers :—Held, that, inasmuch as, apart from the statute, no action would have lain by J. against the company, in respect of either the interception or the abstraction of such water, the statute gave no right to compensation in respect of either. Ib.

By a section of a statute, if any person, after the commissioners or any person employed or authorised by them shall have begun to carry the statute into execution, shall sustain damage or injury in his lands or chattels by or in consequence of any act of the commissioners, their agents, workmen or servants, the damage or injury shall be ascertained by a jury before the sheriff :—Held, that the section applied only to damages resulting from acts authorised by the statute ; but, assuming it to extend to unauthorised acts on a review of the statute, and inasmuch as the cause of action was for an omission or nonfeasance, it was not the subject of compensation within the section. Coe v. Wise 7 B. & S. 831 ; 37 L. J., Q. B. 262 ; L. R. 1 Q. B. 711 ; 14 L. T. 891 ; 14 W. R. 865—Ex. Ch.

of a river, the river flowing into the reservoir at the upper end, and being discharged at the lower. The tenants of the plaintiff, who was the owner of dye works, at which the water of the river was used for dyeing purposes, complained that the effect of the reservoir was to make the water turbid and unfit for use. The plaintiff then filed a bill against the company to restrain them from fouling the water. The company made an offer to the plaintiff's tenants to construct a filter for the works, which would have remedied the injury complained of, but this offer was declined. The plaintiff did not deny that the reservoir had been constructed in strict accordance with the act of parliament, and it did not appear that there was any probability of her losing her tenants:—Held, that the injury complained of was not one which the company's act authorised them to commit, and that therefore the plaintiff's remedy was not under the compensation clauses of the Waterworks Act, 1847, but that she was entitled to an injunction restraining the company from so storing or discharging the water of the reservoir as to foul the water of the river to the injury of the plaintiff. Clowes v. Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Co., 42 L. J., Ch. 107; L. R. 8 Ch. 125; 27 L. T. 521; 21 W. R. 32. S. P., Caledonian Ry. v. Colt, 3 Macq. H. L. 833; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 475; 3 L. T. 252. Thomas v. Birmingham Canal Co., 49 L. J., Q. B. 851; 43 L. T. 435; 45 J. P. 21.

The drainage of a district had for many years been carried into a stream (affecting the same in an inappreciable degree only), which afterwards, and beyond the limits of the district, flowed through C.'s land. The population of the district subsequently much increased, and further drainage becoming necessary, the board of health for the district executed additional works, the effect of which was to cause substantial injury to C., by reason of the pollution of the water of the stream:—Held, that C. was not entitled to compensation, under the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 86, but had his remedy by action. Cator v. Lewisham Board of Works, 5 B. & S. 115; 34 L. J., Q. B. 74; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 340; 13 L. T. 212; 13 W. R. 254—Ex. Ch.

—— Land Outside Purposes of Acts.]—A public company was empowered to hold lands and to purchase certain scheduled messuages, and was required to make compensation by a particular process to persons "damaged or injured by or in the taking down of any of the messuages or buildings to be taken down for the purposes or otherwise in the execution of the act." The company purchased a house not mentioned in the schedule, and in pulling it down injured the adjoining house:—Held, that the tenant of the adjoining house was not entitled to compensation by the process provided by the act. Rex v. Hungerford Market Co., 1 A. & E. 668; 2 N. & M. 340; 3 L. J., K. B. 50. See also 1 A. & E. 676; 3 N. & M. 622; 3 L. J., K. B. 168.

Where a statute provides that a waterworks company shall make compensation for damages done in executing the works, and these works are restricted to a particular line, damage occasioned by executing the prescribed works is within the proviso, although the property injured is not within the line. Rex v. Nottingham Old Waterworks Co., 5 N. & M. 498; 5 L. J., K. B. 11.

—— Percolating Water.]—By s. 12 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, powers are given for the execution of certain works, provided always that the undertakers shall make full compensation to all parties interested for all damage sustained by them through the exercise of such powers. A company, in the execution of works authorised by their act, which incorporated that section, intercepted water which would have percolated through the strata of the earth into a well of A., and also drained off water which had percolated through the strata and reached the well:—Held, that she was not entitled to compensation for the damage she had sustained, inasmuch as, supposing the act had not passed, she had no right of action in respect of either the water which would have reached her well, or that which had reached it. New River Co. v. Johnson, 2 El. & El. 435; 29 L. J., M. C. 93; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 374; 1 L. T. 295; 8 W. R. 179.

A. was owner of an estate which had been purchased by a testator, under whose will he claimed in 1838. It was situate upon a bed of gravel, which was itself embedded in a basin of clay extending under the estate and under the lands adjoining. Water, which rose through the gravel bed by means of natural springs, was collected in a small pond, and thence overflowing the edge of the clay basin formed a rivulet which supplied other ponds, and was used by the owner for watering his gardens and horses. Commissioners of sewers, in the course of making a sewer in 1855, cut through the two beds of gravel and clay at a short distance from the estate, and the effect of the cutting was to drain the springs in the gravel, and to prevent them from finding their way into the pond and from supplying the rivulet and the other ponds:—Held, that he was not at common law entitled to compensation from the commissioners in respect of the abstraction of the water. Reg. v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 3 B. & S. 710; 32 L. J., Q. B. 105; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1008; 8 L. T. 238; 11 W. R. 492.

Obstruction or Inconvenience—Particular Use.]—To entitle a claimant to compensation he must shew that he has sustained a particular damage from the execution by the company of the works authorised by the special act, and that the damage is one for which he might have maintained an action if the work had not been authorised by parliament; and, also, that the injury of which he complains is an injury to his estate and not a mere obstruction or an inconvenience to him personally or to his trade, although it might have been the subject of an action if the works which occasioned it had not been executed under the sanction of parliament. Beckett v. Midland Ry., 37 L. J., C. P. 11; L. R. 3 C. P. 82; 17 L. T. 499; 16 W. R. 221.

The damage must be one which is sustained in respect of the property itself, and not in respect of any particular use to which it may from time to time be put. Ib.

Damages are not recoverable for stoppages and other mere inconveniences incident to the crossing of a public road by a railway on the level, under the sanction of parliament. A level crossing in such a case is a grievance to be endured without complaint by private persons, from a consideration of the benefit gained by the public. Caledonian Ry. v. Ogilvy, 2 Macq. H. L. 229.

No compensation can be claimed for inconvenience sustained from the authorised crossing on a level of a public road by a railway. Wood v. Stourbridge Ry., 16 C. B. (N.S.) 222.

A special verdict found that the only approach to the house of the plaintiff was by a private road; that a railway crossed the road on a level, in an oblique direction, so that at the point where the railway intersected the road, a train coming along the railway at ordinary speed could not be seen for more than seventeen seconds before it reached that point; that there were gates on each side of the railway across the road, which were kept locked, a key being kept by a servant of the company, whose business it was to unlock the gates when any person had occasion to pass through them, and the plaintiff also having a key; and that by reason of these facts and the execution of the works by the company, his property was depreciated in value:—Held, that his lands were "injuriously affected," within s. 68, by the erection of the gates, and, per Lord Campbell, C.J., by the passage of trains along the railway. Glover v. North Staffordshire Ry., 16 Q. B. 912; 20 L. J., Q. B. 376; 15 Jur. 673.

Where an access to private property by a public highway or private way is interfered with by the construction of the works, and the value of the property, irrespective of any particular use which may be made of it, is so dependent upon the existence of that access as to be substantially diminished by its obstruction, then the owner is entitled to compensation for such interference. Caledonian Ry. v. Walker's Trustees, 7 App. Cas. 259; 46 L. T. 826; 30 W. R. 569; 46 J. P. 676—H. L. (Sc.)

Trustees were possessed of a spinning mill ninety yards from an important main thoroughfare in Glasgow, having parallel accesses on the level from two sides of the mill to the thoroughfare. A railway company, under their special act, cut off entirely one access, substituting therefor a deviated road over a bridge with steep gradients, and the other access they diverted and made less convenient; but none of the operations were carried on ex adverso the premises. When the bill was before parliament the trustees were induced to withdraw their opposition in consideration of an agreement, by which the company undertook, that in the event of the land of the trustees and of others being injuriously affected by the construction of any of the works proposed by the bill, their claim to compensation should not be barred by reason of the company not taking part of their land. The trustees claimed compensation for the diminished value of their premises by reason of the detour and gradients:—Held, that though the agreement gave no right to compensation, the trustees were entitled to it under the Railways and Lands Clauses (Scotland) Acts, 1845. Ib.

The obstruction of access to a private property by a public road need not be ex adverso, but it must be proximate, and not remote or indefinite, to entitle the owner of that property to compensation for the loss of it. And it is a question whether a mere change of gradient alone would be a proper subject for compensation. Ib.

B. was possessed of a house fronting on a public highway. A railway company erected an embankment on a portion of the highway opposite to the house, thereby narrowing the road from fifty to thirty-three feet, and thus materially diminishing the value of the house for selling or letting, and obstructing the access of light and air to it:—Held, that this was such a permanent injury to his estate in the premises as to entitle him to compensation. Beckett v. Midland Ry., supra.

Where access to a sewer for the purpose of repairing it has not been prevented by the execution of the works, but only rendered less easy and convenient, there is no right to compensation under s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Birkenhead Corporation v. L. & N. W. Ry., 55 L. J., Q. B. 48; 15 Q. B. D. 572; 50 J. P. 84—C. A.

A corporation being authorised by act of parliament to stop up or level a street for the purpose of its act, in the course of operations wrongfully cut into the cellars of a house, which were under the street, leaving them open and exposed. The corporation also, in the course of the works, partially stopped the traffic along the street. An injunction having been obtained restraining the corporation from cutting into the cellars, with an inquiry as to damages:—Held, that although the owner was entitled to damages for the structural injury to his cellars he was not entitled to damages for depression caused to his trade by reason of the difficulty of access to his shop, it not being shewn that the depression arose from the wrongful, as distinguished from the authorised, act of the corporation. Bigg v. London Corporation, L. R. 15 Eq. 376; 28 L. T. 336.

C., being owner of houses situate on a high road, a company, under the authority of its act of parliament, constructed its railway upon and across the high road, and obstructed and diverted the road, thereby causing difficulty of access to the houses, and rendering them less suitable to be occupied as shops:—Held, that the houses were injuriously affected, and that he was therefore entitled to compensation. Chamberlain v. West End and Crystal Palace Ry., 2 B. & S. 605; 32 L. J., Q. B. 173; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1051; 8 L. T. 149; 11 W. R. 472—Ex. Ch.

An injury to the goodwill or a loss of profit in the business of a shop, caused by an obstruction, whether permanent or temporary, of a highway in the lawful execution of the works of a railway company, where no part of the land on which the business is carried on is taken or otherwise injuriously affected, is not the subject of compensation. Cameron v. Charing Cross Ry., 19 C. B. (N.S.) 764; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 282; 12 L. T. 121; 13 W. R. 390—Ex. Ch.

One who sustains a private and a particular injury from the diversion or obstruction of a public road by the works of a railway company, which diversion or obstruction, if done without the sanction of an act of parliament, would give a right of action, is entitled to compensation. Wood v. Stourbridge Ry., 16 C. B. (N.S.) 222.

M. carried on business in premises consisting of a house, warehouse and stables, near a draw dock leading into the river Thames. The dock was free and public, but was principally used by him and certain other persons whose premises were in proximity to it. A roadway existed between the edge of the dock and M.'s premises, which had an enhanced market value by reason of the proximity of the dock. The metropolitan board of works in making an embankment, under their private act, filled up and destroyed the dock, and thereby M.'s premises became diminished in value in the market:—Held, that he was entitled to compensation, as his land had been injuriously affected by the works. Metropolitan Board of Works v. McCarthy, 43 L. J., C. P. 385; L. R. 7 H. L. 243; 31 L. T. 182; 23 W. R. 115.

The right to compensation will accrue whenever it can be established that a special value attached to the premises by reason of their proximity to or relative position with the highway obstructed, and that this special value has been permanently injured by the obstruction. Ib.

Upon injunction to restrain the defendants from raising a footway, under powers contained in local acts (which incorporated the Lands Clauses Act), in front of the plaintiff's house and thereby preventing access to a warehouse, and from otherwise damaging their property, it having been established that the defendants were empowered, under their acts, to alter the footway, and also that the plaintiffs had sustained and would sustain injury hereby, an injunction was refused, but it was referred to chambers to ascertain and certify the amount of injury, and what would be a proper sum to be awarded by way of damages in respect of such injury. Wedmore v. Bristol Corporation, 7 L. T. 459.

By the Chelsea Improvement Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. cxlii.), the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, was incorporated in these words: "So much of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, as is applicable to, and is not modified, by this act, or as is not inconsistent with the provisions thereof, shall apply to the improvements by this act authorised to be made, and shall be read as forming part of this act." By ss. 124 and 127, compensation is expressly given where projections made before the passing of the act are ordered to be removed, and where a house taken down to be rebuilt is ordered to be set back to the line of the street. By s. 104, power is given to alter the level of streets, but there is no provision as to compensation:—Held, notwithstanding the absence of any such provision, that the lessee of a house injuriously affected by the raising of the level of a street under the powers of s. 104, was entitled to compensation. Reg. v. St. Luke's, Chelsea, 41 L. J., Q. B. 81; L. R. 7 Q. B. 148; 25 L. T. 914; 20 W. R. 209—Ex. Ch.

By a deed of conveyance land was conveyed to the respondents' predecessor in title, "the situation, dimensions, and boundaries whereof are particularly described in the map or plan drawn on these presents . . . together with all streets, ways, rights, easements and advantages." The plan showed a piece of land at the intersection of "G. Street" and "M. Street," which were delineated communicating on a level. The land was in fact, at the date of the conveyance, waste building land on the outskirts of a town, and neither of the streets had been made or dedicated to the public. The soil of the intended streets was the property of the vendor. Houses were built on the land fronting M. Street, and both streets were made and used as streets; but the appellant company afterwards made a branch line passing under G. Street, near the property in question, and thereby altered the level of that street, and cut off the access for horses and vehicles from M. Street into G. Street; a means of access for foot passengers remained:—Held, that the conveyance granted to the purchaser a right of way from M. Street into G. Street, and that the alteration of levels had "injuriously affected" the land within the meaning of the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, so as to entitle the respondents to compensation. Furness Ry. v. Cumberland Building Society, 52 L. T. 144; 49 J. P. 292—H. L. (E.)

Under statutory powers conferred by an act incorporating the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, a railway company stopped up a street in which were a house and premises used as an hotel, whereby the value thereof for using, selling, or letting as an hotel and public-house was diminished:—Held, that the owner was entitled to compensation under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, for the depreciation in the special value of the premises as an hotel and public-house. Wadham v. North Eastern Ry., 55 L. J., Q. B. 272; 16 Q. B. D. 226; 34 W. R. 342—C. A. Affirming 52 L. T. 894; 49 J. P. 599.

B. was the owner of a house and garden fronting the river Thames, with an exclusive easement over a causeway and jetty with steps, by which the same was available at any state of the tide. The metropolitan board of works, under the powers conferred on them by the Thames Embankment Act, 1862, deprived him of the jetty by constructing the embankment on its site; and, in consequence of the execution of the works, a public road was placed between his garden and the river. But it was possible for him still to have access to the river by means of landing steps which the board built in the embankment. B. having claimed compensation for the removal of the jetty, and for the depreciation of the premises by the execution of the works, the matter was referred, and the arbitrator awarded a lump sum of 8,325*l.*:—Held, that the substitution of the road for the water-way was an injurious affecting of the premises, and that B. was entitled to whatever compensation the umpire had awarded, whether he included loss of prospect and of privacy, and other amenities, or merely the loss of the water-way. Buccleuch (Duke) v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 41 L. J., Ex. 137; L. R. 5 H. L. 418; 27 L. T. 1.

The claimants carried on business as potters on premises in a street running down to the Thames, and about seventy yards from it; at the end of the street there was a public right of dipping for and taking water; and at the end of another adjoining street there was a public draw dock for barges. The claimants in carrying on their business had used the public right of fetching water from the river and bringing barges to the draw dock. The metropolitan board of works, in constructing the Thames Embankment, obstructed the right of fetching water and of bringing barges to the dock:—Held, that this was not an injurious affecting of the claimants' premises within s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, and therefore they were not entitled to compensation. Reg. v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 10 B. & S. 391; 38 L. J., Q. B. 201; L. R. 4 Q. B. 358; 17 W. R. 1094.

The damage which will support a claim for compensation, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, must be a physical interference with a right, public or private, which increases the value of the premises apart from any special use to which they may be put, if by such interference they are lessened in value; provided that such right is not merely one enjoyed by the occupier of the premises in common with the public at large, or one personal to himself. Metropolitan Board of Works v. M'Carthy, 43 L. J., C. P. 385; L. R. 7 H. L. 243; 31 L. T. 182; 23 W. R. 115.

Flooding of Lands.]—An occasional flooding of lands caused by a proper execution of parliamentary powers, is within s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Ware v. Regent's Canal Co., 3 De G. & J. 212; 28 L. J., Ch. 153; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 25; 7 W. R. 67.

When in consequence of the construction of the works of a railway, a constantly-recurring injury arose by floods or heavy rains washing earth on to the plaintiff's property, an injunction was granted as the proper remedy, instead of sending the case to have the damage assessed under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 68. Keates v. Holywell Ry., 28 L. T. 183.

Temporary or Permanent Obstruction.]—A railway company, in the construction of its line of railway, and under the powers of its statute, temporarily obstructed a highway, adjoining which was a house occupied by a licensed victualler, whereby the number of passengers passing along the highway was diminished, and he sustained damage by the falling off of his business:—Held, that such damage was not the subject of compensation. Ricket v. Metropolitan Ry., 36 L. J., Q. B. 205; L. R. 2 H. L. 175; 16 L. T. 542; 15 W. R. 937.

The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 135, authorises the metropolitan board of works to repair and maintain certain sewers, with full power to carry such sewers through or under any lands, making compensation for any damage done thereby, and the Lands Clauses Act is incorporated with such act. In exercise of the powers conferred on them by their act, and for the purpose of enabling them to reconstruct a sewer running under a street, the board erected a hoarding in such street, which rendered the access to the plaintiff's premises less convenient than it had been before; but no part of such premises was taken, nor did it appear that the hoarding was kept up beyond a reasonable time:—Held, that he was not entitled to compensation for the damage he had sustained by the erection of such hoarding. Herring v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 510; 34 L. J., M. C. 224.

Semble, the words in s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, "injuriously affected by the execution of the works," mean the execution of the permanent works, such as the building of retort-houses, making a railway, &c., and do not refer to the making of gas or the user of the railway. Imperial Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Broadbent, 7 H. L. Cas. 600; 29 L. J., Ch. 377; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1319.

Under the Lands and Railways Clauses Acts the owner or occupier of lands injuriously affected during the execution of the works authorised by the special act is entitled to compensation if the injury is sufficient to lessen the value of the property. Observations of Lord Chelmsford, L.C., in Ricket v. Metropolitan Ry. (L. R. 2 H. L. 175, at p. 194) commented on. Ford v. Metropolitan and Metropolitan District Rys., 55 L. J., Q. B. 296; 17 Q. B. D. 12; 54 L. T. 718; 34 W. R. 426; 50 J. P. 661—C. A. Affirming Cab. & E. 593.

The words "injuriously affected" in s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act comprehend cases of injury independent of taking land, and are not limited to damage sustained by persons whose lands or a part of whose lands are taken, used, or directly interfered with, and the right to compensation extends to and may be asserted in respect of consequential damage. East and West India Docks v. Gattke, 3 Macn. & G. 155; 6 Railw. Cas. 371; 20 L. J., Ch. 217; 15 Jur. 261.

A lessee of premises not required for the purpose of a railway served a notice and claim upon the company for a certain amount of compensation under s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act. The alleged injuries resulted from the dust and dirt occasioned by the works of the railway, from the temporary diversion of a foot-path which passed along the premises of the claimant, and from the stoppage of a lane along which the lessee claimed to be entitled to a right of way to the back of his premises:—Held, that the claimant was entitled to proceed under the notice, and to have the amount of compensation assessed by a jury. Ib.

Damage by Construction not by subsequent Use.]—The damage must be done by the construction of the works; and not afterwards, when the works have been completed. City of Glasgow Union Ry. v. Hunter, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 78.

No compensation is given under s. 68 when damage arises, not out of the execution, but only out of the subsequent use of the works. Caledonian Ry. v. Walker's Trustees, 7 App. Cas. 259; 46 L. T. 826; 30 W. R. 569; 46 J. P. 676—H. L. (Sc.) S. P., Hopkins v. G. N. Ry., 46 L. J., Q. B. 265; 2 Q. B. D. 224; 36 L. T. 898—C. A.

A person of whose land no part has been taken for the purposes of a railway is not entitled under the common law or the Lands Clauses and Railways Clauses Acts, 1845, to compensation for nuisance to his premises from the working (without negligence) of the railway. Hammersmith Ry. v. Brand (L. R. 4 H. L. 171) followed. Att.-Gen. and Hare v. Metropolitan Ry., [1894] 1 Q. B. 384; 9 R. 598; 69 L. T. 811; 42 W. R. 381; 58 J. P. 342—C. A.

The words "injuriously affected" in s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, comprehend cases of damage arising from the user of the railway as well as of damage sustained in the construction of the railway. L. & N. W. Ry. v. Bradley, 3 Macn. & G. 336; 6 Railw. Cas. 551; 15 Jur. 639.

On the execution of an inquiry before the sheriff and a jury to determine the compensation to be paid to the proprietor of a messuage and land in consequence of their having been or being injuriously affected by reason of the execution or construction of the railway and works, it did not appear that any structural injury was or would be caused to the premises by the construction of the railway, but it did appear that by reason of the workings of the railway after it had been opened for traffic they were and would be subjected to vibration, noise, and smoke from passing trains, and were and always would be affected and depreciated and lessened in value thereby:—Held, that the claimant was not entitled to compensation. Hammersmith and City Ry. v. Brand, 38 L. J., Q. B. 265; L. R. 4 H. L. 171; 21 L. T. 238; 18 W. R. 12.

And compensation cannot be claimed for deterioration in the value of property adjoining a railway, by reason of the premises being overlooked by persons on the railway and railway platform. Penny v. S. E. Ry., 7 El. & Bl. 660; 26 L. J., Q. B. 225; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 957; 5 W. R. 612.

Actual injury to premises from the vibration caused by ballast trains on the railway during the construction of the works is a ground for compensation; but, per Lord Campbell, C.J., not injury from that cause after the construction of the railway. Ib.

Statutory compensation cannot be claimed by reason of noise or smoke of trains, whether part of the claimant's land is taken or not. City of Glasgow Union Ry. v. Hunter, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 78.

An owner of a cotton mill took proceedings against a railway company, to obtain compensation for part of his land required by the company. The warrant required the jury to assess compensation for the land taken, and for the damage by reason of the severance of the land, or its being otherwise injuriously affected. Upon the inquiry the claimant insisted that he was entitled to damages on account of the increased risk of fire to his mill from the passage of the company's trains:—Held, that the jury had rightly included the damages for such injury in their verdict. Stockport, Timperley and Altringham Ry., In re, 33 L. J., Q. B. 251; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 614; 10 L. T. 426; 12 W. R. 762.

Right of Pre-emption—Personal Right.]—C., an owner of land proposed to be taken by a railway company under their compulsory powers, was also owner of a right of pre-emption over adjoining land. The line of the company's proposed railway passed over this adjoining land; but the company's notice to treat contained no expression of any intention of purchasing such right. C.'s counter-notice claimed 2,300*l.* for the purchase of his land, and 200*l.* for his right of pre-emption. The parties being unable to agree on the amount payable by the company, the matter was referred to arbitration. No evidence was adduced that the right of pre-emption was incident to the ownership of C.'s own land, or that, if it was only a personal right, its value would be affected by the mere taking of such land:—Held, that the right of pre-emption must be deemed to be a mere personal right. Clout v. Metropolitan and District Rys., 48 L. T. 257.

Mandatory Injunction in Addition to Compensation—Access to Lands.]—S. was entitled to the houses in Cecil and Salisbury Streets, and to a piece of low-level ground at the south ends of these streets. The low level communicated by means of two lanes at the backs of the streets with the Strand on the north side, and by means of wharves with the river Thames on the south side. In 1862, the Thames Embankment Act authorised the construction of the embankment road and of the ornamental gardens alongside of the river. These improvements were completed in 1870; their effect was to deprive the low-level ground in question, and also the two streets, of all communication with the river or with the embankment on the south side. S., as the owner of the depreciated property, had obtained 10,000*l.* as compensation assessed by an umpire; but under s. 62 of the act of 1862, S. was entitled besides to full and free communication to the embankment road and the river, and he claimed that such right belonged to him in respect as well of the houses in Cecil and Salisbury Streets as of the low-level ground, and that the right in dispute was to a wheel or a cart way, and not to a footway merely. The makers of the improvements had offered to construct a convenient footway across the gardens to the embankment road, but such offer had not been entertained. A wheel or cartway would have seriously injured the ornamental gardens:—Held, that, having regard to the circumstances of the property in 1862, and to an act of Geo. 3, relative to the buildings upon it, the act of 1862 did not reserve any right of way, much less a wheel or cart way, to the low level; and that a mandatory injunction to construct a convenient footway for the occupiers of Cecil and Salisbury Streets could not be granted on the state of the pleadings, or an inquiry directed at that stage of the suit. Salisbury (Marquis) v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 21 W. R. 259.

B. IN RESPECT OF WHAT INTERESTS.

1. GENERALLY.

Easement—Interest in Land.]—An easement is an interest in land for the invasion of which compensation may be claimed. Eagle v. Charing Cross Ry., 36 L. J., C. P. 297; L. R. 2 C. P. 638; 16 L. T. 593; 15 W. R. 1016.

When lands are injuriously affected by the construction of works authorised by an act of parliament, the owner is entitled to compensation if an easement appurtenant to the lands is taken, just as he would be if part of the lands was taken. Buccleuch (Duke) v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 41 L. J., Ex. 137; L. R. 5 H. L. 418; 27 L. T. 1.

Under the powers of the Thames Embankment Act of 1862, the temporary diversion of an existing pier, and ultimately the substitution of a new pier in its place, was contemplated. The right of the existing pier belonged to a company, under a recoverable licence from the conservators of the Thames, and it did not appear that the enjoyment of the benefit of the licence would be destroyed by the intended works themselves, though they might lead to its revocation:—Held, that the pier company was not entitled to compensation as a condition precedent, their easement not being required to be permanently taken, and that the remedy of the company was under s. 68, as injuriously affected. Temple Pier Co. v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 34 L. J., Ch. 262; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 337; 12 L. T. 369; 13 W. R. 535.

A wharf owner, who has not any special easement or privilege over the bed or soil of the river, but only the common right of passage to his property, has neither an easement over nor a right in land, within the enlarged definition given to that word by s. 4 of the Thames Embankment Act of 1862. Macey v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 33 L. J., Ch. 377; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 333; 10 L. T. 66; 12 W. R. 691.

A person so situated, therefore, whose land is not taken, but whose right of passage is injuriously affected by the works authorised by the Embankment Act, has no right to compensation before those works are proceeded with; but, having regard to the provisions of that act, and of the various acts incorporated therewith, his right to compensation arises when his damage is completed; and his remedy is under s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, or by arbitration alone. Ib.

A house was divided into a front and a back block; and the plaintiffs were lessees of three rooms on the first floor in the back block. The lease did not expressly grant any mode of access. Access to the rooms demised to the plaintiffs was gained from the street by passing through a hall or vestibule, and then up some stairs to the plaintiff's rooms. The defendants, in the exercise of compulsory powers under the Railways Clauses Act, took down the front block of the house, and removed the hall. The interference with the hall and the injury to the access to the rooms of which the plaintiffs were lessees lessened their value. An arbitrator having awarded compensation to the plaintiffs under the Lands and Railways Clauses Acts :—Held, that the access through the hall was not a way of necessity, but was in the nature of a continuous and apparent easement which passed under the demise of the rooms, and that an interference with this quasi easement was sufficient to give rise to a valid claim for compensation. Ford v. Metropolitan and Metropolitan District Rys., 55 L. J., Q. B. 296 ; 17 Q. B. D. 12 ; 54 L. T. 718 ; 34 W. R. 426 ; 50 J. P. 661—C. A. Affirming Cab. & E. 593.

—— Right of Access to Sewer.]—The plaintiffs, in 1843, under the authority of a local act, constructed a sewer on land, part of which had been bought by the defendants, a railway company, but had not then been used for their works. Part of the remainder was bought by the defendants after the construction of the sewer, but no part of the land was the plaintiffs', or had ever been granted to them. The local act not only authorised the plaintiffs to make the sewer, but vested it in them, with the duty to repair it, without, however, giving them any express right of access thereto. In 1863, the defendants, in exercise of the powers conferred on them by their special act, with which was incorporated the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, constructed an embankment over the sewer, which, though it made it less easy, did not prevent the plaintiffs getting access to the sewer in order to repair it. The plaintiffs being obliged afterwards to repair, and having incurred extra expense in doing so, in consequence of such embankment, claimed compensation from the defendants under s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and s. 6 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, for injuriously affecting the plaintiffs' interest in the sewer :—Held, by the Queen's Bench Division, that the plaintiffs had no interest in land within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 68, and therefore could not maintain the claim to compensation :—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that, as a right of access to the sewer had not been expressly given by the local act, but had to be implied, the right of access, which ought to be implied, was not any particular mode of access, but such only as was reasonably necessary for enabling the repair of the sewer to be done, and as that had not been prevented by the defendants' embankment, but only rendered less easy and convenient, the plaintiffs had no right to compensation. Birkenhead Corporation v. L. & N. W. Ry., 55 L. J., Q. B. 48 ; 15 Q. B. D. 572 ; 50 J. P. 84—C. A.

—— Trespass not maintainable.]—An act authorising a company to construct a canal gave certain commissioners power to purchase lands, and directed them to make compensation to persons interested therein for all damages sustained :—Held, that a party entitled to an easement over lands so purchased by them could not maintain trespass for acts done upon those lands, to the prejudice of his easement ; but as soon as any damage was actually sustained, he ought to have claimed compensation under the act. Thicknesse v. Lancaster Canal Co., 4 M. & W. 472 ; 8 L. J., Ex. 49.

Right of Shooting.]—A party who has a right of shooting over land by an agreement, not under seal, with the owner, has not such an interest as to entitle him to compensation from a railway company, in respect of the shooting being diminished in value by the company constructing a railway over part of such land. Bird v. G. E. Ry., 19 C. B. (N.S.) 268 ; 34 L. J., C. P. 366 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 782 ; 13 L. T. 365 ; 13 W. R. 989.

Piers in Bed of River.]—By 20 & 21 Vict. c. cxlvii., the bed of the Thames was vested in conservators, with power to them to grant licences for embanking, making docks and building jetties, on payment of consideration, to be assessed in a particular way, and be partly paid over to the crown ; by 21 & 22 Vict. c. cxviii., a railway company was empowered to make a railway bridge over the Thames, but the works were not to be commenced without the consent of the conservators and their approval of the plans ; the railway company obtained approval of the construction of the bridge as proposed, and thereupon erected the piers of their bridge in the bed of the river :—Held, that the conservators were entitled to have compensation assessed under the Lands Clauses Act, which was incorporated as usual in the railway act. Thames Conservators v. Victoria Station and Pimlico Ry., 38 L. J., C. P. 4 ; L. R. 4 C. P. 59 ; 19 L. T. 934.

Taking unused Water Pipes.]—A railway company under their act took land under which the water pipes of a waterworks company were laid. The pipes were buried beneath the embankment of the railway, and ceased to be used. Afterwards, in making a tunnel, the railway company took up the pipes. The waterworks company claimed compensation for the value of the pipes under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 68 :—Held, that they had no interest in land, and therefore were not entitled to compensation under that section. New River Co. v. Midland Ry., 36 L. T. 539 ; 25 W. R. 502—C. A.

Taking part of a Stream.]—The abstraction by a waterworks company of water from a stream for the purposes of the undertaking does not, under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 6, entitle a riparian owner below to require the company to treat for the purchase of his portion of the stream, but only entitles such riparian owner to claim compensation under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 68, for the stream being injuriously affected. Bush v. Trowbridge Waterworks Co., 44 L. J., Ch. 645 ; L. R. 10 Ch. 459 ; 33 L. T. 137 ; 23 W. R. 641.

Support to Sewer.]—A sewer made by the metropolitan commissioners of sewers under the powers vested in them by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 112, was transferred to the metropolitan board of works by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. The Metropolitan Railway Company having, by the construction of their railway, deprived the sewer of its lateral support less than twenty years after it was made, the sewer burst. In an action by the metropolitan board of works to recover the sum awarded by an arbitrator, under the Lands Clauses Act, for the damage thereby sustained :—Held, that the metropolitan board of works had acquired no right to lateral support for their sewer, either under the above acts or otherwise, and were not entitled to recover. Metropolitan Board of Works v. Metropolitan Ry., 38 L. J., C. P. 172; L. R. 4 C. P. 192; 19 L. T. 744; 17 W. R. 416—Ex. Ch.

Subsoil of Street—Cul-de-Sac.]—A railway company authorised to construct a line of railway under a public street is not bound to give notice to treat or to pay compensation to the owner of the land adjoining the street in respect of any part of the soil of such public street. Souch v. East London Ry., 42 L. J., Ch. 477; L. R. 16 Eq. 108; 21 W. R. 590.

A cul-de-sac dedicated to the public is for this purpose in the same position as a public street. Ib.

A person was the owner of a piece of ground with two rows of houses which had existed more than twenty years, with a passage between them ending in a cul-de-sac, the whole of the soil of which was conveyed to him. A railway company, under the powers of its act, gave notice to treat for some of the houses on each side, but the soil of the passage between the houses was expressly excluded from the notice. The railway was to be carried in a tunnel under the property. Evidence tending to shew dedication being given, an injunction to restrain the company from entering on the cul-de-sac without giving notice to treat was dissolved. Ib.

A railway company under its act, with which was incorporated the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, took some houses, the property of S., and tunnelled under the part of a passage, of which he was the owner, lying between the houses. He called upon the company to undertake, before 1.30 of Wednesday, 9th of October, 1872, not to enter into possession of such portion of the passage as lay between the houses taken by the company, but the company did not enter into any such undertaking. S. filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the railway company from taking or using any part of the passage without giving him due notice and making him compensation. An injunction was granted, which was dissolved upon the application of the company upon paying 100*l.* into court to answer the amount of any compensation which might be awarded. The company alleged that the passage was a public one, and there was no occasion for it to give notice to or compensate S.:—Held, that the question whether the passage was a private or public way did not affect the case, as S. had a good title to the subsoil, and that S. was entitled to compensation under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 68, for any damages he had sustained, and that as the company had held him at arm's length, it must pay the costs up to the hearing. Souch v. East London Ry., 22 W. R. 566.

Disturbing Ferry.]—A railway company under the powers of their special acts constructed a bridge and a footway across a river, at a distance of about six hundred yards from the landing-place of an ancient ferry, but without any physical interference with the passage of the ferry-boats. The bridge when completed was opened to foot-passengers on payment of tolls, and also used for conveyance of merchandise by the company's trains, causing a serious diminution in the profits of the ferry:—Held, that the owner of the ferry was entitled to compensation under the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, s. 6, as being a person interested in land (which included a hereditament such as a ferry) injuriously affected by the company's works, for the injury to the ferry was the direct and immediate result of the construction of the bridge for the use of passengers. Reg. v. Cambrian Ry., 40 L. J., Q. B. 169; L. R. 6 Q. B. 422; 25 L. T. 84; 19 W. R. 1138. But see next case.

A railway company, under the authority of its act, constructed across a river half a mile above an ancient ferry, a railway bridge and a foot-bridge, the foot-bridge being used by persons going to the railway station and also to other places. The traffic across the ferry fell off, and the ferry was given up. The owners of the ferry claimed compensation under the Lands and Railways Clauses Acts:—Held, that no compensation could be recovered, first, on the ground that an action could not have been maintained for disturbance of the ferry in respect of the traffic either by the railway or by the foot-bridge, if they had been erected without the authority of an act; and, secondly, on the ground that, the injury to the ferry being occasioned, not by the construction but by the working of the railway, the ferry had not been injuriously affected within the Lands Clauses Act or the Railways Clauses Act. Hopkins v. G. N. Ry., 46 L. J., Q. B. 265; 2 Q. B. D. 224; 36 L. T. 898—C. A.

Ferry passing with Land.]—A ferry may pass with land, under a conveyance of the land, with "all profits and commodities belonging to the same"; and where, as far as living memory went, the land and ferry had always been enjoyed by the same person, and there was no evidence to shew that they ever had been the subjects of separate conveyance:—Held, that a jury, in awarding compensation to the owner of the land, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 6, was justified in concluding that the ferry did pass with the land under these words. Reg. v. G. N. Ry., 14 Q. B. 25; 19 L. J., Q. B. 25; 14 Jur. 128.

2. Ancient Lights.

Obstruction of.]—When a school board acquires land as a site for a school, under the compulsory powers given by the Elementary Education Act, 1870, and builds a school so as to obstruct the ancient lights of an adjoining landowner, the remedy of the adjoining landowner is by claiming compensation under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 68, and not by bill for an injunction. Clark v. London School Board, 43 L. J., Ch. 421; L. R. 9 Ch. 120; 29 L. T. 903; 22 W. R. 354.

By the Railway Clearing House Extension Act, 37 Vict. c. xvi., which incorporated the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the railway clearing committee was empowered to take lands, and to erect thereon any buildings and works for the purpose of the clearing system. The owners of a neighbouring house filed a bill to restrain the erection of a building on land acquired under the act, on the ground that it interfered with their ancient lights:—Held, that the clearing committee could not be restrained by injunction, and that the plaintiffs' remedy was under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 68. Bedford (Duke) v. Dawson, 44 L. J., Ch., 549; L. R. 20 Eq. 353; 33 L. T. 156.

By an act incorporating the Lands Clauses Acts, the metropolitan board of works were authorised to acquire specified land for the purpose of (among others) the G. Street improvement, and to purchase easements over such land. By s. 33 of their act they were required to sell or let specified portions of the land for the construction and maintenance of artizans' dwellings, so that the land should be cleared of existing houses by degrees and a minimum number of dwellings should be provided. By an amendment act the board were required to devote three plots of land, the subject of the G. improvement, to provide a minimum number of artizans' dwellings, and s. 33 of the principal act was repealed with respect to the G. improvement:—Held, that provisions as to selling and letting similar to those contained in s. 33 of the principal act were implied by the amendment act:—That an adjoining owner had no right to an injunction to restrain a tenant of the board from obstructing ancient lights by building artizans' dwellings on one of the plots of land devoted to that purpose, but that his right was to compensation from the board under s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845; and that the board could not impose on their tenant a liability to be restrained from building the artizans' dwellings so as to obstruct access of light to ancient lights. Wigram v. Fryer, 56 L. J. Ch. 1098; 36 Ch. D. 87; 57 L. T. 255; 36 W. R. 100.

New Building Erected.]—The claimants, being the owners of certain buildings with ancient lights, pulled them down and erected a new building on their site. The position of certain portions of the windows of the new building coincided with that of portions of the old windows, while other portions of the new windows occupied wholly different positions. Before any right to the access of light to the non-coinciding portions of the new windows had been acquired, a railway company, in the exercise of their powers, erected a warehouse which obstructed the lights of windows in the new building:—Held, that the claimants were entitled to compensation in respect of the whole of the windows so obstructed, including the windows and portions of windows which did not coincide with any of the ancient lights. London, Tilbury and Southend Ry. and Gower's Walk Schools, In re, 59 L. J., Q. B. 162; 24 Q. B. D. 326; 62 L. T. 306; 38 W. R. 343—C. A.

Lands Clauses Act Excluded.]—A vestry was empowered by local acts (35 Geo. 3, c. 73, and 57 Geo. 3, c. 29) to pave and repair, and to raise or lower the ground of the streets within their district, without making compensation to owners of property thereby injured. The Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, by s. 98, empowers every vestry to pave and repair, and to raise or lower the ground or soil of the streets in their district as they think fit; and by s. 150, they have power to purchase "any land or any right or easement in or over land," necessary for the formation or protection of any works authorised to be executed under the act. By ss. 151 and 152, the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, except the compulsory purchase clauses, 16 to 68, which are expressly excluded, is incorporated; and by s. 247, all acts which are inconsistent with the metropolitan act are repealed. Under the provisions of these acts, or one or more of them, the vestry raised and altered the road and pavement of a street in their district in a manner justified by the act, but thereby obstructed the ancient lights of and entrances to certain houses of the plaintiff, and injuriously affected the houses. Notice was given to the vestry under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 68, to summon a jury to settle the amount of compensation, but the vestry refused to pay the compensation claimed, or to enter into any agreement, or to summon a jury:—Held, that the works were done under the local acts of Geo. 3, which were not repealed or superseded by the Metropolitan Local Management Act, 1855; that, there having been no agreement to purchase, ss. 150, 151 and 152 of the Metropolitan Act did not apply; and that s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act being expressly excluded from the metropolitan act, the plaintiff had no claim under that section. Baker v. St. Marylebone Vestry, 35 L. T. 129; 24 W. R. 848.

3. Commons.

Agreement whether enforceable.]—Sects. 101 to 106, inclusive, of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, with reference to the ascertaining of compensation for common lands, are not imperative so as to preclude the enforcement of specific performance of an agreement entered into otherwise than as mentioned in those sections. Bee v. Stafford and Uttoxeter Ry., 23 W. R. 863.

Amount Divisible.]—The copyhold tenants of a manor were entitled to common of pasture upon waste and lammas lands subject to by-laws made by the homage, and such rights were preserved after enfranchisement. The last by-laws, made in 1835, provided that every copyholder and freeholder should be entitled to turn on one head of cattle for every 10*l.* of annual value of his lands and tenements, provided that the whole number should not exceed thirty; and that every occupier of any copyhold or freehold lands should be entitled to turn on a certain number of cattle according to the rental or annual value of his lands and tenements. Portions of the common lands were taken compulsorily, and compensation for the rights of common was paid to a committee of the copyholders:—Held, that such compensation was divisible among the copyhold tenants of the manor and the freeholders within the manor according to the stint fixed by the first clause of the by-laws. Foæ v. Amherst, 44 L. J., Ch. 666; L. R. 20 Eq. 403.

Every freeman of Bedford was entitled so long as he was resident there to turn out one head of stock annually upon certain commonable land. Non-resident freemen had no such right over the land, but might obtain such right by coming to reside in Bedford. A railway company took part of the land, and the compensation money paid for the extinction of commonable rights was paid into court. In a suit for ascertaining the rights of all parties to the money:—Held, that the money ought to be reinvested in land to be held on the same trusts as that sold; and that in the meantime the same ought to be invested in stock, and the dividends divided among such freemen as would have been entitled in each year to rights of common over the land. Nash v. Coombs, 37 L. J., Ch. 600; L. R. 6 Eq. 51; 16 W. R. 663.

4. Copyholds.

Enfranchisement—Basis of Assessment.]—In 1873 a railway company took possession of certain copyhold land, and erected works thereon. In November, 1875, the conveyance to the company was executed and enrolled. In January, 1877, the lord required the company to enfranchise the land, and the question of the compensation payable to the lord was referred to arbitration. By the custom of the manor an arbitrary fine of three years' improved value was payable on alienation. The arbitrator assessed the compensation on the basis of the improved value of the land which had accrued by reason of the works executed by the company. Sect. 95 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, provides for the conveyance of copyhold lands to the promoters of the undertaking, and stipulates that until enfranchisement such lands shall continue subject to the same fines, rents and services as were theretofore payable. By s. 96, within three months after the enrolment of the conveyance, or within one month after taking possession, whichever shall first happen, the promoters shall procure the enfranchisement of the lands, and for that purpose shall apply to the lord to enfranchise the same, and shall pay him compensation, "and in estimating such compensation the loss in respect of the fines, heriots and other services payable on death, descent, or alienation, or any other matters which would be lost by the vesting of such copyhold lands in the promoters of the undertaking or by the enfranchisement of the same, shall be allowed for":—Held, that the lord was only entitled to compensation on the basis of the value of the land at the expiration of one month from the taking possession by the company. Lowther v. Caledonian Ry., 61 L. J., Ch. 108; [1892] 1 Ch. 73; 66 L. T. 62; 40 W. R. 225—C. A.

Reversionary Interest.]—In 1779, copyhold land, held of the manor of T., was demised for a term of sixty-five years; the lessee obtained from the lord at the same time a grant of part of the waste of the same manor, and afterwards made a private canal, with the consent of the reversioner of the copyholds, through both the copyhold and waste land. In 1794, an act of parliament was passed authorising a company to make the S. canal, of which the private canal was to form a part, and for this purpose it was to be widened and improved, under certain conditions. In 1797, the canal was opened for traffic, but no agreement was ever come to for the purchase of the interest of the owner of the reversion of the copyholds. Upon the expiration of the lease in 1844, an action of ejectment was brought by certain parties claiming this reversion, and judgment was given for the plaintiffs in the action. A bill was thereupon filed by the lord of the manor, who was under the act entitled to that portion of the canal which ran through the above manor, to restrain execution in the action, and to compel the defendants in equity to execute proper conveyances to the plaintiff, on the payment of what, if anything, was due to them for compensation, and also to restrain the defendants from interfering with the use of the canal:—Held, that the defendants were not, under the special circumstances of the case, entitled to obtain possession of the land covered by the canal, or to interrupt or interfere with its use, but that they were entitled to receive fair and reasonable compensation for their reversionary interest, and that the amount of such compensation was to be ascertained by reference to the value of the land when the reversion fell into possession, without regard to its being required for the purposes of the canal. Beaufort (Duke) v. Patrick, 17 Beav. 60; 22 L. J., Ch. 489; 17 Jur. 682; 1 W. R. 280.

Conveyance.]—A canal company was authorised by statute to purchase land on voluntary or compulsory sale by the persons interested, at prices to be agreed upon or ascertained by commissioners or a jury; and a form of conveyance was prescribed, purporting that the party granted all his "right, title and interest to and in the same, and every part thereof, to hold to the company for ever." The company was authorised to enter upon payment of price or tender, and was made liable to render compensation for damage done by their works, if claimed within six months. A copyholder in fee executed a conveyance in the statutory form to the company, who paid him the price, and entered:—Held, that this conveyance passed only such interest as the copyholder could convey without the lord; and that on the copyholder's death, no other person having been admitted, the lord might, seize quousque for want of a tenant, and maintain ejectment and an action for mesne profits against the company. Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal, 9 Q. B. 469; 16 L. J., Q. B. 107; 11 Jur. 429—Ex. Ch.

Fees and Fines.]—A steward of a manor, entitled by a custom to a fee upon surrender and another fee upon admittance to copyhold lands, is only entitled to the fee payable in respect of a surrender without admittance. Cooper v. Norfolk Ry., 6 Railw. Cas. 94; 3 Ex. 546; 18 L. J., Ex. 176; 13 Jur. 195.

A lord of a manor, entitled by custom to fines on surrender and admittance to copyholds, is not entitled to payment of any fine upon the execution of a conveyance by a copyholder to a railway company, or upon the enrolment of such conveyance; nor to any compensation for the loss thereof. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. L. & S. W. Ry., 14 C. B. 743; 2 C. L. R. 1797; 23 L. J., C. P. 177; 18 Jur. 911; 2 W. R. 560.

The provisions of 15 and 16 Vict. c. 51, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 94, do not apply to a purchase of copyholds by a railway company under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 95, so as to entitle the lord, for his own absolute use (as incident to his life estate, and against the remaindermen), to the fines in respect of admittance directed by s. 6 of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 94, to be paid by the tenants as a condition of obtaining enfranchisement. Wilson, In re, 2 J. & H. 619; 1 N. R. 301; 32 L. J., Ch. 191; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1043; 7 L. T. 772; 11 W. R. 294.

5. Tithes.

Amount of Compensation.]—The clergy of the city of London were, by a decree made under the authority of an act of parliament, 37 Hen. 8, c. 12, declared entitled to 2*s.* 9*d.* in the pound of the rent by the year of all houses, shops, &c., as and for tithe. The Blackwall Railway Company's act empowered that company to remove certain houses, and it declared, that for indemnifying the rectors, &c., against such loss as might accrue to them from the railway taking down houses, &c., and until new houses should be erected on the ground which should be cleared of such an annual rent or value that the tithes actually payable therefor should be fully equal to the tithes or yearly sums of money payable for the houses quitted by the occupiers, the company should pay tithes for the houses quitted by the occupiers "according to the last assessment thereof to the 25th March last," and such sum or sums should diminish in proportion to the tithes actually payable for new houses erected and occupied on ground which should be so cleared. In respect of all the houses taken by the company, with the exception of two, annual payments had been taken in lieu of tithes, at a rate, in each instance, below 2*s.* 9*d.* in the pound on the annual value agreed between the rector and the occupiers. The rector claimed to be paid 2*s.* 9*d.* in the pound upon the annual value of all the premises taken by the company :—Held, that where there had been an agreed rent, but the rector had received less than 2*s.* 9*d.* in the pound, he was not now entitled to receive 2*s.* 9*d.* in the pound; that the object of the act was only to give indemnity to the rector; and that the term "assessment" had reference to the arrangement throughout the parish, whereby the amount of tithes to be paid to the 25th March, 1839, had been understood, agreed and settled. Held, also, that the amount of tithe payable by the company was to be credited with the tithes actually payable to the rector in respect of new houses, and not merely with the sums actually received by the rector in respect of such new houses. London and Blackwall Ry. v. Letts, 3 H. L. Cas. 478; 6 Railw. Cas. 687; 15 Jur. 995. And see Letts v. London Corn Exchange Co., 1 De G. M. & G. 398.

Held, that the word "assessment" did not mean the assessment to the poor-rate. Ib.

Where a railway company was given compulsory powers, under a special act, to take property subject to tithes, on condition that the owner of the tithes was indemnified, either by their being still paid to him according to the last annual assessment, or by purchasing them under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, upon payment of compensation; and the company elected to purchase the tithes:—Held, that the last annual assessment was not to be taken as the basis for estimating the compensation to be so paid. Esdaile v. Metropolitan and District Rys., 46 J. P. 103.

Semble, it is only so much of a railway station as is a "house" which is subject to tithes. Ib.

A house is an inclosed space, with walls, a roof, and an entrance capable of being closed. Ib.

C. IN RESPECT OF WHAT PERSONS.

"Owner or Proprietor."]—The words "owner or proprietor of land," used in a compensation clause in a local act, to indicate the persons to whom compensation is to be made for injuries arising out of the prosecution of the act, have not necessarily any technical meaning confined to the owner of the inheritance, but must be construed with reference to the general object of the act, and mean any person who has any estate or interest—as, for instance, a tenant—in the land who sustains loss or damage. Lister v. Lobley, 2 H. & W. 122; 7 A. & E. 124; 6 L. J., K. B. 200.

Persons under Disability.]—Sect. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, applies to persons under disability claiming compensation for permanent injury to land as well as to owners in fee. Stone v. Yeovil Corporation, 46 L. J., C. P. 137; 2 C. P. D. 99; 36 L. T. 279; 25 W. R. 240—C. A.

A reference to valuation, under s. 9, may be had in the case of "permanent damage or injury" to lands held by a tenant for life, as well as to lands "to be purchased or taken from any party under any disability or incapacity." Ib.

Limited Interest—Mortgagees.]—The provisions of s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, apply not only where a company must be rightfully in possession, but where compensation is sought by persons having a limited interest, e.g. mortgagees. Perks v. Great Wycombe Ry., 3 Giff. 662; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1051; 7 L. T. 150; 10 W. R. 788.

Semble, the court will not subject a person being in possession of land taken by a railway company under the Lands Clauses Act to adverse proof of his title, when the purchase-money has been paid in court, under s. 79. Sterry's Estate, In re, 3 W. R. 561.

Tenancy—Right to use Room.]—A right for directors to use a board-room for certain purposes, at certain times, and for a clerk to use a desk in an office for certain purposes, does not constitute a tenancy so as to entitle the company to recover compensation for disturbance under the Lands Clauses Acts. Municipal Freehold Land Co. v. Metropolitan and District Rys., 1 Cab. & E. 184.

—— Interesse Termini.]—The plaintiff agreed to take a theatre for eight weeks, to commence on a future day. Before the commencement of the term, and before entry by the plaintiff, the defendants, by excavating on their property, deprived the theatre of the support of the adjacent land, so that the theatre was rendered unsafe, and was closed during the eight weeks by order of the proper local authorities. The plaintiff sued the defendants in respect of the damage suffered by him in consequence of their acts:—Held, that the defendants had injured a proprietary right of the plaintiff, who was, therefore, entitled to maintain the action. Gillard v. Cheshire Lines Committee, 32 W. R. 943—C. A.

—— Length of Landlord's Interest.]—A. agreed, in writing, to let to B. premises at a rent of 36*l.*, payable quarterly; and not to raise the rent or give B. notice to quit so long as he continued to pay the rent when due. A., who had only a leasehold interest to expire in 1881, had also agreed verbally with B. to let him remain in the premises for such term of years, not exceeding A.'s term therein, as B. might desire to continue tenant. A railway company contracted to purchase the interest of B. in the premises, which he described as "held for any term at tenant's option, but not beyond the term and interest of A., which term will expire in 1881." The company disputed B.'s title to the interest described, and paid the purchase-money into court:—Held, that the relation of landlord and tenant made B. a purchaser for valuable consideration to the extent of his lease; that the Statute of Frauds was no bar in equity to B.'s claim; that B. was not a mere tenant from year to year, but had a right to retain possession as long as his landlord's interest existed, and to enforce that right in equity; and that he was entitled to the purchase-money. King, In re, East London Ry., Ex parte, L. R. 16 Eq. 521; 29 L. T. 288; 21 W. R. 881.

—— Exercise of Reserved Powers—Implied Obligation.]—In January, 1872, A.'s predecessor in title obtained by feu contract from a superior a building lot situated at the south side of an estate. With the contract was incorporated a plan which shewed the whole estate divided into feuing lots, with several streets running east and west; and one street twenty-four feet wide, connecting the turnpike road on the north to another road on the south, and forming one side of A.'s feu. The lot was disponed "together with free ish and entry thereto by the streets laid down on the said plan, but in so far only as the same may be opened and not altered in virtue of the reserved power after mentioned." The reserved power was, that "the superior should have full power and liberty to vary and alter the said plan or streets or roads thereon in so far as regards the ground not already feued." In July, 1872, a railway company gave the superior statutory notice that they intended to take a strip of ground running from east to west through the estate. In 1877 they executed the works and, inter alia, cut off all access for carriages by the street marked on the plan running from south to north, twenty-four feet wide. None of A.'s land was taken. In an action by the railway company for interdict against A. taking further proceedings in a claim for compensation in respect that his lands were injuriously affected under s. 6 of the Railways Clauses (Scotland) Act, 1845:—Held (Selborne, L.C., doubting), that A. was not entitled to compensation, because (1) the access in question had not been "opened" in the sense meant in his feu contract before the statutory notice; and (2) there was no obligation in the feu contract cast upon the superior to pursue his feuing scheme, and give the feuars at some future time access along any of the roads or streets marked on the plan. Fleming v. Newport Ry., 8 App. Cas. 265—H. L. (Sc.)

Held, also, when there is an implied obligation by the superior to prosecute his feuing scheme for the benefit of the feuars, the feuars have a vested interest de futuro in the roads and streets shewn on the feuing plan, sufficient to sustain a claim for compensation under the Railways Clauses (Scotland) Act, 1845. Ib.

The compulsory taking by a railway company under their statutory powers of part of a superior's estate cannot be regarded as equivalent either in fact or law, to an exercise of a power reserved by the superior himself. Ib.

—— Year to Year.]—Under a local act, incorporating s. 121 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the defendants, in November, 1865, served upon the plaintiff, who held premises as yearly tenant, a notice, stating their intention to take the premises, and requiring possession in six months. In fact, possession was not taken by the defendants until 1867, and the plaintiff meanwhile remained in possession, and continued to carry on his business upon the premises. In January, 1867, the defendants took an assignment of the interest of the plaintiff's landlord (the lessee for a term of the premises), but no landlord's notice to quit was ever given to the plaintiff. In February, 1867, the defendants demanded immediate possession of the premises, declining to pay any compensation, and, upon refusal, obtained possession under a provision of their local act, which, however, required that no such possession should be taken until payment or deposit of purchase or compensation-money should have been made:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to compensation; and that the defendants, had, therefore, not complied with the provisions of their local act, and were liable to be sued in trespass. Cranwell v. London Corporation, 39 L. J., Ex. 193; L. R. 5 Ex. 284; 22 L. T. 760—Ex. Ch.

A tenant from year to year who has received notice under s. 121 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, requiring him to give up possession at the expiration of six months is entitled to compensation for any expenses he may thereby incur, although before the expiration of the six months he is informed that the corporation do not intend to take possession. Chadwick v. Rochdale Improvement Commissioners, 4 W. R. 643.

A tenant, from year to year, of land, required by a railway company has no claim to compensation if he has received legal notice to quit, and his land is not required until the expiration thereof. Merrett, Ex parte, 2 L. T. 471.

A joint occupation, for business purposes, of distinct premises, separately leased to two partners in trade, is not necessarily an interest less than that of a tenant from year to year, though there is no formal stipulation as to the term of such occupation. Reg. v. East London Ry., 17 L. T. 291.

—— Void Agreement for Lease.]—A person holding lands under an agreement for lease for a term exceeding three years, though at law a mere tenant from year to year, is entitled to have his purchase-money and compensation for lands required by a company assessed by a jury or by arbitration, under s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act. Sweetman v. Metropolitan Ry., 1 H. & M. 543; 10 L. T. 156; 12 W. R. 304.

—— Holding over after Notice.]—A railway act required tenants from year to year to deliver up possession of their lands, if required by the company, six months after notice, whether such notice was given with reference to the time of the commencement of the tenancy or not, the company compensating the tenant for his unexpired term or interest. A tenant from year to year under a Christmas holding, who, on a reasonable expectation that his landlord would not put an end to the tenancy, had made improvements on his land, received, in January, notice to quit in six months, and, at the Michaelmas following, possession was demanded by the company. The company then finding that it was not a Michaelmas holding, told the tenant he might retain possession till Christmas. The tenant remained in possession until after that period:—Held, that as he had held over after notice, his situation was the same as if a regular landlord's notice had been given, and that he was not entitled to compensation. Reg. v. London and Southampton Ry., 2 P. & D. 243; 10 A. & E. 3; 1 Railw. Cas. 717; 8 L. J., Q. B. 220.

The owner of a freehold estate, which was in the occupation of a yearly tenant, contracted to sell it to a corporate body for a sum of money which was paid into court. The tenant received due notice from the owner to quit at the end of six months, but he remained in possession without the consent of either vendor or of the purchaser:—Held, that he was not entitled to any portion of the purchase-money as compensation for his interest in the estate. Nadin, Ex parte, 17 L. J., Ch. 421.

—— Right of Renewal.]—Land, as to which a dispute as to the amount of the lessee's interest was pending (viz. whether he had a right of renewal for sixty-one years from 1885, or whether his interest expired altogether at the end of his existing term of sixty-one years, 1890), was taken by a railway company, under an agreement by which it was provided that if the lessee should substantiate his right of renewal, the company would pay him a further sum (the amount, if in dispute, to be settled by arbitration, pursuant to the Lands Clauses Act), in addition to the price of the existing term. The company having since bought up the lessor's reversion in fee, the lessee filed a bill against them, praying a declaration of his right to a renewal from 1885, and payment of compensation on that footing:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to decide this question of future right of renewal, on which the lessee's claim to compensation depended, and for ascertaining which no means were afforded by the Lands Clauses Act. Bogg v. Midland Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 440; L. R. 4 Eq. 310; 16 L. T. 113.

—— Precarious Interests—Improvements.]—A lessee, who has expended large sums upon the land demised, under a reasonable expectation of a renewal of his lease, is not entitled to compensation in respect of such expectancy, where the land is taken from him by a company under a statute directing compensation to be paid to the owners and occupiers of land through, under, in, or upon which the works authorised should be made, for the value of such land, and also for the damages sustained by them in making such works. Rex v. Manchester and Liverpool Ry., 6 N. & M. 186; 4 A. & E. 650; 1 H. & W. 689; 5 L. J., K. B. 106.

Tenants held a piece of ground, at a yearly rent, under a written agreement. The rent was payable half-yearly, at Lady-day and Michaelmas-day. No term was mentioned, but the tenancy was to be determinable by six months' notice on either side. It was provided, that in case the tenants erected nay buildings on the ground, they were to have the privilege of removing them at any time during the occupation, or, otherwise, they were to be allowed a beneficial interest in the same to the amount of the sum expended in the erection of the buildings, such beneficial interest to extend over a period of twenty years from the date thereof; that was to say, if they were required to give up possession before the expiration of the term, they were to be allowed one-twentieth part of the amount expended for each remaining year of the unexpired term. They erected buildings on the land. A company having purchased the freehold, "subject, nevertheless, to the tenants' rights," served the tenants with a notice to quit, and subsequently took possession under the powers of the Lands Clauses Act, and commenced pulling down the buildings that had been erected:—Held, that, notwithstanding the determination of the tenancy by the notice, the tenants had such an interest in the premises as entitled them to an injunction to restrain the company from removing or otherwise dealing with the premises until that interest was provided for. Rogers v. Hull Dock Co., 34 L. J., Ch. 165; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1245; 11 L. T. 463; 13 W. R. 217. See also Holt v. Gaslight and Coke Co., 41 L. J., Q. B. 351; L. R. 7 Q. B. 72; 27 L. T. 442.

—— Termination of Interest of Claimant.]—A railway company commenced to build warehouses, which were intended to be 100 feet in height. The lessee of a warehouse, the light of which would be affected when the buildings were completed, gave notice to the railway company that he held on a lease for an unexpired term of fourteen years, which could be determined by six months' notice, to expire on November 11 then next, and required the company to determine whether they would take over the lease, or whether he should give the requisite notice. The company declined to interfere, and the lessee on May 6 gave notice to determine his tenancy. There was no evidence that at the time the building had progressed so far as to affect the light to the warehouse. Afterwards the lessee gave notice to the company of his claim for compensation for injuriously affecting his lands, and an inquiry was held before the sheriff and a jury:—Held, that the act of the lessee in giving notice to terminate his lease, not being the natural result of the acts of the railway company, but a free exercise of will on his part, he could not recover compensation on the footing that he was entitled to a fourteen years' lease. Reg. v. Poulter, 57 L. J., Q. B. 138; 20 Q. B. D. 132; 58 L. T. 534; 36 W. R. 117; 52 J. P. 244—C. A.

A., in occupation of land under a building agreement determinable if the buildings were not completed by the 30th of November, 1885, was informed in 1883 of the promotion of a bill for a railway which would affect the land. A. thereupon had an interview with his landlord's agent, who told him to suspend building operations till the result of the railway scheme was known—no express agreement to extend the time for building being come to. In 1883, the company obtained their act, and on the 31st of July, 1883, purchased from the landlord such part of the land as was required; the purchase being made expressly subject to the building agreement. On the 16th of September, 1884, the company gave A. notice to treat. A. sent in no claim, and in January, 1886, the company took possession without making a deposit or giving a bond, as required by the Lands Clauses Act, insisting that A. had no interest in the land. A. thereupon commenced his action for an injunction, and to have it declared that the building agreement was subsisting and that he was entitled to have his interest assessed on that footing:—Held, that as the company had, without complying with the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, entered upon land of which A. was lawfully in occupation, he had ground for an action, and that, the action being brought to trial, the court had jurisdiction to make a declaration as to his interest in the property; and that, although the term named in the agreement had expired, he had an interest in the land, for that the agent's direction to suspend building raised an equity against the landlord to prevent his ejecting A. at the end of the term until he had a reasonable time after notice to complete the building, and that the railway company took subject to that liability. Birmingham Land Co. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 40 Ch. D. 268; 60 L. T. 527—C. A.

—— Hungerford Market Act.]—The Hungerford Market Company was empowered to make compulsory purchases of land for the use of the market, and the leases, &c., of the premises on it; and the lessees and tenants for years or at will were to give up possession at three months' notice, but compensation was to be made to any such tenant required to quit before the expiration of his term. The act provided, that all tenants for years, from year to year, or at will, "who shall sustain any loss, damage, or injury in respect of any interest whatsoever for goodwill, improvements, tenants' fixtures, or otherwise, which they now enjoy, by reason of the passing of this act," should be entitled to compensation, to be assessed, if necessary, by a jury. A tenant from year to year was ejected by the company, but received a regular half-year's notice to quit. She had been many years in possession, and the tenancy was not likely to have been determined if the act had not passed:—Held, that she was entitled to compensation for the whole marketable interest which she had in the premises at the time when the act passed; and that the goodwill, though of premises of so uncertain a tenure, was protected by the act as an interest which would, practically, have been valuable as between the tenant and a purchaser, though it was not a legal interest as against the landlord. Furlow, Ex parte, 2 B. & Ad. 341; 9 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 255.

Otherwise, where the tenancy was from year to year, determinable at three months' notice ending with the year, and with a stipulation against underletting without leave. Ib.

When, under the provisions of the same act, the company was treating for the purchase of certain premises, a person entered into an agreement to rent them for one year, and that if, with the owners' consent, he should hold beyond the year, he should quit, or be at liberty to quit, at any quarter-day, on receiving or giving three months' notice; that he would not underlet or give up possession to anyone, make any alteration without a written consent of his landlord, would keep all the glass entire, and so leave the same, together with all articles mentioned in a schedule, and all improvements or additions which he should make during his occupation, for the benefit of his landlord. The tenant occupied, with the consent of his landlord, for several years, while the above negotiations were proceeding. He afterwards received due notice to quit, and the purchase by the company was completed:—Held, that he was not entitled to compensation from the company in respect of the improvements made by him during his occupation. Reg. v. Hungerford Market Co., 1 P. & D. 492; 9 A. & E. 463; 8 L. J., Q. B. 114. S. C., 1 N. & M. 404, 548; 4 B. & Ad. 592, 596.

A tenant, whose term had expired, was entitled to compensation for goodwill, and for the chance of obtaining a renewal, under the same act. Ib.

But not for fixtures set up or purchased, or for improvements made by him, inasmuch as he had no legal interest in them:—Held, nevertheless, that this might be considered by the jury in estimating the chance of a beneficial removal. Ib.

—— Less than One Year.]—By s. 121 of the Lands Clauses Act, if any such lands (i.e. lands authorised to be taken) shall be in the possession of any person having no greater interest therein than as a tenant for a year, or from year to year, and if such person be required to give up possession of any lands so occupied by him before the expiration of his term or interest therein, he shall be entitled to compensation for the value of his unexpired term or interest, and the amount of such compensation shall be determined by two justices in case the parties differ about the same:—Held, that the section applied to the case of a person who had less than one year of a term unexpired at the date of his being required to give up possession; and that such person was not entitled to proceed under s. 68, and claim to have the compensation settled by arbitration. Reg. v. G. N. Ry., 46 L. J., Q. B. 4; 2 Q. B. D. 151; 35 L. T. 551; 25 W. R. 41.

—— Quarterly Tenant.]—The metropolitan board of works had, under the powers of the Metropolitan Streets Improvement Act, 1872, purchased a house of the owner, pending the plaintiff's tenancy, and had given the plaintiff, who was a quarterly tenant, notice to quit at the expiration of his tenancy. On motion for an injunction to restrain the board from entering upon the premises until they had given the plaintiff the notice to treat required by s. 18 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and should have paid him, or deposited in the bank, the compensation awarded to be paid under the act for his interest in the premises:—Held, that the plaintiff, as a quarterly tenant, had no interest, legal or equitable, in the premises within the meaning of s. 18 of the Lands Clauses Act. Syers v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 36 L. T. 277—C. A.

The board, in giving the notice to quit, were merely exercising their right as reversioners under their purchase from the freeholder. Ib.

Executor—Title to Lease.]—A testator directed that his sons, with whom he had been in partnership, might hold, use, occupy and enjoy certain leasehold premises so long as they might carry on business therein, they paying the rent. The premises were required by a public body for improvements under an act of parliament giving them power compulsorily to purchase lands and premises, and they had given notice to purchase. The executor claimed compensation for the interest which his testator's estate had therein, and the sons also claimed compensation for the compulsory loss of their business:— Held, that the executor was entitled to a gross sum in respect of the value of the testator's lease, subject to a deduction of the value of the interest of the sons in the premises, in consequence of their being compelled to cease carrying on their business. Penny v. Penny, 37 L. J., Ch. 340; L. R. 5 Eq. 227; 18 L. T. 13; 16 W. R. 671.

Interest created—After Notice to Treat.]—An interest in property created by an agreement entered into by the owner after a notice to treat has been served on him is not a subject for compensation. Edwards, Ex parte, 40 L. J., Ch. 697; L. R. 12 Eq. 389; 25 L. T. 149; 19 W. R. 1047.

Where, therefore, an owner of property after a notice to treat had been served on him entered into an agreement with a person who had for several years occupied part of the property as a weekly tenant for a lease of the same to him for a term of three years:—Held, that the tenant was not entitled to compensation in respect of the interest created by such agreement. Ib.

—— After Act passed.]—Where, by act of parliament, a corporation was empowered to purchase subsisting interests in certain hereditaments, and it was directed that the purchase-money should be reinvested in land, and in the meantime be laid out in funds, and dividends paid to persons entitled to rents:—Held, that neither persons who had taken leases since the passing of the act nor lessors in respect of their right to renew were entitled to any compensation out of purchase-money. London (Bishop), In re, 1 Sim. & S. 268.

Whether Lessor's Consent necessary.]—Where a railway company serves a notice, under the Lands Clauses Act, on a lessee to take land held under a lease containing a proviso against assignment with the licence of the lessor, the necessity for such licence is taken away by the operation of the act. Slipper v. Tottenham and Hampstead Junction Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 841; L. R. 4 Eq. 112; 16 L. T. 446; 15 W. R. 861.

Where a portion of the land comprised in a lease is taken by a railway company, the lessee is not bound under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 119, to procure the lessor's consent to the agreement with the company for the apportionment of the rent. Ib.

Specific performance decreed against a company by whom leasehold land had been so taken under a notice, where the lessor's licence to the assignment and consent to the apportionment of rent had not been obtained. Ib.

Landlord's Rights.] — A landlord was empowered to resume possession of any part of the land demised, in case it should be required by him "for the purpose of building, planting, accommodation, or otherwise":—Held, that this did not entitle the landlord to resume possession of land required by a railway company, so as to defeat the tenant's right to compensation. Johnson v. Edgware Ry., 35 Beav. 480.

The claimants demised land to a corporation at a low rent on condition of its being laid out and maintained as a public park. The lease contained a proviso that in case any part of the land should be compulsorily taken under the powers of any act of parliament it should be lawful for the claimants to re-enter upon and repossess it. Part of the land having been compulsorily taken by a railway company under the powers of an act of parliament:—Held, that the claimants were entitled to the commercial value of the land taken as freed from the lease, and not merely to the capitalised value of the rent paid therefor by the corporation. Morgan & L. & N. W. Ry., In re, 66 L. J., Q. B. 30; [1896] 2 Q. B. 469; 75 L. T. 226; 45 W. R. 176.

P. let to B., G. & Co. a farm and colliery, with a small railway leading thereto. During the tenancy a railway company paid 5,000*l.* to B., G. & Co. to buy off their opposition to the company's line, the tenants to finish a branch railway which the company had previously agreed with them to complete. B., G. & Co. afterwards availed themselves of certain clauses of their leases to put an end to their tenancy about seven years before it would expire by effluxion of time. P. thereupon claimed of the tenants a portion of the compensation for diminution of value and noncompletion of the branch railway. The agreement had been entirely confined to the railway company and B., G. & Co., and P. had not been mentioned in it:—Held, that P. had no locus standi; that, under the circumstances the doctrine of jus quæsitum tertio did not apply, but that the landlord should have had recourse to the usual remedies provided by the legislature for such cases. Peddie v. Brown, 3 Macq. H. L. 65; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 895; 5 W. R. 871. See Finnie v. Glasgow and South Western Ry., 3 Macq. H. L. 75.

Mortgagor and Mortgagee.]—The owner of business premises mortgaged them with the machinery and fixtures. A railway company gave notice to take part of the premises for its railway, but before the price was fixed the mortgagor died, and the mortgagees entered into possession of the property. A suit was instituted for the administration of the mortgagor's estate, which proved to be insolvent, and a receiver was appointed, who, with the consent of the mortgagees, carried on the business. Arbitrators and an umpire were appointed to fix the compensation-money payable by the company. The umpire awarded 15,950*l.*, of which he certified that he had awarded 2,800*l.* in respect of the loss of profits in carrying on the business. The executors claimed the 2,800*l.* as belonging to the mortgagor's estate, to be divided among his general creditors:— Held, that the sum of 2,800*l.* was in the nature of compensation for the value of the goodwill of the business, which passed with the premises; and that the whole of the sum of 15,950*l.* belonged to the mortgagees. Pile v. Pile, Lambton, Ex parte, 45 L. J., Ch. 841; 3 Ch. D. 36; 35 L. T. 18; 24 W. R. 1003.

A public body acting under the powers of their act, and of the Lands Clauses Act, gave notice to the plaintiff, who was a tailor, to take his house, which was leasehold. After some negotiation they offered him 400*l.*, of which 150*l.* was to be apportioned to his leasehold interest, and 250*l.* to his trade damage and personal expenses, to which the plaintiff agreed. The plaintiff had mortgaged his leasehold interest and could not make a good title. The plaintiff then brought an action for specific performance of the agreement, and the defendants afterwards paid the 400*l.* into court under s. 26 of the Lands Clauses Act, executed a deed-poll, and took possession:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment in the action, and to have the 250*l.* paid at once to him. Cooper v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 53 L. J., Ch. 109; 25 Ch. D. 472; 50 L. T. 602; 32 W. R. 709—C. A.

Although in some cases the goodwill of trade premises passes to a mortgagee, that does not apply to a case where the goodwill depends on the personal skill of the owner. Ib.

Renewable Leaseholds — Fine.] — Renewable leaseholds being under notice to be taken by a company, the lease was not renewed. That company turned out abortive, and afterwards another company came forward and took the same lands, and paid the purchase-money into court:—Held, that the vendors were not entitled to any part of the compensation-money by way of compensation for the fine which they omitted to take in consequence of the notice from the first company. Westminster (Dean), Ex parte, 18 Jur. 1113.

Land subject to Chief Rent.]—A., an owner in fee of land to which a right of running water was appurtenant, agreed with a water company to accept 2,500*l.* as compensation for his right in the water; and subsequently let the company into possession of the water. The land was subject to a chief rent, and the owner of the chief rent also claimed from the company compensation for the loss of the water. The company refused to pay the 2,500*l.* to A. unless he obtained the concurrence of the owner of the rent in the deed of conveyance. A. then brought an action for the 2,500*l.*, and the company filed a bill for specific performance of his agreement, and for an injunction to restrain the action:—Held, that the company was entitled to the injunction no bringing the money into court to abide the decision of the conflicting claims for compensation. Stockport District Waterworks v. Jowett, 13 W. R. 977.

Purchase-money or Compensation.]—A railway company, when constructing their line, excavated soil on the land of M., and used the stuff for ballast. No notice was given to him that his land was required for the purposes of the company. After a delay on their part of some years, the matter was, with other claims for consequential injury, referred to arbitration. The articles recited his allegation that the lands had been "taken and used and otherwise injured," and provided for the ascertainment of the purchase-money for the lands taken and used. The award found that the company had "cut the soil of a portion of the lands, and that it has been taken and used," &c., and awarded a sum "as and for the purchase-money of the portion of the lands," &c. The money was paid to the owner, and subsequently the pond formed in the excavation was taken by another railway company, under their compulsory powers. He claimed that on the construction of the deeds, and under the facts of the case, he had remained the owner of the lands:—Held, that the lands were taken by the company, and that the money was paid for the purchase, and not merely as compensation for injury thereto. Macrory, Ex parte, Belfast Central Ry., In re, 19 W. R. 238.

D. PRINCIPLES OF ASSESSMENT.

Profits made on other Premises.]—A party carried on an old-established business at 11, Parliament-street. His lease being about to determine, he purchased the lease of No. 10 in the same street with the intention of transferring his business to No. 10 upon the determination of his lease of No. 11. Before such transfer was effected the commissioners of works and public buildings gave him notice to treat with respect to No. 10, under the powers of the Public Offices Sites Act, 1866, which incorporates the Lands Clauses Act. The question of the amount that the commissioners were to pay to him for the compulsory taking of No. 10 was referred to arbitration. The arbitrator admitted evidence of the profits that he had been making at No. 11, and awarded to him 1,000*l.* in respect of goodwill attaching to or loss of profits which might or would have been made at No. 10, Parliament-street, if the premises had not been taken for the purposes of the act:—Held, that he had not exceeded his powers in so doing, and that the award of such compensation was good. White v. Public Works Commissioners, 22 L. T. 591.

Part of Building Estate taken for Sewage Works.]—Under statutory powers incorporating the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the respondents gave the appellant notice to treat for the purchase of part of his land, which they required for sewage works. In an inquisition held under that act evidence was given that the existence of sewage works, even if conducted so as not to create an actionable nuisance, depreciated the market value of the appellant's other lands for building purposes. The land taken was let on long building leases; of the other lands part was in hand, and part was let for short periods for brick-making. The land taken was separated from the other lands, in part by other property of the appellant's, and in part by a railway. The jury gave a verdict for the value of the land taken and a further sum for all damage sustained or to be sustained by reason of the injuriously affecting the other lands by the exercise of the respondents' statutory powers:—Held, that the jury had not exceeded their jurisdiction in awarding the further sum, for the damage was not too remote to form the subject of compensation, even though no nuisance might be caused. Essex v. Acton Local Board, 58 L. J., Q. B. 594; 14 App. Cas. 153; 61 L. T. 1; 38 W. R. 209; 53 J. P. 756—H. L. (E.)

Tied Public-house.]—Where certain brewers were the owners in fee of a public-house which was let for an unexpired term of seven years, and there was in the lease a covenant by the tenant not to sell on the premises any beer other than that purchased of them, and a corporation was empowered, by a special act (which incorporated the Lands Clauses Act), to take the premises:—Held, that, in ascertaining the amount of the purchase-money and compensation to be paid by the corporation to the brewers, the additional value of the premises, by reason of the covenant to sell their beer only, was to be taken into consideration. Bourne v. Liverpool Corporation, 1 N. R. 425; 33 L. J., Q. B. 15; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 125; 8 L. T. 572.

Confusion of Seed-beds.]—A seedsman had offices in Covent-garden, where he kept his stock, and had also a market garden at Wandsworth, where he sowed small quantities of all the seeds in his stock on trial, after which he sold each parcel at a higher price, by reason of his giving a warranty, based on his experience of these trial crops. A board of works entered upon his land, and so carried on their works that it became impossible to identify the trial crops with the seed in bulk, whereby the seedsman was unable to warrant his seeds, which were in consequence depreciated in value 50 per cent. The arbitrator having included in his award a sum in respect of such depreciation:—Held, that this damage was too remote, and could not be recovered. Clarke v. Wandsworth District Board of Works, In re, 17 L. T. 549.

Goods on Premises.]—The occupier of a house and premises, injuriously affected by the execution of the works of a railway company in exercise of the powers given by act of parliament, is entitled to compensation for damage done to his goods in the house by reason of the exercise of such powers. Knock v. Metropolitan Ry., 38 L. J., C. P. 78; L. R. 4 C. P. 131; 19 L. T. 239; 17 W. R. 10.

Value, of what Interest.]—When land, subject to restrictions as to its use, is taken for a public object under compulsory powers, the amount of compensation to the person interested therein is to be assessed with reference to the value of his interest therein, and not with reference to its value to the persons taking it. Stebbing v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 40 L. J., Q. B. 1; L. R. 6 Q. B. 37; 23 L. T. 530; 19 W. R. 73.

A declaration stated that, by their act, a railway company was not to interfere with a church, or with the yard attached thereto, without the consent of the bishop of the diocese, and payment by the company to the defendants of a sum to be agreed upon between the defendants and the company, in ascertaining which regard should be had to the cost of a site for a new church and to the value of the yard; that, on payment by the company to the defendants of the sums so to be agreed upon, the church and yard should vest in the company, and the sum so paid should be employed by the defendants in purchasing a new site and paying the plaintiff for the value of the yard. It averred that the sum agreed upon was 7,732*l.* 17*s.*, and that it was paid by the company to the defendants, and thereupon the church and yard vested in the company; whereupon the bishop gave his consent that the sum was sufficient to purchase a new site, and also to pay the plaintiff the value of the yard, 2,000*l.*, of which the defendants had notice and were requested to pay. Breach, non-payment of the value. The defendants, before action, offered the plaintiff a sum which they had determined to be the value of the yard, which was consecrated ground, and, as such, its value to the plaintiff was less than it would be to the company when applied to secular uses. The judge directed the jury that the act did not make the determination of the defendants conclusive on the plaintiff, and that in estimating their damages they were at liberty to value the ground as applicable to secular uses:—Held, no misdirection. Hilcoat v. Canterbury and York (Archbishops), 10 C. B. 327; 19 L. J., C. P. 376.

Held, also, in arrest of judgment, that the declaration sufficiently disclosed the duty of the defendants under the statute, and stated a good breach. Ib.

Where streams of water are taken by the Barbados Water Supply Company under the compulsory powers conferred on them by the Water Supply Act, 1886, the owner of those streams is entitled to compensation, notwithstanding that he has made no use of them prior to their being so taken; and the amount of such compensation must be based upon the value of the rights of property of which the owner is deprived, and not upon the mere value of the advantages which he had derived from user in the past. Trent-Stoughton v. Barbados Water Supply Co., 62 L. J., P. C. 123; [1893] A.C. 502; 1 R. 403; 69 L. T. 164—P. C.

In respect of Goodwill.]—The loss of trade occasioned by the obstruction of a highway during the execution of the works of a railway company is not an injurious affection of the tradesman's interest in his premises which entitles him to compensation. Ricket v. Metropolitan Ry., 36 L. J., Q. B. 205; L. R. 2 H. L. 175; 16 L. T. 542; 15 W. R. 937.

—— Public-house.]—A railway company in pursuance of their act of parliament, served notice upon the yearly tenant of a public-house of their intention, after the expiration of six months from the date thereof, to enter upon and take the premises in his occupation. The company nevertheless did not take possession at the expiration of the specified period, and the tenant continued his business on the premises for a further space of two years, but at a reduced rate of profits, the company having by virtue of their powers demolished the surrounding neighbourhood. At the end of two years the tenant received a summons from a metropolitan police magistrate to appear for the purpose of having the amount of compensation due to him assessed. On the hearing of the summons, the tenant, in addition to the usual items of compensation, claimed in respect of reduced profits of trade consequent upon the demolition by the company of the surrounding neighbourhood from the time of the expiration of the six months' notice to the date of the hearing of the summons:—Held, that he was not so entitled, the claim being one which, in the absence of statutory powers, could not have been made the subject of an action, and the keeping on of the business at a reduced rate of profits, after he might have compelled the company's acceptance of the premises being his own voluntary act. Reg. v. Vaughan, 38 L. J., M. C. 49; L. R. 4 Q. B. 190; 17 W. R. 115.

Under a dock act, persons having an estate or interest, not less than from year to year, in houses, &c., who shall be injured in such estate or interest, by any of the works authorised by the act, were to be compensated by the dock company:—Held, that the company was not liable for compensation to the owner of a house occupied as a tavern, the pecuniary value of which was lessened by reason of a destruction of the neighbourhood by the works, duly authorised, of the company, where the house, though less valuable for a tavern or a shop, was not rendered less valuable as a private residence. Rex v. London Dock Co., 6 N. & M. 390; 5 A. & E. 163; 2 H. & W. 267; 5 L. J., K. B. 195.

Peculiar and Valuable Rights.]—The conservators of the river Thames having under their special acts vested in them the soil and foreshore of the river Thames with power to grant licences, to build quays, jetties, wharves, and other conveniences, had notice served on them by the Tilbury and Southend Railway Company under one of their acts for the purpose of acquiring compulsorily a portion of the foreshore in Essex belonging to the conservators for a wharf. The matter was referred to two arbitrators and an umpire under the Lands Clauses Acts, and the umpire stated in writing previous to commencing his arbitration that the principle of compensation upon which he should proceed was that he would be guided by the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts. He awarded a certain sum to the conservators, and the award being objected to as void by the railway on the ground that the arbitrator had based it on the principle of giving compensation under the special acts of the conservancy, and not on the Lands Clauses Acts:—Held, that the arbitrator was bound to assess the compensation in accordance with the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts, and had in fact done so. That he was bound to take and had rightly taken into consideration the peculiar and valuable rights of the conservators under their special acts. That even assuming the conservators' witnesses had given evidence as to value based on a wrong principle, there was nothing to bind the court to hold the arbitrator had based his decision on that principle, and that consequently specific performance with payment of the sum awarded (subject to an inquiry as to title) ought to be granted. Thames Conservators v. London, Tilbury and Southend Ry., 3 R. 178; 68 L. T. 21.

Reversionary Interest in Licensed Premises—Evidence of present Market Value of Claimant's Interest.]—In estimating the amount of compensation under the Lands Clauses Acts to be paid to the reversioner of licensed premises, let on lease with twenty-six years unexpired, evidence to prove the present market value of the claimant's reversionary interest in the premises as licensed premises is admissible, and need not be confined to the estimated rental value of the premises as a house and shop apart from the question of whether, when the reversion falls in, they would then be licensed premises. Belton v. London County Council, 62 L. J., Q. B. 222; 5 R. 230; 68 L. T. 411; 41 W. R. 315; 57 J. P. 185.

Outlay on Repairs made after Notice of Provisional Order—Arbitrator not Appointed.]—The owner of houses in a dilapidated condition, whilst repairing them was informed that a provisional order had been made enabling a public body to take the houses. The owner refused to stop the repairs, the act was afterwards obtained and an arbitrator appointed:—Held, that the owner was entitled to be compensated for the outlay made by him between the date of the notice to him and the appointment of the arbitrator. Higgins v. Dublin Corporation, 28 L. R., Ir. 484.

Set-off of Advantages.]—A company cannot reduce the damages to be paid to a householder in virtue of the increased value which their works confer upon his house. Senior v. Metropolitan Ry., 2 H. & C. 258; 32 L. J., Ex. 225; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 802; 8 L. T. 544; 11 W. R. 836.

Lease to Testator—Executor—Partners.]—A testator directed that his sons, with whom he had been in partnership, might hold, use, occupy, and enjoy certain leasehold premises so long as they might carry on business therein, they paying the rent. The premises were required by a public body for improvements under an act of parliament giving them power compulsorily to purchase lands and premises, and they had given notice to purchase. The executor claimed compensation for the interest which his testator's estate had therein, and the sons also claimed compensation for the compulsory loss of their business:—Held, that the executor was entitled to a gross sum in respect of the value of the testator's lease subject to a deduction of the value of the interest of the sons in the premises, in consequence of their being compelled to cease carrying on their business. Penny v. Penny, 37 L. J., Ch. 340; L. R. 5 Eq. 227; 18 L. T. 13; 16 W. R. 671.

In respect of subsequent Injuries—When excluded by Agreement.]—An owner sold land to a railway company for the construction of their line, and agreed with them that the sum paid to him should be not only the purchase-money for such land, but also for damage by severance and injury to, and for otherwise injuriously affecting his adjoining lands:—Held, that the agreement included all that he could recover under the Lands Clauses Act, and that he was precluded from afterwards claiming compensation for damage subsequently done to his adjoining lands by the subsidence of the soil consequent on the company making their line through the land they had so bought from him, such damages being reasonably capable of being foreseen when the agreement was made. Todd v. Metropolitan District Ry., 24 L. T. 435; 19 W. R. 720.

Prospective or Contingent Injury.]—A claimant cannot recover compensation in respect of an injury which is merely prospective and does not exist at the time of making the claim. Reg. v. Poulter, 57 L. J., Q. B. 138; 20 Q. B. D. 132; 58 L. T. 534; 36 W. R. 117; 52 J. P. 244—C. A.

A railway company took land on which cotton mills would probably have been built; the owner had other land on which he had built a reservoir from which water might be supplied to such cotton mills when built. In proceeding under the Lands Clauses Act to ascertain the compensation, the umpire received evidence as to the profits which might have been derived from supplying water to the mills when built, and awarded compensation for the loss of those prospective profits:—Held, that the umpire was right in receiving the evidence, and in awarding such compensation. Ripley v. G. N. Ry., L. R. 10 Ch. 435; 31 L. T. 869; 23 W. R. 685.

Anticipated damage from the noise and smoke of trains does not appear to be a proper subject of estimate for compensation under the railway statutes. City of Glasgow Union Ry. v. Hunter, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 78.

Anticipated damage from the noise or smoke of trains does not appear to be a proper subject of estimate for compensation under the statutes relating to railways. Reg. v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 10 B. & S. 391; 38 L. J., Q. B. 201; L. R. 4 Q. B. 358; 17 W. R. 1094.

In 1845, a landlord received, under an arbitration, compensation for land, and "in respect of damages which might be sustained by reason of making a railway":—Held, that he was not precluded from insisting on a further compensation for future unforeseen damages subsequently sustained. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry. v. Evans, 15 Beav. 322.

A company was empowered to take land (with an exception of mines) for a railway, paying the value of the lands and making compensation for damages sustained by reason of the execution of the works, and for damage, loss, or inconvenience sustained by reason of the execution of any of the powers of the act; such value and compensation to be fixed by agreement or assessed by a jury; mines to be worked by the owner, so that no damage be thereby done to the railway, and in case of damage the owner to repair it at his own expense, or the company to repair in case of neglect or refusal, and recover the expenses from the owner:—Held, that the owner of land taken by the company, and for which compensation was paid, could not, upon afterwards discovering that a mine, to which he was entitled, could not be worked without doing damage to the railway, claim further compensation in respect of the loss sustained thereby. Compensation in respect of such contingent loss should have been claimed at the time of the original agreement or assessment. Rex v. Leeds and Selby Ry., 5 N. & M. 246; 3 A. & E. 683.

Action by the lessee of lands under C. against a railway company for constructing their railway across the lands of other persons without leaving sufficient opening for the passage of flood waters, whereby they were obstructed and penned up, and forced upon his lands. Plea, that before he had anything in the lands now in his occupation, the company gave notice to C. to purchase lands of his adjoining to those now of the lessee, and that it was referred to an arbitrator to fix the amount of purchase-money, and of compensation for injury to the lands and other estates of C. by severance or otherwise, and to determine what bridges, arches, culverts, &c., should be made:—Held, that the compensation awarded under such reference related only to damage, known or contingent, by reason of the construction of the railway on the lands purchased of C., and to other damage arising from the construction of the railway at other places, which was apparent and capable of being ascertained and estimated at the time when the compensation was awarded, and did not embrace also all contingent and possible damages which might arise afterwards by the works of the company at other places. Lawrence v. G. N. Ry., 6 Railw. Cas. 656; 16 Q. B. 643; 20 L. J., Q. B. 293; 15 Jur. 652.

An arbitrator is not bound to award compensation in respect of contingent future damage suggested as likely to arise from the execution of works to be done by the promoters, unless it clearly appears that such damage must necessarily arise. If such damage in fact arises afterwards, the remedy for the party damaged is under s. 68. Ware v. Regent's Canal Co., 7 Railw. Cas. 780; 9 Ex. 395; 23 L. J., Ex. 145.

Second Inquiry.]—A company being authorised to construct a tunnel to run in part underneath land on which was erected a manufactory, with other buildings, it was agreed between the company and the owner that the amount to be paid to him for the right to construct, and for ever maintain, the tunnel underneath the hereditaments and premises, and for the purchase of the site of the tunnel, and in full compensation for all damage or injury to be sustained by reason thereof, should be left to arbitration. The arbitrators awarded a sum to be paid to the owner "as compensation for the right to construct, and for ever maintain, the tunnel underneath the hereditaments and premises, and as purchase-money for the site of the tunnel, and in full compensation for all damage or injury sustained by reason of the construction thereof." By deed the owner, in consideration of the sum awarded, granted to the company "the site of, and full liberty to bore, dig out, excavate, and construct the tunnel underneath the land and buildings thereon, together with full liberty at all times thereafter to use, enjoy, uphold, maintain and repair the tunnel, and to hold the liberty or privilege granted henceforth for ever, for the purposes of the act of parliament relating to the railway, freed and discharged from all claims and demands whatsoever of or by the owner. Subsequently, serious injuries were from time to time sustained by the superincumbent buildings, in consequence of the subsidence of the surface of the land, such subsidence being caused by the construction of the tunnel in a loose soil, and by the vibration resulting from the passing of trains, or by one of such causes:—Held, by Cockburn, C. J., that questions arising upon such injuries as those complained of were determinable upon the provisions in respect of compensation contained in 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 68; and that the act contains no provision for a second inquiry in case of future damage arising, not contemplated by the parties at the time of the assessment of compensation, which must be ascertained at once and finally. Croft v. L. & N. W. Ry., 3 B. & S. 436; 32 L. J., Q. B. 113; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 962; 7 L. T. 741; 11 W. R. 360.

But by Crompton and Mellor, JJ., that the damages were such as must have been foreseen at the time of the arbitration; and whether the question turned upon the construction of the award and conveyance or upon the statute, the owner was equally debarred from recovering further compensation. Ib.

"Lands held Therewith."]—Where the lands taken and the lands injuriously affected are held by the same owner, so that the unity of ownership conduces to the advantage of the property as one holding, the lands injuriously affected are held with the lands taken within the meaning of ss. 49 and 63 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Essex v. Acton Local Board, 58 L. J., Q. B. 594; 14 App. Cas. 153; 61 L. T. 1; 38 W. R. 209; 53 J. P. 756—H. L. (E.)

Damage by Severance.]—Where part of a field available for building purposes had been taken by a railway company, so as to detach and leave without practicable access the larger portion of the field:—Held, that a jury was rightly directed in assessing compensation for the severance, to consider the access to the severed portion as cut off, as such access could not be afforded to building land by accommodation works, which the company, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, ss. 68, 69, might be ordered to make; and the jury ought therefore to exclude these works from their consideration. Reg. v. Brown, 8 B. & S. 456; 36 L. J., Q. B. 322; L. R. 2 Q. B. 630; 16 L. T. 827; 15 W. R. 988.

A railway company's private act, which incorporated the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and Part I. of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, empowered them to take compulsorily portions only of houses or manufactories for the purposes of the act, without being compellable by the owners to purchase the whole, or any greater portions, if such portions could in the opinion of the jury, arbitrators, or other authority to whom the question of disputed compensation should be submitted, "be severed from the remainder of such properties without material detriment thereto." Under the private act the company took a portion of a manufactory across which lay the only access for vehicles from a public highway to the remainder of the manufactory. The portion of land was required merely for building a railway viaduct, and a roadway to the remainder of the manufactory from the highway under one of the arches of the viaduct would have given practically the same access to the manufactory as was enjoyed before the severance. Before the umpire to whom the question of compensation was submitted, the company undertook to grant a perpetual right of way under the arch to the owners of the remainder of the manufactory, and relied upon this undertaking and their liability to construct accommodation works under s. 68 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, for the purpose of shewing that the severance of the portion of land they required would cause no material detriment to the remainder. Upon a special case being stated by the arbitrator:—Held, that in considering whether the severance would cause any material detriment to the remainder of the property, the umpire was entitled to take into consideration the liability of the company under s. 68 to make and maintain such accommodation works as should be necessary for making good the interruption to the use of the land caused by the severance. Gonty and Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Ry., In re, 65 L. J., Q. B. 625; [1896] 2 Q. B. 439; 75 L. T. 239; 45 W. R. 83—C. A.

Held, also, by Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith, L.J., that the company could in law carry out their undertaking, and that therefore the umpire should take that undertaking also into consideration. Ib.

The plaintiff had constructed a reservoir on part of his land, the only use of which was to supply with water mills and other buildings which might be erected on the rest of his land which was suitable for building purposes. A railway company gave notice to treat for a large portion of this building land, and the amount to be paid to the plaintiff for purchase-money, compensation and damage was by agreement referred to arbitration. At the arbitration he claimed compensation for the loss he would sustain by reason of his losing the sale of the water from his reservoir to buildings that might have been erected on the land taken by the company, and in support of this claim he gave evidence as to the profits he expected to realise on this account:—Held, that the land with the reservoir upon it was "injuriously affected" by the severance, that the arbitrators were justified in considering such claim and in receiving such evidence in support of it, and that the award made by them was valid. Ripley v. G. N. Ry., L. R. 10 Ch. 435; 31 L. T. 869; 23 W. R. 685.

A volunteer corps obtained leases of different plots of land for the erection of a rifle range of 800 yards. Immediately behind the butts was a field occupied by A., and beyond that some marsh land, which were required by the rifle corps for the purpose of making provision for the safety of the public during the time the butts were in use. The corps obtained a lease of this land, but only made a verbal agreement with A. for the use of his land during the rifle practice, in consideration of an annual payment of 49*l*. A company under their compulsory powers took portion of the marsh land occupied by the corps, and so used it as to put a stop to the use of the rifle range. At an inquisition under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the jury assessed the value of the land taken, and damage for the injury to the rifle range:—Held, that there might be an injury from severance within the meaning of the act, although the premises were not immediately contiguous, and that the fact that the corps had only a precarious interest in the field only affected the quantum of compensation to be awarded to them. Holt v. Gaslight and Coke Co., 41 L. J., Q. B. 351; L. R. 7 Q. B. 728; 27 L. T. 442.

E. SETTLING AMOUNT, AND PRACTICE THEREON.

1. Notice of Claim.

What Sufficient.]—A notice should state the quantity as well as the quality of the estate or interest of the claimant. Healey v. Thames Valley Ry., 5 B. & S. 769; 34 L. J., Q. B. 52; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1182; 11 L. T. 268; 13 W. R. 44.

An occupier of a bakehouse and shop, having sustained loss in his trade by reason of the works of a railway company, served the company with a notice, stating that he was the occupier of the bakehouse and shop, and that he used the premises for carrying on his business of a baker, and that in consequence of the works of the company, the bakehouse and shop had been injuriously affected, and loss and damage had arisen to him, in his business, by preventing the access of customers to the shop. The notice did not state what interest he had in the bakehouse and shop:—Held, that, as he claimed only as an occupier for loss of trade, it was not necessary for the notice to state what interest he had in the shop, and that the notice was sufficient. Cameron v. Charing Cross Ry., 16 C. B. (N.S.) 430; 33 L. J., C. P. 313; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 635; 10 L. T. 381; 12 W. R. 803.

In 1848 a landowner gave a railway company notice for a jury to assess damages which he alleged he had suffered. In 1849 he made a claim for further subsequent damages, and in 1850 gave notice for an arbitrator to assess the whole damages:—Held, that this was not irregular, and that the first notice had not exhausted all the statutory powers. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry. v. Evans, 15 Beav. 322.

The court will not refuse a mandamus to enforce proceedings under the Lands Clauses Act, simply because the claimants have included distinct joint and separate claims in the same formal notice. Reg. v. East London Ry., 17 L. T. 291.

Service.] — A company empowered to take lands compulsorily, wishing that notice should be served at its office or upon its officers, and not upon its solicitors, must state such wish clearly and at once. It must not lie by till an award is made, and then seek to set aside the award as irregular. Reg. v. Metropolitan Ry., Knock, Ex parte, 17 L. T. 291.

The owner's messuages being injuriously affected by the works of "The Blackburn Railway Company," he served the secretary at their office with a notice containing the particulars required by the statute, but addressed to "The Blackburn and Clitheroe Railway Company":—Held, that the notice was sufficient. Eastham v. Blackburn Ry., 9 Ex. 758; 23 L. J., Ex. 199; 2 W. R. 377.

When no Claim made.]—The owner of property required for railway purposes does not lose his right to have the value assessed by a jury under s. 23 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, because he has made no claim, and because the company has proceeded under s. 85. They must have actually paid or tendered the money, or the owner may claim to go on under s. 23 or s. 68. And if the assignee of a bankrupt mortgagor will not concur, that is ground for proceeding under s. 110. Reg. v. Metropolitan Ry., 13 L. T. 444.

Waiver of.]—Where parties appear, and do not protest for want of notice, the defect will be held to be waived. Taylor v. Clemson, 11 Cl. & F. 610; 8 Jur. 833.

2. How Determined.

a. By Jury.

i. Compelling Company to issue Warrant.

Mandamus.]—The court will not grant a mandamus to a railway company to summon a jury to assess compensation for injury done to property, even where the injury has been done two years, and there appears to have been delay on the part of the company, if works are still in progress by which the property will be still further injured, and it does not appear that the company is acting malâ fide. Parkes, Ex parte, 9 D. P. C. 614.

Commissioners having given notice to treat to an owner of lands proposed to be taken, cannot withdraw therefrom, and therefore the owner is entitled to a mandamus to compel them to issue their warrant to summon a jury to assess the value. Birch v. St. Marylebone Vestry, 20 L. T. 697; 17 W. R. 1014.

By a railway act it was provided, that all parties with whom the company might have any dispute should, at their own costs, before the company was obliged to issue their warrant to summon a jury, enter into a bond to prosecute their complaint and pay their proportion of costs, and in case of the warrant being issued without such bond having been entered into, the company might give notice, requiring the same to be done before commencing the inquiry. Certain premises having been injured by floods occasioned by the company's works, on an application by the owners for a mandamus to summon a jury to assess damages, it was objected that the damage resulted from acts done partly by the company, and partly by the applicants themselves, and that the bond required by the act had not been entered into previously to the application. It did not appear that there had been any demand and refusal:—Held, that there was sufficient doubt on the facts to warrant the issuing a mandamus, and that the entering into a bond, unless required by the company, was not a condition precedent to such an application. Reg. v. North Union Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 729.

A neglect to issue a warrant after a demand made upon the solicitors of the company, is a sufficient refusal to entitle the claimant to the writ. Ib. S. P., South Yorkshire, Doncaster and Goole Ry., In re, Senior, Ex parte, 7 D. & L. 36; 18 L. J., Q. B. 333; 14 Jur. 1093.

A company gave notice to landholders to treat for certain portions of land. After some discussion, the question of compensation was referred to arbitration, which, however, was never completed:—Held, that the remedy of the landholders was by mandamus to compel the summoning of a jury, and not by bill in chancery. Lind v. Isle of Wight Ferry Co., 1 N. R. 13; 7 L. T. 416.

When a railway company has given notice to a landowner that they required his land for the purposes of their undertaking, and the case is one entitling the landowner to have the amount of compensation assessed by a jury, but the company has neglected to issue their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury for that purpose within a reasonable time after they were required to do so, the landowner, if he is personally interested in the warrant being issued, and has sustained damage, or may be damaged, by its not being issued, has a right to proceed by an action for a mandamus to the railway company to issue their warrant. Fotherby v. Metropolitan Ry., 36 L. J., C. P. 88; L. R. 2 C. P. 188; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 1005; 15 L. T. 243; 15 W. R. 112.

When an occupier of premises which a railway company required, has acted on their notice and removed to other premises, he is entitled to maintain an action of mandamus to compel the company to issue their warrant to the sheriff to assess compensation, if the company after the expiration of such notice neglects to take any steps for settling the amount of compensation. Morgan v. Metropolitan Ry., 38 L. J., C. P. 87; L. R. 4 C. P. 97; 19 L. T. 655; 17 W. R. 261—Ex. Ch.

ii. Precept to Sheriff or Coroner.

Interest of Sheriff.]—The interest which at common law disqualifies an officer from acting in a judicial inquiry must be direct and certain, and not merely remote or contingent; and the same principle must be applied to the Lands Clauses Act, s. 39. Reg. v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., 36 L. J., Q. B. 171; L. R. 2 Q. B. 336; 16 L. T. 173; 15 W. R. 676.

Where, therefore, at the time of the summoning of a jury and the taking of an inquisition before the sheriff as to the amount of compensation to be paid for land taken by a railway company under the powers of their act of parliament, there was an executory agreement not yet carried out, by which that company would ultimately become amalgamated with another railway company, and the sheriff was a shareholder in the latter company:—Held, that he was not interested in the matter in dispute, so as to invalidate the proceedings. Ib.

The coroner should summon a jury to take an inquisition, if the sheriff is interested in the transaction (as being a shareholder in the company requiring the land), and a certiorari will issue to bring up the inquisition, although by s. 145 no proceeding shall be quashed for want of form, nor shall the same be removed by certiorari. Reg. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 9 L. T. 423; 12 W. R. 208. S. P., Reg. v. Warwickshire (Sheriff), 3 W. R. 164.

Interest of Under-sheriff.]—The promoters may properly issue their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury, though the under-sheriff is interested as a shareholder in the company. The interpretation clause, s. 3, does not in such case incorporate the word "under-sheriff" into the word "sheriff," as used in the above section. Worsley v. South Devon Ry., 16 Q. B. 539; 20 L. J., Q. B. 254; 15 Jur. 970.

In such a case the sheriff should either take the inquisition in person or appoint some disinterested party. Ib.

Waiver of Protection.] — The direction in respect of the interest of the sheriff in s. 39 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is introduced for the protection of the party against whom the interest would operate, and he may therefore waive the protection if he so elects. Baddeley, Ex parte, 5 D. & L. 575; 5 Railw. Cas. 542.

Where the sheriff is interested in the company as a shareholder, the objection is waived by appearing before the sheriff and jury, and allowing the inquisition to proceed and judgment to be given. Corrigall v. London and Blackwall Ry., 2 D. (N.S.) 851; 3 Railw. Cas. 411; 5 Man. & G. 219; 6 Scott (N.R.) 241; 12 L. J., C. P. 209. See Reg. v. Warwickshire (Sheriff), 3 W. R. 164.

iii. Summoning Jury.

When Notice required.] — Sect. 38 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, applies only to cases where the promoters of an undertaking are about to take or injuriously affect land in the possession of the claimant, and in such case they are bound to give the claimant ten days' notice of their intention to cause a jury to be summoned to assess compensation; but such notice is not required where the promoters have already taken possession of, or injuriously affected land, but for which no compensation has been made. Railstone v. York, Newcastle and Berwick Ry., 15 Q. B. 404; 19 L. J., Q. B. 464; 14 Jur. 1021. But see Richardson v. S. E. Ry., 11 C. B. 154.

The Lands Clauses Act, s. 38, which provides, that before the promoters of an undertaking shall issue their warrant for summoning a jury for settling questions of compensation, they shall give not less than ten days' notice to the owner of such their intention, and state therein the sum they are willing to offer for the interest in such lands, damage, &c., is not applicable to, or incorporated with s. 68, which provides for the case of lands taken or injuriously affected, and in respect of which the promoters of the undertaking have made no satisfaction to the owner. Hayward v. Metropolitan Ry., 4 B. & S. 787; 33 L. J., Q. B. 73; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 418; 9 L. T. 680; 12 W. R. 577.

Upon the construction of ss. 18, 21, 23 and 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, after a notice under s. 18 to take part of a manufactory, and a counter-notice under s. 92, it is not necessary that there should be a formal notice by the company under s. 18, before summoning a jury under s. 23; but under s. 21, the company must give a reasonable opportunity to the landowner to agree with them before causing a jury to be summoned. Schwinge v. London and Blackwall Ry., 3 Sm. & G. 30; 24 L. J., Ch. 405; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 368; 3 Eq. R. 536; 3 W. R. 260.

Held, also, that the opportunity offered by a subsequent proposal to treat for the purchase of the whole was such a reasonable notice as justified the company giving a notice of summoning a jury. Ib.

Second Notice.]—A., having given notice to a railway company that his premises had been injuriously affected by the execution of their works, and that he demanded compensation and an assessment before a jury, the company issued their warrant, and a jury was summoned, who found that the claimant was not entitled to any compensation. He thereupon obtained a rule to quash the inquisition and the verdict and judgment thereon, and gave the company a fresh notice, and the company not issuing another warrant, he brought an action:—Held, that the original warrant remaining unimpeached, the sheriff was bound to go on under it, by summoning a fresh jury, and that the company was in no default. Horrocks v. Metropolitan Ry., 19 C. B. (N.S.) 139.

—— Special Jury.]—The service of a notice of an intention to try by a special jury under s. 54, is not a waiver of a notice previously given under s. 68, so as to entitle the company to an extension of the period of twenty-one days for issuing their warrant. Glyn v. Aberdare Valley Ry., 6 C. B. (N.S.) 359; 28 L. J., C. P. 271; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1011.

Company not Precluded from Questioning Right to Recover.]—By summoning a jury to assess the amount of compensation claimed by a party under s. 68, the company is not precluded from questioning the right of the claimant to any compensation whatever. East and West India Docks Co. v. Gattke, 3 Macn. & G. 155; 6 Railw. Cas. 371; 20 L. J., Ch. 217; 15 Jur. 621.

Land how described in Precept.]—When a company empowered by parliament has given notice to an owner of land to treat for the purchase of a part of it, but the owner and the company cannot agree upon the terms, and the company, therefore, issue a precept to the sheriff to summon a jury to assess the value; the part of the land which is described in the precept as being that of which the jury are to assess the value, must be neither less nor more than that for the purchase of which the owner has already been required by the notice to treat. Stone v. Commercial Ry., 4 Myl. & C. 122; 1 Railw. Cas. 375; 3 Jur. 946.

Form of Warrant to Jury—Notice and Counter-notice.]—The Great Eastern Railway Act, 1882, contained a clause common to most railway acts of recent years, providing that, notwithstanding s. 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, the company might take a portion of the lands, buildings and manufactories in the schedule without being compelled to take the whole, "if such portion can, in the judgment of the jury, arbitrators, or other authority assessing or determining the compensation under that act, be severed from such properties without material detriment thereto." The company gave to the plaintiffs the usual notice to treat for a portion of the premises occupied by them as a confectionery manufactory. The plaintiffs gave a counter-notice requiring the company to take the whole. The company issued a warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury to determine the amount of compensation to be paid by them for the portion comprised in their original notice. The plaintiffs gave the company notice that they should raise the question whether that portion could be severed without material detriment to the property. A dispute having arisen whether in this state of things the company would be bound to take the whole if the jury decided against them on the question of severance, the plaintiffs brought an action and moved for an injunction to restrain the company from proceeding further on their warrant, unless and until they should have consented to take the whole of the property if the jury decided the portion could not be severed without material detriment:—Held, that the company could not be deprived of their right, if the jury decided against them, to abandon their notice to treat altogether, but that the warrant should have raised two issues: (1) whether the portion could be severed without serious detriment to the property; (2) if so, the amount of compensation to be paid by the company, including damage for severance. Morrison v. G. E. Ry., 53 L. T. 384.

Semble, where a valid notice has been given to take part of a house or manufactory, and on that a valid counter-notice has been given to take the whole, the notice and counter-notice will be treated as constituting one notice, for the purpose of enabling the jury to assess the value of the property forming the subject-matter of the notice and counter-notice. Pinchin v. London and Blackwall Ry., 5 De G. M. & G. 851; 24 L. J., Ch. 417; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 241; 3 Eq. R. 433; 3 W. R. 125.

—— Amount must not be ascertained by several Juries.]—Where, under 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix., notice had been served on the owners in fee of four houses requiring them to treat for the sale to the commissioners of sewers, the commissioners will not be allowed to summon a jury to assess the value of one of the houses separately. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Sewers Commissioners, 14 Ch. D. 305; 28 W. R. 824.

—— Where there are several Claimants or Different Interests.]—Under the London (City)

Improvement Acts the corporation is authorised to take certain lands, and the acts provide that every person claiming compensation shall deliver a written account of his claim, and that, in the event of the corporation and the claimant not coming to an agreement, the lord mayor shall, in every such case, issue his warrant to the sheriffs to summon a jury to assess the compensation to be paid for either the entirety of the lands taken, or any share, estate or interest therein, or charge thereon, "provided that in such inquiry the persons claiming compensation shall always be deemed to be the plaintiffs, and entitled to the same rights and privileges as plaintiffs in actions are entitled to." The lessee of two houses had granted several underleases of parts thereof, and the under-lessees had again granted inferior interests. The lord mayor issued a warrant to the sheriffs to summon a jury to assess the compensation payable to the lessee and under-lessees, who were all named together in the warrant:—Held, that each claimant of a separate interest was entitled to have his compensation assessed separately from the claims of any other claimant; and that as this could not be done on the warrant issued, the court would restrain the corporation from proceeding upon it. Abrahams v. London Corporation, 37 L. J., Ch. 732; L. R. 6 Eq. 625; 18 L. T. 811.

But where under the same acts a person has several distinct interests in one property, or in several distinct properties, taken under the powers of the act, he is not entitled to object to having the compensation for all such interests assessed by one jury and in one trial. Starr v. London Corporation, L. R. 7 Eq. 236; 20 L. T. 937.

—— In whose Names.]—By a local drainage act the lords or ladies of three manors (or, in his, her or their absence, their agents, appointed by writing under his, her or their hands for each of the manors, and which appointments may be made according to a form given in a schedule, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit) were appointed commissioners for executing the act. No person shall be capable of acting as a commissioner, or as an agent of a commissioner, until he shall have made a declaration in the words or to the effect set forth in the schedule. In case any commissioner shall act before he shall have made the declaration, he shall forfeit 50*l*. No act of the commissioners shall be valid, unless at a meeting to be holden by virtue of the act. The commissioners were empowered to take lands for the purposes of the act; and the sections for that purpose were similar to those contained in the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, subsequently passed. The three lords of the manors separately appointed the defendants their agents, not having previously made the declaration required. The defendants required to take a certain quantity of the plaintiff's land. They gave the plaintiff a notice in writing, as required by the act. The plaintiff refusing to treat, they issued a warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury to assess the sum to be paid to him for the purchase of the land. The notice and warrant were in the defendants' names as commissioners. The jury assessed the price. The plaintiff refusing to receive the price, the defendants paid it into a bank, under the authority of the act enabling them so to do, and entered on the land. In an action against them for so doing:—Held, first, that the defendants, by the appointment, were themselves commissioners under the local act; and that the notice and warrant were properly issued in their names. Ostler v. Cooke, 18 Q. B. 831; 22 L. J., Q. B. 71; 17 Jur. 370—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that the lords of the manors, in appointing the defendants to be their agents, did not act as commissioners, and therefore it was not necessary that they should have made the declaration required, and that, at any rate, the omission would not make the appointments void. Ib.

Postponement of Execution of Precept.]—A precept having, at the instance of the corporation of London, issued under an improvement act, to the recorder, as judge of the Mayor's Court, to issue his warrant to summon a jury for three days certain, to assess compensation for land required by the corporation, which the owner disputed their right to take, the recorder, after a postponement by consent until after the day named, made an order, at the instance of the owner of the land, further postponing the execution of the precept until a more distant day; prior to which the corporation applied, either for a mandamus to the recorder to execute the precept, or for a certiorari to bring up his order for postponement, for the purpose of its being quashed:—Held, first, that as the day named in the precept had passed, a certiorari was the proper remedy. Galloway v. London Corporation, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 182.

Held, secondly, that the order for postponement was bad, as the recorder's duty was to execute the precept, and he had no power to put off its execution. Ib.

Reasonable Time.]—The authorities of the city of London, seeking to take property under powers given by 10 & 11 Vict. c. cclxxx., respecting which they have given notice to treat, are bound to summon a jury within a reasonable time after they have received particulars of the claim. Nor is it any reason for refusing or delaying to do so, that the only interest in the lands sought to be taken is a residue of a few months in an unexpired term. Reg. v. London Corporation, Mathew, Ex parte, 16 L. T. 673.

Locality of Lands.]—A jury of a city awarded compensation to a landowner, in respect of the works of a railway company, by which he alleged that his land was injuriously affected. The land was divided from the railway works by a river. The land was in the city; the works were not. The mode in which the works injuriously affected the land was, that they obstructed the access to a ferry over the river, and appurtenant to the land:—Held, that as the land lay in the city, the inquisition was rightly taken there. Reg. v. G. N. Ry., 14 Q. B. 25; 6 Railw. Cas. 246; 19 L. J., Q. B. 25; 14 Jur. 128.

Claim over £50.]—A claim for compensation is properly submitted to a jury whenever the amount claimed exceeds 50*l*. Read v. Victoria and Pimlico Ry., 1 H. & C. 826; 32 L. J., Ex. 167; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1061; 11 W. R. 1032.

Words of Warrant—Damage (if any).]—By a railway act for settling differences between a company and owners of land, the company should issue a warrant commanding the sheriff to empannel a jury, which jury should "inquire of, assess and give a verdict for the sum of money to be paid, by way of satisfaction or compensation for the damages sustained" from the company's works. It also provided that no proceedings had in pursuance of the act should be quashed or vacated for want of form, or removed by certiorari. The company issued a warrant to the sheriff, commanding him to empannel a jury "for the purpose of inquiring of, assessing and giving a verdict for the sum of money (if any) to be paid to C., by way of satisfaction or compensation for the damages (if any) which shall have been done." The jury found that C. "had not sustained any damage; therefore, it was considered that no damages or sum of money be assessed":—Held, first, that the jury, even though the words "if any" had not been in the warrant, would still have been authorised to find that there was no damage; and consequently, secondly, that the words in the warrant did not vary the duty imposed upon the jury, or prevent the warrant from being in pursuance of the act; and therefore, thirdly, that the proceedings were within the jurisdiction conferred by the act, and no certiorari lay. Reg. v. Lancaster and Preston Junction Ry., 6 Q. B. 759; 3 Railw. Cas. 724; 14 L. J., Q. B. 84; 9 Jur. 303.

Partial Excess of—Certiorari.]—But where a jury awarded not only the purchase-money to be paid for land required by a railway company, and compensation for severance, but also an additional sum, which appeared to be given in respect of expense to be incurred by the landowner in building a bridge between the severed portions:—Held, that as to the last-mentioned item, there was excess of jurisdiction; because it was for the justices, under ss. 68, 69 of the Lands Clauses Act, to enforce the making of a proper communication between the severed parts of the land, at the expense of the company; and that in consequence of such partial excess of jurisdiction, a certiorari might issue, at the instance of the company, to remove the whole proceedings, although the right to a certiorari was taken away. Reg. v. South Wales Ry., 13 Q. B. 988; 6 Railw. Cas. 197; 18 L. J., Q. B. 310; 13 Jur. 1095.

Question of Title—Prohibition.]—Under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 38, for making Battersea Park, the commissioners of woods and forests gave notice to C. that they required three pieces of land described in the schedule to the act as his property and in his occupation. There being a dispute as to the amount of compensation, the commissioners issued their warrant for summoning a jury to ascertain what recompense should be made to C. for the value of the lands therein mentioned (describing them fully as in the schedule), and of the estate and interest of C. therein. By s. 27, the jury is to assess the value of the fee-simple, and then to apportion the values of the respective interests therein; and by s. 45, persons in possession are to be deemed entitled until the contrary is shown. At the trial, the claimant called several witnesses to the value of the land, who assessed it at 7,000*l.* On the part of the commissioners no witness was called, but an adverse right to part of the land was set up, as existing either in the Crown or the city of London, because it was situated between high and low water marks of the river Thames. The jury was directed to estimate not simply the value of the land taken and described in the notice and warrant, but the value of the land and of the claimant's estate and interest in it with reference to the question of his title to the part to which it was suggested he was not entitled. The jury, under these circumstances, gave their verdict for 750*l.*, which was the proved value of the residue only of the land:—Held, that the duty of the jury was only to estimate the value of the property taken, and the estate and interest if it appeared to be divided among several persons, and that they had no power to decide whether the title was in the claimant; and a prohibition to restrain the recording of the verdict was granted. Chabot v. Morpeth (Lord), 15 Q. B. 446; 17 L. J., Q. B. 336; 12 Jur. 1023.

Sect. 79 of the Lands Clauses Act contains only a direction to the Court of Chancery, and is not intended to guide a jury upon the trial of an issue. Sunderland Freemen and Stallingers, Ex parte, 1 Drew. 184; 16 Jur. 370.

House within Fifty Feet of Railway.]—By a railway act it was enacted, that if any house which shall be situated within fifty feet from the railway shall be deteriorated in value, and the owner shall require the company to purchase the same, it shall be lawful for them to treat for such purpose or for the amount of compensation to be paid for damage, and, in case of disagreement, the amount of compensation to be settled by a jury, provided that no party shall be entitled to receive compensation unless the jury shall determine that the property has been deteriorated. A house, of which a very large proportion was within fifty feet of the railway, was required by the company. The owner of the house sent a precept to the sheriff, under the provisions of one of the company's acts, describing his house as within fifty feet of the railway, and requiring him to summon a jury to determine whether his house was deteriorated and whether he was entitled to have compensation made, and, if so, then to assess the amount. The sheriff summoned a jury accordingly, and on its appearing that part of the house was beyond the fifty feet, refused to hear further evidence, and directed the jury to find that the claimant was not entitled to compensation:—Held, although the precept seemed to refer to the jury the question whether the house was within the fifty feet, and the jury had no jurisdiction to determine anything but the question of deterioration and the amount of compensation, that, notwithstanding the question so improperly raised by the precept, the claimant was entitled to a mandamus directing the sheriff to execute the precept, so far as it was properly conceived. Walker v. London and Blackwall Ry., 3 Q. B. 744; 3 G. & D. 549; 3 Railw. Cas. 396; 12 L. J., Q. B. 88; 7 Jur. 323.

Inquiry as to Legal Rights.]—A jury summoned to assess the compensation due to a claimant for lands injuriously affected by the works of a public company, has no jurisdiction to inquire into the legal rights of the claimant. The only question the jury has to determine is whether the lands have been injuriously affected; their jurisdiction is limited to assessing the amount of compensation. Horrocks v. Metropolitan Ry., 4 B. & S. 315; 32 L. J., Q. B. 367; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 204; 8 L. T. 663; 11 W. R. 910. S. P., Reg. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 3 El. & Bl. 443; 23 L. J., Q. B. 185; 18 Jur. 993.

A jury has no jurisdiction to try whether the claimant is entitled to the interest he claims, but only to assess the value of the interest claimed. Brandon v. Brandon, 2 Dr. & Sm. 305; 34 L. J., Ch. 333; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 30; 11 L. T. 658; 13 W. R. 251.

A jury cannot determine what interest a claimant has, but can only determine the value of the interest he claims. Cooper, Ex parte, North London Ry., In re, 2 Drew. & Sm. 312; 34 L. J., Ch. 373; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 103; 11 L. T. 661; 13 W. R. 364.

Construction of Act.]—The jury have jurisdiction to construe the act upon the point whether the claim made is within its provisions. East and West India Docks v. Gattke, 3 Mac. & G. 155; 6 Railw. Cas. 371; 20 L. J., Ch. 217; 15 Jur. 261.

Directing Works.]—An act directed a compensation jury to assess the sum to be paid for the lands, or the recompense to be made for damages or losses sustained by cutting lands, &c.; a jury having found that 56*l.* was the proper sum to be paid for the land to be purchased, and for the recompense to the owner for the damage he might sustain, also directed the trustees to erect a hedge on the owner's land at their own expense:—Held, that, as it did not appear that less compensation-money was awarded on that account, the inquisition was not void. Reg. v. South Holland Drainage Trustees, 1 P. & D. 79; 8 A. & E. 429; 8 L. J., Q. B. 64.

Where taking temporary.] — The 43 Geo. 3, c. 55, s. 10, enabled a jury to assess compensation to the owner or person interested in land, which was taken possession of by government; which compensation was to be made "for the possession or use thereof," during the time for which the same should be required for the public service:—Held, that the assessment of a compensation only in gross, and without reference to time, as by an annual rent, was bad, because of the uncertainty of the period for which the land would be required, of which no probable average estimate could be formed pending the exigency. Bingham v. Serle, 5 East, 534; 2 Smith, 129.

Parties—Mortgagees—Mortgaged Property.]—Mortgagees of lands, compulsorily taken by a railway company, are entitled to be parties to an assessment of the value, and an inquiry before a jury, taken as between the company and the mortgagors (who were in occupation), will not bind the mortgagees. Martin v. L. C. & D. Ry., 35 L. J., Ch. 795; L. R. 1 Ch. 501; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 775; 13 L. T. 355; 14 W. R. 24.

v. Verdict.

Not Conclusive as to Right to Recover.]—In an action on a verdict and judgment obtained in an inquisition before a sheriff's jury, the inquisition is not conclusive evidence that the claimant is entitled to compensation. Chapman v. Monmouthshire Ry. and Canal Co., 2 H. & N. 267; 27 L. J., Ex. 97.

After compensation awarded by a jury, the party against whom such compensation has been adjudged, may, nevertheless, in an action against him for the amount and costs, plead that the lands in respect of which the compensation was allotted were not injuriously affected. Read v. Victoria and Pimlico Ry., 1 H. & C. 826; 32 L. J., Ex. 167; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1061; 11 W. R. 1032.

By a canal act, commissioners were appointed for carrying out the purposes of the act, who were directed, in case of a dispute between them and the proprietors of land adjoining the canal, concerning the amount of compensation to be paid to the latter for damages sustained by the execution of the powers of the act to take measures for summoning a jury, for whose verdict as to the amount of compensation they should give judgment. It was then declared that the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the commissioners should be binding and conclusive to all intents and purposes:—Held, that the verdict of the jury was conclusive only as to the amount, and not as to the right of the claimant to compensation, which might be elsewhere contested. Barber v. Nottingham and Grantham Ry., 15 C. B. (N.S.) 726; 33 L. J., C. P. 193; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 260; 9 L. T. 829; 12 W. R. 376.

Conclusive as to Amount.] — A declaration stated that the plaintiff was possessed of a tanyard and premises, and that the same had been injuriously affected by the execution of works authorised by an act of a railway company, and set out the warrant to the sheriff and the inquisition before him, under s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and that the jury settled the amount of the compensation, and the sheriff gave judgment thereupon. Pleas, that the tanyard and premises were not injuriously affected, that the plaintiff was not entitled to compensation; and that the claim made by the plaintiff was in respect of the interruption of the flow of water, and that he was not entitled, as of right, to the flow and use of the water as claimed by him. After verdict for him:—Held, that the tanyard and premises having been injuriously affected to some extent, the company could not dispute the amount of compensation awarded by the jury, and therefore the pleas were bad. Mortimer v. South Wales Ry., 1 El. & El. 375; 28 L. J., Q. B. 129; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 784; 7 W. R. 292. And see preceding case.

Separate Assessments.]—In an action by the plaintiff to recover the amount assessed by a jury for the purchase of a house required by the company, and for compensation, the declaration, after stating all the necessary facts preceding the holding of the inquisition, to entitle the plaintiff to the amount, alleged that the jury found that the plaintiff's house was deteriorated in value by the construction of the railway, and gave a verdict for 250*l.* to be paid for the purchase of his interest, and also by way of compensation for damage, but that the company had refused to pay this sum. Plea, that at the inquisition the plaintiff adduced evidence not only of damage in respect of goodwill, but also in respect of damage to the dwelling-house, by reason of the construction of the railway, and that the verdict proceeded in respect of both classes of damage, whereby the inquisition was void:—Held, that the mere fact of the reception of evidence in respect, first, of the purchase of the house; secondly, of damage to the goodwill; and, thirdly, of damage by reason of the construction of the railway, did not vitiate the verdict, because such evidence of damage by the construction of the railway might have been given to show the deterioration of the house which was necessary to give jurisdiction to the sheriff and jury. Corrigall v. London and Blackwall Ry., 3 Railw. Cas. 411; 5 Man. & G. 219; 6 Scott (N.R.) 241; 2 D. (N.S.) 851; 12 L. J., C. P. 209.

Held, also that the statute was directory only, in requiring a separate assessment of damage in respect of the value and of loss sustained, and not compulsory; and that the general finding of the jury was therefore good. Ib.

A dock act provided, "that if the dock company cannot agree with any party for the purchase of lands, a jury shall be summoned who shall deliver their verdict for the sum of money to be paid for the purchase of the lands required; and also the sum of money to be paid for the injury done to the lands of such party by the severance of such lands from the lands required; and also the sum of money to be paid by way of compensation for the damage occasioned to any such lands by the execution of the works, whether for damage sustained before the inquiry or for future damage, either temporary or permanent; the sums of money to be paid for the injury done by severance, or by way of compensation for any such damage, to be assessed separately from the value of the lands." A jury assessed compensation as follows:—"400*l.* for the purchase of J.'s interest in his brewhouse (the lands required); 300*l.* as a compensation for the damage which he will sustain by reason of his having to give up his premises as a brewer until he can obtain suitable premises in which to carry on his trade as a brewer":—Held, that the latter part of the finding of the jury was warranted by the authority given them to award the sum to be paid by way of compensation for the damage occasioned to any lands by the execution of the works. Jubb or Reg. v. Hull Dock Co., 9 Q. Where an assessment of compensation had been made to a claimant under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. xlvi. (Greenwich Railway Act), in one entire sum, and he was possessed of a leasehold interest as well as other subjects of compensation, the court refused an application on behalf of the company for another assessment to be made, on the ground that as the value of the leasehold property was not assessed separately according to the act, it could not be known what would be the proper ad valorem stamp duty to be affixed to the deed of assignment; the court saying that the difficulty would be obviated by putting on the deed a stamp applicable to the whole sum assessed, and reciting all the circumstances of the case. London and Greenwich Ry., In re, 2 A. & E. 678; 4 N. & M. 458; 1 H. & W. 81; 4 L. Where a verdict was for "severance and level crossing," but without distinguishing how much was for severance and how much for level crossing, it being impossible to reduce the verdict quoad the level crossing alone, it was set aside in toto. Caledonian Ry. v. Ogilvy, 2 Macq. H. L. 229.

Lands not specifically Described.]—Commissioners were empowered by a local drainage act to take lands for the purposes of the act, and the sections for this purpose were similar to those contained in the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. The commissioners required three acres, one rood, twenty-five perches of the plaintiff's land. They gave him notice in writing, describing by metes and bounds the specific acres, roods and perches, and containing the particulars required by the act. The plaintiff refusing to treat, they issued a warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury to assess the sum to be paid to him for the purchase, but the warrant did not recite or refer to the notice, and did not describe what three acres, one rood, twenty-five perches were required. The plaintiff had two hundred acres of land in the district of the commissioners. A jury assessed the price of the three acres, one rood, twenty-five perches pointed out to them, which were in fact the same land described in the notice. The inquisition recited the warrant but not the notice, and did not show specifically in respect of which three acres, one rood, twenty-five perches of the plaintiff's land the price was assessed. The plaintiff refusing to receive the price, the commissioners paid it into a bank as the act required, and entered on the land. In an action against them for so doing:—Held, that the inquisition was not void because it did not show specifically in respect of which three acres, one rood, twenty-five perches of the plaintiff's land the price was assessed; and it was sufficient that in fact the land decribed in it was the same as that shown to the jury. Ostler v. Cooke, 18 Q. B. 831; 22 L. J., Q. B. 71; 17 Jur. 370—Ex. Ch.

Several Owners.]—Where a jury is empannelled under the General Turnpike Act (3 Geo. 4, c. 126) to assess the value of the land taken by the trustees belonging to B., C., D. and E. respectively, who are separately interested as lessees, the jury must find, and the inquisition must specify, the sum to which each is entitled. Rex v. Norwich and Watton Road Trustees, 1 N. & P. 32; 5 A. & E. 563; 2 H. & W. 385; 6 L. J., K. B. 41.

Damage awarded contingently.]—Where a jury returned a verdict upon a claim for compensation in respect of an obstruction of a right of way, negativing the evidence of the right, and therefore finding that the claimant had sustained no damage, but awarded contingently 150*l.* for compensation in case they were compelled to assume that the claimant was entitled to the right of way:—Held, that the prior part of the finding could not be rejected as surplusage, so as to make it a verdict for 150*l.* Reg. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 3 El. & Bl. 443; 23 L. J., Q. B. 185; 18 Jur. 993.

What must be Stated—Subscription of Capital.]—The Bristol and Exeter Railway Act (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. xxvi.), s. 25, enabled the company, in case any person whose lands should be required for the purpose of the act, should, for twenty-one days after notice in writing given to him, neglect or refuse to treat, or should not agree with the company for the sale of his interest, to issue a warrant under their common seal, or under the hands of three, at least, of the directors, to the sheriff of the county in which the lands should be, commanding him to summon and return a jury, who shall inquire of, assess, and give the amount of money to be paid for the purchase of such lands, and for compensation for damages thereto; and that the sheriff should accordingly give judgment for such purchase-money, which should be binding and conclusive upon all persons, fourteen days' notice being given of the time and place of the inquiry. A subsequent clause enacted, that the whole of the sum therein mentioned as the probable expenses of making the railway, should be subscribed for before any of the powers given by the act, in relation to the compulsory taking of land for the purpose of the railway, should be put in force. An inquisition recited, that notice had been given to the party that his lands were required by the company for the purposes of the act, and that he had not, within twenty-one days afterwards, agreed with the company for the sale of them; and also, that fourteen days' notice had been given of the time and place of the inquiry before the sheriff:—Held, in ejectment by this party against the company for these lands, subsequently taken by them under the act, that the inquisition was sufficient in form, and that it need not set forth that the whole capital had been subscribed; and that, if this was the fact it should come by way of answer from the plaintiff. Doe d. Payne v. Bristol and Exeter Ry., 6 M. & W. 320; 9 L. J., Ex. 232.

—— Refusal to Treat.]—By a local act, trustees were authorised to take lands for the improvement of a harbour, and in case of disagreement with the landowner as to the price to be paid him, or of his refusal to treat, to direct a sheriff to summon a jury, by whom the price was to be assessed. If the jury gave a greater sum than that offered by the trustees, or the same sum, they were to pay all the costs; if a less sum, the costs to be paid equally by both parties; and in the former event to be recovered by a distress warrant from a magistrate:—Held, that it belonged to the trustees to have the inquisition properly drawn up, and that therefore they could not object to the sum awarded by it, or have it brought up by certiorari to quash it, on the ground that it did not state the disagreement, or the refusal to treat, so as to show that the jury had jurisdiction, and that it did not state the proportion of the sum assessed to the sum offered, so as to ascertain which party was to pay the costs. Reg. v. Swansea Harbour Trustees, 1 P. & D. 512; 8 A. & E. 439; 8 L. J., Q. B. 69.

—— And Service of Notice.]—An act authorised a railway company to take lands necessary for the works, on payment or tender of such sums of money as should have been agreed upon, or awarded by a jury, and enacted that, if any such person should not agree with the company as to the amount of purchase-money, or should refuse to accept such purchase-money as should be offered by the company, or should, for twenty-one days after notice to him in writing, neglect or refuse to treat, or should not agree with the company for the sale of his interest, the company might issue a warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury to assess the sum to be paid for the purchase of the lands, and the sheriff should give judgment for such sum. The company issued a warrant purporting to be pursuant to the powers given by the act, and requiring the sheriff to summon a jury to assess the value of an owner's land. The jury was summoned, and assessed the value: the owner of the land attending, and protesting that the company had no right to take his lands, as not being described in the schedule to the act. An inquisition was recorded, purporting to be taken, "pursuant to the act, on the oaths of jurors duly empannelled," in pursuance of the warrant to the inquisition annexed, who assessed the sum to be paid for the property particularised in the warrant, and authorised by the act to be taken for the railway; whereupon the sheriff, in pursuance of the act, gave judgment for that sum. Neither the warrant nor inquisition stated that the owner had refused to treat, or had not agreed with the company, for the sale of his land, nor that the company had served on him the notice required by the act to be given; but it appeared aliunde that he did not agree with the company, and that he had received the requisite notices:—Held, first, that sufficient facts were stated in the inquisition and warrant to show the jurisdiction of the sheriff and jury. Taylor v. Clemson, 11 Cl. & F. 610; 8 Jur. 833. Affirming 3 Railw. Cas. 65; 2 G. & D. 346; 2 Q. B. 978; 11 L. J., Ex. 447—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that the empannelling a jury, and an assessment by them, being facts inconsistent with an agreement, necessarily implied non-agreement; and no inquisition is defective for not stating a fact that is necessarily implied by those that are stated. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that notice was waived by the parties appearing not protesting for want of notice. Ib.

Verdict by Consent.]—When a jury is summoned to ascertain the value of an interest claimed, and it is agreed by counsel that a verdict shall be taken for a fixed sum, that only represents the sum claimed without reference to the right to the interest, and such sum includes damage for severance, loss of trade, &c. Hayne, In re, 12 L. T. 200; 13 W. R. 492.

Interest Payable.]—The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 85, makes 5*l.* per cent. interest payable on a sum recovered, under s. 68, for neglecting to issue a warrant to the sheriff within twenty-one days after notice that the proprietor wishes to have the question of compensation settled by a jury. Aberdare Ry., In re, 8 W. R. 603.

A sheriff's jury, in awarding compensation to a landowner against a railway company in 1864, found that so far back as 1852 he was entitled to 5,272*l.*, saying nothing as to interest. The order of the court below, adding to the principal twelve years' interest, was reversed. Caledonian Ry. v. Carmichael, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 56.

vi. Setting aside Verdict.

Tribunal not qualified.]—The court will not set aside a verdict on an inquisition to determine the compensation for land taken on the ground that some of the jurymen were not qualified to act as jurors, the remedy in such case being by challenge. Chelsea Waterworks Co., In re, 10 Ex. 731; 3 C. L. R. 329; 24 L. J., Ex. 79; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 143; 3 W. R. 174.

When the parties in a claim for compensation for lands appear and take the verdict of a jury, and at the time make no objection to the supposed defect in the constitution of the tribunal, though they had full knowledge of it, the court will not grant a certiorari to bring up the inquisition, in order that the same may be quashed on the ground of such defect, but will leave the parties objecting to take advantage of it in some other proceeding. Emanuel Hospital v. Metropolitan District Ry., 19 L. T. 692.

Length of Notice—Waiver.]—Where a compensation jury can only be empannelled after forty days' notice in writing to the party interested, it is not competent to him, after expressly waiving his right to notice, to apply to quash the inquisition, on the ground of its not setting out such notice, or the waiver of it. Reg. v. South Holland Drainage Trustees, 1 P. & D. 79; 8 A. & E. 429; 8 L. J., Q. B. 64.

Error apparent — Excess of Jurisdiction — Misdirection.]—The court will not grant a certiorari to remove an inquisition to assess the value of land compulsorily taken, unless for error apparent on the face of the inquisition, or for clear excess of jurisdiction. Misdirection of the judge, or a verdict against evidence, is not sufficient. Reg. v. Halifax Local Board, 14 L. T. 447.

When a jury has taken into consideration, in awarding compensation, one claim, among others, as to which the jury had no jurisdiction, a certiorari lies, although such excess of jurisdiction does not appear upon the face of the proceedings, and such excess of jurisdiction may be shown upon affidavit. Penny v. S. E. Ry., 7 El. & Bl. 660 ; 26 L. J., Q. B. 225 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 957 ; 5 W. R. 612.

Under the Railway and Lands Clauses Acts, where the sheriff and jury in awarding damages go beyond their authority, the power of setting matters right is not excluded. Caledonian Ry. v. Ogilvy, 2 Macq. H. L. 229.

Money spent bonâ fide on land is not conclusive evidence as to the value of the land ; it is only evidence to be taken into consideration in ascertaining the value, and may be regarded or disregarded when the land is taken compulsorily. At the hearing of an inquisition held for the purposes of ascertaining and determining the value of the land taken under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the high bailiff used somewhat loose language, which might lead one to infer that he told the jury to disregard the amount spent bonâ fide by the claimants on the land and premises in question :—Held, that the fact was not sufficient in itself to entitle the claimants to a writ of certiorari to bring up the inquisition that it may be quashed, inasmuch as the jury had had all the facts before them, and had had an opportunity of viewing the land, before giving their verdict. Streatham Estates Co. v. Public Works Commissioners, 52 J. P. 615.

The court will not grant a rule for a second precept for summoning a jury to assess compensation for damages sustained by an occupier of lands by reason of the carrying into execution of a railway act, where another inquisition had been already taken, the verdict and judgment on which were rendered conclusive, and where the certiorari was taken away, even though it was sworn that evidence had been improperly rejected. and that the amount of compensation allowed by the first inquisition was greatly inadequate. Reg. v. Eastern Counties Ry., 2 D. (N.S.) 945 ; 3 Railw. Cas. 466 ; 12 L. J., Q. B. 271 ; 7 Jur. 628.

Against Weight of Evidence.]—Where in an action for compensation in respect of land compulsorily taken for public purposes the jury, after hearing the conflicting evidence of experts as to the existence of payable coal thereunder, assessed damages in respect thereof :—Held. that their verdict, being one which a jury could reasonably find, could not be set aside as against the weight of evidence. Brown v. Railways Commissioner, 59 L. J., P. C. 62 ; 15 App. Cas. 240 ; 62 L. T. 469—P. C.

There is no rule which imposes upon a plaintiff, in order to sustain such verdict, the burden of proving by costly experiments the mineral contents of his land ; nor does it follow that because a seam of coal is not presently workable at a profit no compensation is to be given for it if it is likely to prove profitable in the future. Ib.

Delay in Applying.] — Application having been made to the High Court of Justice for a writ of certiorari, to bring up and quash the proceedings upon an inquisition before the sheriff as to the amount of compensation to be awarded to a claimant under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, on the ground that the jury in assessing the compensation had taken into consideration matters which were not legally the subject of compensation ; it was proved that the applicants for the writ had allowed five months to expire without taking any objection to the proceedings :—Held, that as the time allowed for setting aside an award made under the provisions of the above-mentioned act had expired before the application was made, the writ of certiorari ought not to be granted. Reg. v. Sheward or Steward, 49 L. J., Q. B. 716 ; 9 Q. B. D. 741—C. A. Affirming 42 L. T. 363 ; 28 W. R. 506.

vii. Recording Verdict.

Effect of.]—Where a provision similar to s. 50 was introduced into a railway act passed before the Lands Clauses Act, under which the verdict of a compensation jury had never been recorded :—Held, that parol evidence might be given of their finding, and of the grounds on which it proceeded. Manning v. Eastern Counties Ry., 12 M. & W. 237 ; 3 Railw. Cas. 637 ; 13 L. J., Ex. 265.

By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 38, authorising the commissioners of woods and forests to form a park at Battersea-fields, they are empowered to take lands for that purpose, and in case of disagreement with the landowner, the value is to be assessed by a jury. By s. 23, after the jury has ascertained the amount, the sheriff shall thereupon order the sum to be paid by the commissioners to the landowner, the verdict or inquisition and order to be final, binding and conclusive. By s. 30, the judgments and verdicts are to be entered in the office of land revenue records and enrolments, and to be afterwards deposited with the clerk of the peace, and to be deemed records. A declaration in prohibition alleged that upon an inquisition taken before the sheriff on a disagreement between plaintiff and the commissioners as to the price to be paid to him for land required, the sheriff had directed the jury to exclude from their valuation all of the land to which the plaintiff's title could be impeached, and had thereby misdirected them as to the proper mode of estimating the amount to be paid ; that the jury gave a verdict for an amount mentioned, and the sheriff gave judgment, and ordered payment of that amount to the plaintiff ; that the commissioners and sheriff were proceeding to enter and record the verdict and judgment, and to use, act upon and make them available ; and the declaration then prayed that the sheriff and commissioners might be prohibited from entering and recording the verdict and judgment, and from further proceeding for the purpose of using. acting upon, or otherwise making them available :—Held, that the declaration was bad, that no excess of jurisdiction was shown, that the verdict and judgment were binding and conclusive, and that the recording them was not a condition precedent to their validity ; that the sheriff, after ordering payment of the sum assessed, was functus officio, and that the payment of the money into the Bank of England was an act belonging to the executive government, and not the subject of prohibition. Chabot v. Morpeth (Lord), 15 Q. B. 446 ; 17 L. J., Q. B. 336 ; 12 Jur. 1023.

Where a company is authorised to purchase land for the purposes of the act, which directs that, in case of differences with the landowners, a compensation jury shall be empannelled, and that the verdict shall be made a record of quarter sessions; if the company takes possession after payment of the sum assessed, no conveyance is necessary, the record of quarter sessions being available as a title. Bruce v. Wilkes, 3 P. & D. 220; 11 A. & E. 463; 9 L. J., M. C. 43.

Solicitors and Surveyors.]—A railway act provided for summoning a jury to assess compensation in case of disagreement respecting the purchase of land, and that the party claiming compensation should be the plaintiff, and have all such rights and privileges as plaintiffs in actions are entitled to:—Held, that a claimant was not entitled to the costs of the attorney's letters and attendances, nor to the expenses of plans, &c., paid to surveyors not called as witnesses. Reg. v. Warwickshire (Sheriff), 2 Railw. Cas. 661.

A company for effecting improvements in a town was empowered by statute to take lands, upon giving notice and making compensation, the amount of which compensation, if not agreed upon, was to be ascertained by a jury; and it was provided that in case the jury should assess the damages at more than was offered, the company should pay "the costs of the notices and precepts, and costs of summoning the jury and witnesses, and also of the inquest":—Held, that a party whose property was assessed at more than the sum offered was entitled to his general costs attending the trial, but not to the expenses of surveying. Rex v. York JJ., 3 N. & M. 685; 1 A. & E. 828.

Where no Direction as to.]—A private act gave compensation to the owners of land over which a water company laid their works, and also gave them the costs of assessing the compensation by a jury; by a subsequent clause compensation was given to other persons sustaining damage by the works of the company, but nothing was said as to the costs incident to the jury:—Held, that a person who had had compensation assessed by a jury under the latter clause was not entitled to those costs. Turner, Ex parte, 1 W. W. & H. 305.

Where a local act was silent as to the costs of holding an inquisition for the purpose of assessing compensation against a railway company for taking land:—Held, that the claimant was not entitled to recover them. Corrigall v. London and Blackwall Ry., 5 Man. & G. 219; 3 Railw. Cas. 411; 12 L. J., C. P. 209.

Of Trial.]—Where a railway act authorised the company to take lands of individuals, making compensation for the same, and enacted, that if disputes should arise as to the price, the value was to be settled by a jury; and in case the jury should give a greater sum than had been offered by the company, "all the costs of summoning the jury and the expenses of witnesses," were to be defrayed by the company; but if the jury should give the same or less sum than had been offered, one moiety of the costs and expenses was to be defrayed by the party to whom the lands belonged: and a subsequent clause enacted, that the party with whom the company should have any dispute, should enter into a bond to pay his "proportion of the costs and expenses of summoning and returning such jury, and taking such verdict, and of the summoning and attendances of witnesses," in case any part of such costs should fall upon him:—Held, that the words, "the costs of taking such verdict," did not mean the costs of trial; and that the fees of counsel, and the costs of the attorney respecting the preparing for and attendance at the trial, were properly disallowed. Rex v. Gardner, 1 N. & P. 308; 6 A. & E. 112; W. W. & D. 7; 6 L. J., K. B. 130; 1 Jur. 181.

—— Of Useless or Abortive Proceedings.]—Land was taken by a railway company. The company, wishing to take possession, paid a sum of money into the bank under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 85, and proceedings were taken to summon a jury. An agreement was then come to, fixing the price for the land, and the company agreed to pay all such costs, charges and expenses as they were liable to pay under the Lands Clauses Act, or otherwise:—Held, that they were liable to pay the costs of the vendors in the proceedings to summon a jury. Morris, Ex parte, 40 L. J., Ch. 543; L. R. 12 Eq. 418; 25 L. T. 20; 19 W. R. 943.

An inquisition for assessing compensation under the Lands Clauses Act was removed by certiorari into the queen's bench division, and there quashed, on the ground that the under-sheriff had misdirected the jury. A further inquiry was then held on the same warrant by the sheriff, and compensation was duly awarded to the claimants by the jury:—Held, that the claimants were entitled as well to the costs of and incidental to the abortive inquiry, as to the costs of and incidental to the inquisition which resulted in a good verdict. Reg. v. North London Ry., 51 L. J., Q. B. 241; 30 W. R. 272.

—— Mistake of Sheriff.]—A jury having been summoned by the sheriff at the instance of a party who claimed compensation for an alleged injury to his premises, the sheriff was of opinion that the claim was not warranted by the act, and dismissed the jury. A mandamus was subsequently made absolute, commanding the sheriff to summon another jury, on the ground that his decision was wrong:—Held, that, the mistake being in the sheriff, the party was not entitled to costs against the company. Walker v. London and Blackwall Ry., 7 Jur. 1154.

—— National Defence Act.]—A person whose land has been valued by a jury, and sold under the National Defence Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 94), is not entitled to the expenses and costs which he has necessarily incurred in bringing the matter to trial. Laws, In re, 1 Ex. 441; 4 D. & L. 688; 17 L. J., Ex. 126.

Previous Offer—Time for.]—In a claim for compensation, the parties to the undertaking must make an offer ten days previously to trial, in order to save half the costs, in the event of the jury giving a less sum than they offered. Metropolitan Ry. v. Turnham, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 212; 32 L. J., M. C. 249; 8 L. T. 280; 11 W. R. 695.

When lands are taken for, or injuriously affected by the execution of the works of a company, and the party claiming compensation desires to have the amount settled by a jury, the costs of the inquiry are regulated by s. 51 of the Lands Clauses Act, and the offer of the company may be made when notice of the time and of the place of holding the inquiry is given by them to the party under s. 46, that is, ten days before the inquiry. Hayward v. Metropolitan Ry., 4 B. & S. 787 ; 33 L. J., Q. B. 73 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 418 ; 9 L. T. 680 ; 12 W. R. 577.

Where, on an inquiry held before the sheriff and a jury, the promoters have offered the same or a less sum than that which the jury awards, unless that offer has been made before the issue of the warrant for summoning a jury, the promoters are not entitled to any costs of the inquiry. Pearson v. G. N. Ry., 18 W. R. 259. See also infra, col. 1581.

—— Unconditional.]—An offer of compensation in respect of lands injuriously affected by the execution of works, must be an unconditional offer of compensation for the injury done, and is bad if it is an offer of a lump sum for compensation and costs. Balls v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 35 L. J., Q. B. 101 ; L. R. 1 Q. B. 337 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 183 ; 13 L. T. 702 ; 14 W. R. 370.

—— Separate Sums.]—The promoters may offer separate sums for compensation in respect of property injuriously affected, and for damage to business. Hayward v. Metropolitan Ry., 4 B. & S. 787 ; 33 L. J., Q. B. 73 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 418 ; 9 L. T. 680 ; 12 W. R. 577.

—— Amendment.]—On the 10th of June, H. gave notice to a railway company, claiming compensation for structural damage, and also for loss of business occasioned by the carrying on of the company's works. On the 30th of June the company offered 70*l.* for structural damage and 30*l.* for loss of business. On the same day, this offer being refused, they issued their warrant to summon a jury. On the 2nd of July they made a second offer, viz., 100*l.* for structural damage and 50*l.* for loss of business. This also was declined, and the inquisition was held, and the jury gave 50*l.* for structural damage, and 100*l.* for loss of business :—Held, that the company were not bound by their first offer, but might make an amended offer of a larger amount : and that the jury having given the same sum as the amount of the amended offer, the claimant was not entitled to costs. Ib.

By s. 38 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, promoters, before issuing their warrant for causing a jury to be summoned in cases of disputed compensation, shall give not less than ten days' notice of their intention to summon a jury to the other party, and in such notice shall state what sum of money they are willing to give for the interest in the lands sought to be purchased from him, and for the damage to be sustained by him by the execution of the works ; and by s. 51, on every such inquiry before a jury where the verdict of the jury shall be given for a greater sum "than the sum previously offered" by the promoters, all the costs of the inquiry shall be borne by the promoters, but if the verdict be given for a less sum, the costs shall be borne equally between the parties in the manner specified in that section. In a proceeding to take and purchase the claimant's lands under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the promoters, on the 9th of March, gave him the notice required by s. 38, and stated that they were willing to give him 600*l.* as and for purchase-money and compensation. On the 19th of March the promoters served a second notice upon the claimant that they were willing, and thereby offered to pay 900*l.* as purchase-money and compensation. This notice did not refer to the previous one. Neither offer was accepted by the claimant, and on the 29th of March the promoters issued their warrant for causing a jury to be summoned, who assessed the sum to which the claimant was entitled at 750*l.* :—Held, first, that in cases to which s. 38 was applicable, the words "the sum previously offered" in s. 51 applied only to an offer made under s. 38 ; secondly, that the promoters were not entitled to rely upon their second offer of 900*l.* as an offer made under s. 38, and that the costs of the inquiry must, therefore, be borne by them. Reg. v. Manley Smith, 53 L. J., Q. B. 115 ; 12 Q. B. D. 481 ; 32 W. R. 275.

—— Withdrawal of Offer—Acquiescence by Claimants.] — A notice to treat having been given with reference to the purchase of land for the purposes of street improvements in Sheffield, of which the corporation were the promoters, an offer, which exceeded the amount ultimately awarded by arbitration under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, was made by the town-clerk on the instructions of some of the members of the improvement sub-committee of the corporation. The offer was rejected, and on the day on which the umpire in the arbitration signified his acceptance of the post it was withdrawn in writing by the town-clerk before it had been brought to the attention of the corporation ; the withdrawal was acquiesced in by the owners of the property :—Held, that the owners were entitled to recover their costs of the arbitration from the corporation under s. 34 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Foster v. Sheffield Corporation, 14 R. 450 ; 72 L. T. 549 ; 59 J. P. 404—C. A.

—— Larger Sum Recovered.]—The costs of any "such inquiry" in s. 32, refer to the inquiry spoken of in the earlier part of s. 51, namely, where the landowner recovers more than the sum offered by the company. Bray v. S. E. Ry., 7 D. & L. 307 ; 19 L. J., Q. B. 11.

In an action under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 68, to recover compensation in respect of lands damaged or injuriously affected by the execution of the works of a company, the declaration stated that the plaintiff claimed 1,000*l.*, that the company had notice of his claim and offered him 60*l.*, and that a jury awarded him 215*l.* :—Held, that he was entitled to the costs of the inquiry before the sheriff, s. 51, which provides for such costs, being virtually incorporated in s. 68. S. E. Ry. v. Richardson, 15 C. B. 810 ; 21 L. J., C. P. 122 ; 16 Jur. 151—Ex. Ch.

—— Section 38 or 68.]—In a proceeding to purchase under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, certain lands belonging to the claimant which were required by the promoters of a public undertaking, notice was given by the latter to the claimant to treat for the purchase thereof, and negotiations were entered into. Subsequently the promoters gave notice of entering under s. 85, and in accordance with the requirements thereof made a deposit and gave a bond, but did not actually enter on the lands. The claimant refused to refer the question of compensation to arbitration, and required the promoters to give notice within "ten" days.

for the summoning of a jury. An offer was then made by the promoters of a certain sum as compensation, which was declined by the claimant. This offer was not included in the notice of the inquiry as provided in s. 38. The promoters then issued their warrant for summoning a jury, and gave the claimant notice under s. 46 of the inquiry which was subsequently held, and resulted in the compensation being assessed at a less sum than that previously offered:—Held, that the lands had not "been taken" under s. 85; that, as the promoters, notwithstanding they had made a deposit and given a bond, had not actually entered upon the lands, the proceedings were governed by s. 38 and not by s. 68, and that the claimant was entitled to have his costs taxed. Reg. v. Manley Smith, 67 L. T. 197; 40 W. R. 333; 56 J. P. 729.

No Offer — No Liability.]—Where the promoters have made no offer and are not liable at all for the claim made, the owner of land has no claim to the costs of an inquisition. Todd v. Metropolitan Ry., 24 L. T. 435; 19 W. R. 720.

Reviewing Taxation.] — A waterworks act provided for the costs, payable in respect of claims under the act, being taxed and settled by a master of a superior court of law at Westminster, on the principles and according to the rules and on payment of the fees observed and paid on the taxation and settlement of costs in actions. The court refused to review the taxation of these costs by one of its masters, on the ground that the costs were in no sense given by an award of the court, and that the master did not tax the costs in his capacity of officer of the court, but merely as one of a class of persons named in the act of parliament. Wraithby, In re, 4 H. & C. 74; 35 L. J., Ex. 60; L. R. 1 Ex. 54; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 954; 13 L. T. 440.

When costs of an inquiry before the sheriff are "settled by one of the masters of the court of queen's bench," under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 52, the court has no jurisdiction over the taxation on a motion to review. Owen v. L. & N. W. Ry., 7 B. & S. 758; 37 L. J., Q. B. 35; L. R. 3 Q. B. 54; 17 L. T. 210; 16 W. R. 125. S. P., Ross v. York, Newcastle and Berwick Ry., 5 D. & L. 695; 5 Railw. Cas. 516; 18 L. J., Q. B. 199. And see next case.

Enforcing Payment.] — If an inquiry into the compensation due to a claimant for land injuriously affected by a railway company takes place before a jury, and the costs are settled by one of the masters of the queen's bench, the decision of the master, if subject to be reviewed at all, is only subject to the review of that court; and the magistrate, upon an application for a distress-warrant to levy the costs, is bound to consider the decision of the master as final. Metropolitan Ry. v. Turnham, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 212; 32 L. J., M. C. 249; 8 L. T. 280; 11 W. R. 695.

By a railway act it was provided, that, where a jury shall give a verdict for the same, or a greater sum than shall have been offered by the company, for the purchase of lands, or as compensation for damage, the costs of such inquiry shall be defrayed by the company, and settled and determined by the sheriff; and, in case they are not paid within ten days after demand, a power of distress will be given to recover them. The costs of deducing such title as the company may require to any lands purchased or taken by the company are to be borne by the company, who are to pay the same before entering into possession; or, in case of dispute, are to obtain an order as after-mentioned, and to deposit the amount claimed by the party whose lands are taken. And if the companies and the parties cannot agree as to the amount of the costs, the same shall be ascertained by the court of exchequer, who may order them to be referred to the master for taxation, and such order shall be served on the parties, who shall be at liberty to proceed under the same; and the court may, after taxation, order the amount at which the costs are taxed to be paid. On a rule for a mandamus to the company, commanding them to pay the costs of an assessment for compensation for damage, and the costs of title to lands purchased by the company, in consequence of a notice by the owner that they were damaged by the proximity to the railway, such costs not having been settled by the sheriff:—Held, that a mandamus could not issue, at all events, until after the costs had been ascertained and attempted to be levied in the mode pointed out by the statute. Reg. v. London and Blackwall Ry., 3 D. & L. 399; 4 Railw. Cas. 110; 15 L. J., Q. B. 42.

ix. Enforcing Payment of Amount.

By Mandamus.]—Where under a compensation clause in a local act a mandamus issued to a company commanding them to issue their warrant for a jury to assess the damages sustained by a party in consequence of the works of the company; and the jury, summoned in obedience to mandamus, having assessed a compensation, and the company refusing to pay the same or the costs:—Held, that a mandamus lay to enforce payment of the compensation, though the statute made the verdict and judgment records of the quarter sessions. Rex v. Nottingham Old Waterworks Co., 6 A. & E. 355; 1 N. & P. 480; 6 L. J., K. B. 89.

b. Reference to Arbitration.

i. Submission.

Notice to Treat.]—Where land is required for the purposes of a railway company, and the parties agree to refer the amount of compensation to arbitration, it is unnecessary to go through the form of giving notice of a desire to treat for the land, and to have the matter so settled. Collins v. South Staffordshire Ry., 7 Ex. 5; 21 L. J., Ex. 247; 16 Jur. 843.

In every such case, the submission by writing under the hand of the secretary or clerk of the company is sufficient. But such a submission is not rendered valid by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, s. 97. Ib.

Nature of Interest.]—A railway company requiring lands, gave notice to L. and H., parties interested, to treat for their purchase. L. and H. thereupon served the company with a notice that, as trustees of H., they had an estate and interest in the lands, and claimed 3,344*l.* for the same, and desired to have their compensation settled by arbitration, and they appointed T. as their arbitrator. The company nominated their arbitrator, and the arbitrators appointed an umpire, who proceeded with the reference. At the reference W. appeared, and claimed compensation, alleging that he had an agreement for the renewal of an unexpired lease in the premises :—Held, that the submission was not in compliance with the statute, the claimants not having therein stated the nature of their interest. North Staffordshire Ry. and Landor, In re, 6 Railw. Cas. 17 ; 2 Ex. 235 ; 17 L. J., Ex. 350.

Additional.]—Where part of a person's land is taken by a company, and an old approach thereto, not taken, is thereby cut off, an arbitrator has no power to determine as to the future access to the land, and if a power to set out approaches is given by an additioual submission not containing a consent that this additional submission shall be made a rule of court, the court cannot set aside the award on the ground that no approaches are set out, inasmuch as s. 36 authorises the making such submission only a rule of court as is in pursuance of the act, and 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 15, gives such authority only where the submission contains such consent. Ware v. Regent's Canal Co., 9 Ex. 395 ; 7 Railw. Cas. 780 ; 23 L. J., Ex. 145.

Making Submission a Rule of Court.]—The reference to arbitration of a question of disputed compensation pursuant to the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 25, is a "submission to arbitration by consent" within the meaning of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 17, and the submission may be a made a rule of court. Harper, Ex parte, L. R. 18 Eq. 539 ; 22 W. R. 942.

Semble, that a submission to arbitration under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is not a submission by consent within the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 27. Harper and G. E. Ry., In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 507 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 39 ; 32 L. T. 214 ; 23 W. R. 371.

When a submission is made a rule of court under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 36, the court has the same jurisdiction in dealing with it as in the case of submissions under 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 15, and any application to set it aside must be made within the time thereby limited. Ib.

Duration of.]—A submission to arbitration was made by L. and a railway company, to assess the value of land belonging to the former, and required for railway purposes, and to determine what should be paid for damages resulting from making the railway. The submission contained a declaration that the proceedings should be in strict conformity with the provisions of the Lands and Railways Clauses Acts. The arbitrator from time to time enlarged the period for making his award. L. having died, a suit was instituted by the company to set aside the award :—Held, that the submission was not strictly a common-law submission, but that it was the intention of the parties to include in it the provisions of the Lands and Railways Clauses Acts, and that, therefore, the submission did not expire at the death of the landowner. Caledonian Ry. v. Lockhart, 3 Macq. H. L. 808 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1311 ; 3 L. T. 65 ; 8 W. R. 373.

ii. Arbitrators and Umpires.

Appointment.]—A railway company having refused compensation for injury done to the premises of B., he, on the 5th December, served them with a notice requiring them to appoint an arbitrator on their behalf, and stating that it was his intention to appoint M. as his arbitrator, and that if for the space of fourteen days after that notice the company failed to appoint an arbitrator on their behalf, he would appoint M. to act for both parties. The company having refused to refer the matter to arbitration, B., on the 1st January following, served them with a notice which, after reciting that he had appointed M. as his arbitrator, stated that he then appointed M. to act as arbitrator on behalf of both parties. The arbitrator having awarded a sum to be paid to B., the court refused to enforce or set aside the award, intimating their opinion that there was no valid appointment of the arbitrator. Bradley v. L. & N.-W. Ry., 5 Ex. 796 ; 1 L. M. & P. 597 ; 20 L. J., Ex. 3.

Where an amount claimed for compensation is not paid or agreed to be paid within twenty-one days, it is the duty of the claimant, before nominating an arbitrator on his behalf, to attempt to procure the appointment of a single arbitrator. Yates v. Blackburn Corporation, 6 H. & N. 61 ; 29 L. J., Ex. 447.

—— What Persons.]—The surveyor of a railway company had in that character treated with a landowner, and offered a price for land required by the company. He was subsequently named by the company, and acted as their arbitrator upon an arbitration under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 :—Held, that he ought not to have been selected as an arbitrator ; but the landowner knowing the fact, and, though protesting against the propriety of the appointment, proceeding with the arbitration, was held to have waived the objection. Elliott and South Devon Ry., In re, 2 De G. & Sm. 17 ; 12 Jur. 445.

—— Effect of.]—Semble, that a company does not, by nominating, under protest, an arbitrator, in pursuance of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, admit that the case is one entitling the claimant to any compensation. Sutton Harbour Improvement Co. v. Hitchins, 1 De G. M. & G. 161 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 73 ; 16 Jur. 70.

Death of.]—By a local act, the undertakers were authorised to make and maintain such navigation, and from time to time to alter the dams and weirs for that purpose ; and to enter and make works upon lands for the purpose of the undertaking, first making satisfaction to the owners as the commissioners under the act should direct. By a subsequent clause, any persons injured by the works were to receive compensation, to be assessed by the commissioners. The commissioners were named in the act, and power given them to appoint successors from time to time. The navigation was made, and, as part of it, a dam across a river was enlarged. Subsequently, all the commissioners died without having appointed successors. The company afterwards raised the dam, to the injury of a millowner below :—Held, by Wightman, Erle, and Crompton, JJ., that the power to alter the dam still existed, even though the millowner should no longer have any means of obtaining compensation, as to which they gave no opinion ; Lord Campbell, C.J., dissenting, holding that the compensation clause having become incapable of execution by extinction of the commissioners, the powers which the act had conferred upon the company to cause injury to other persons could no longer be exercised. Kennet and Avon Navigation Co. v. Witherington, 18 Q. B. 531 ; 21 L. J., Q. B. 419 ; 16 Jur. 778.

Umpire—Appointment.]—A railway company and a landowner having agreed to settle by arbitration the amount of compensation to be paid to the latter for his land, each appointed an arbitrator, but the arbitrators not agreeing as to the appointment of an umpire, the company applied to the commissioners of railways to appoint one, which they did by a document not under seal, and signed by a person not describing himself as secretary of the board. The umpire awarded a sum as compensation, but did not find whether it was greater or less than the sum offered by the company, and he awarded that the costs of the claimant should be paid according to the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act. A rule having been obtained to set aside his award, on the grounds that the umpire was not legally appointed, and that he ought to have settled the costs of the claimant, the court refused to make the rule absolute, considering the objections too doubtful to determine on motion. Fooks, Ex parte, 3 Ex. 728.

A company appointed an arbitrator on the 23rd March, the claimant another on the 6th April. The arbitrators neglected seven days after request by the company, to appoint an umpire; on which the company applied to the railway commissioners under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 105, and they appointed an umpire on 17th May:—Held, that such appointment was in time. Bradshaw, In re, 12 Q. B. 562; 17 L. J., Q. B. 362; 12 Jur. 998.

The parties appointed two arbitrators, but they made no award, nor appointed any umpire within twenty-one days after the last appointment, after which time the board of trade appointed an umpire:—Held, that the appointment was valid. East and West India Docks, In re, 5 Railw. Cas. 527.

—— Death before Award—Appointment of Sole Arbitrator—Costs of First Proceedings.]—Where, in an arbitration under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the umpire by whom the question was to be dealt with died, after certain steps had been taken, without making any award, and the parties then by an agreement, which contained no reference to the former proceedings, appointed a "sole arbitrator" who made an award under which the claimant was entitled to costs; such appointment was held to be a continuation of the statutory arbitration, and the claimant was therefore entitled to the costs of the former proceedings. Reg. v. Manley-Smith, 63 L. J., Q. B. 171; 10 R. 611.

Declarations of.]—An umpire was appointed on the 17th May, and the arbitrators on the 23rd March and 6th April, and made their declarations on the 27th May, before the umpire entered upon matters referred:—Held, that no objection arose from the lateness of these declarations. Bradshaw, In re, 12 Q. B. 562; 17 L. J., Q. B. 362; 12 Jur. 998.

If a question of disputed compensation is submitted to arbitration under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 25, and an umpire is appointed by the board of trade, the declaration required by s. 33 to be taken and subscribed by such umpire need not be taken and subscribed before a justice of the particular locality in which the lands are situate. Davies v. South Staffordshire Ry., 2 L. M. & P. 599; 21 L. J., M. C. 52; 15 Jur. 1133.

When a submission contained other matters than the question of compensation, and was therefore extra the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, and it did not distinctly appear that the party applying was ignorant that the declaration required to be made by the arbitrator, the court refused to set aside an award on that ground. Levick v. Epsom and Leatherhead Ry., 1 L. T. 60; 8 W. R. 66.

Authority of.]—An arbitrator has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon any collateral matter affecting the claim to compensation, but only to determine the amount of damage. Byles v. Ipswich Dock Commissioners, 11 Ex. 464; 25 L. J., Ex. 53.

He cannot inquire into the title of the claimant to the land or other hereditament in respect of which he claims compensation, but only decide upon the question of amount. Reg. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 3 El. & Bl. 443; 23 L. J., Q. B. 185; 18 Jur. 993.

An arbitrator has no power to set out approaches to lands not taken, in lieu of communications formerly existing over lands taken, both portions of lands belonging to the same party; but can only award compensation in respect of the injuriously affecting the lands not taken, by reason of the loss of the approaches. Ware v. Regent's Canal Co., 9 Ex. 395; 7 Railw. Cas. 780; 23 L. J., Ex. 145.

Where part only of leasehold premises, subject to an entire single rent, is taken, an arbitrator has no power to apportion the rent. The remedy is under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 119. Ib.

An arbitrator awarding compensation for structural damage to a house, and depreciation of his leasehold interest therein, by the execution and use of the works of a railway, has power also to award compensation for damage similarly done to the owner's goods in the house. Knock v. Metropolitan Ry., 38 L. J., C. P. 78; L. R. 4 C. P. 131; 19 L. T. 239; 17 W. R. 10.

Admissibility of Evidence.]—A railway company took land on which cotton mills would probably have been built; the owner had other land on which he had built a reservoir from which water might be supplied to such cotton mills when built. In proceeding under the Lands Clauses Act to ascertain the compensation, the umpire received evidence as to the profits which might have been derived from supplying water to the mills when built, and awarded compensation for the loss of those prospective profits:—Held, that the umpire was right in receiving the evidence and in awarding such compensation. Ripley v. G. N. Ry., L. R. 10 Ch. 435; 31 L. T. 869; 23 W. R. 685.

The umpire awarded 8,325*l.* "as and for the compensation for the plaintiff's interest in a causeway, and for a jetty, and for a shutting up of a landing place, and for the damage by the depreciation of his mansion-house by the otherwise injuriously affecting the same." When called as a witness at the trial, the umpire stated that he had allowed, among other items, 5,000*l.* "for general depreciation in value of the house and premises by loss of privacy, prospect, and other amenities":—Held, that the umpire had exceeded his jurisdiction in awarding as he had done. Buccleuch (Duke) v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 41 L. J., Ex. 137; L. R. 5 H. L. 418; 27 L. T. 1.

Evidence of Umpire to Explain.]—The evidence of the umpire is admissible to shew whether or not he had awarded on matters

Proceeding, Ex parte.]—When an umpire had given notice of a meeting, and one of the parties had refused to attend, and the umpire had thereupon proceeded ex parte, and made an award, the party was let in to be heard only as a matter of indulgence, and on the terms of his paying all the costs. Hewitt and Portsmouth Waterworks Co., In re, 10 W. R. 780.

Held, also, that it was his duty to have attended, and stated his reasons for desiring delay. Ib.

—— Arbitrator neglecting to act.]—Where arbitrators have been appointed under s. 25 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and one arbitrator refuses or neglects for seven days to concur in the appointment of an umpire, the other arbitrator has power, under s. 30 of the act, to proceed ex parte to make an award, and the previous appointment of an umpire is not in such a case a condition precedent to the ex parte proceedings. Shepherd v. Norwich Corporation, 54 L. J., Ch. 1050; 30 Ch. D. 553; 53 L. T. 251; 33 W. R. 841.

Effect of Non-Appointment.]—Where an arbitration has proved abortive in consequence of the non-appointment of an umpire within the time limited by the statute, the owner of the land is not bound to proceed anew under s. 68, but in the event of a refusal by the company is entitled to a mandamus to compel them to issue their warrant to a jury to assess compensation. South Yorkshire, Doncaster and Goole Ry., In re, Senior, Ex parte, 7 D. & L. 36; 18 L. J., Q. B. 333.

iii. Award.

(a) Practice as to.

Time for making.]—The period of three months provided by s. 23 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, within which the umpire is to make his award, begins from the date of his appointment as umpire, and not from the time when the awarding power of the arbitrators comes to an end. Pullen and Liverpool Corporation, In re, 51 L. J., Q. B. 285; 46 L. T. 391; 46 J. P. 468. S. P., Bradshaw, In re, 5 Railw. Cas. 527; 12 Q. B. 562; 17 L. J., Q. B. 362; 12 Jur. 998.

The three months allowed by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 23, to the arbitrators or their umpire, for making their award, is not one and the same period; but the umpire has a new period of three months for making his award, from the time when the arbitration devolves upon him. Skerratt v. North Staffordshire Ry., 2 Ph. 475; 5 Railw. Cas. 166; 17 L. J., Ch. 161; 12 Jur. 46. S. P., Bradshaw, In re, 12 Q. B. 562; 5 Railw. Cas. 527; 17 L. J., Q. B. 362; 12 Jur. 998.

Where a submission to arbitration included the provisions of the Lands Clauses and Railways Clauses Acts, and the arbitrator from time to time enlarged the period for making the award:—Held, that the award was valid, though not made within the statutable period of three months. Caledonian Ry. v. Lockhart, 3 Macq. H. L. Cas. 808; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1371; 3 L. T. 65; 8 W. R. 373.

A railway company injuriously affected lands by their works. The owner gave notice to have his claim settled by arbitration; and the company not having done anything, he formally appointed an arbitrator for both. The arbitrator made his award, but more than three months after his appointment:—Held, that s. 23 applied as well to arbitration, under s. 68, for claims for damages to lands taken, as to arbitration for claims for lands intended to be taken, and consequently that the award was out of time. Evans v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., 1 El. & Bl. 754; 22 L. J., Q. B. 254; 17 Jur. 878.

Signing.]—The proceedings under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 85, are not necessarily invalid because the award was signed on a day subsequently to the day on which the money was paid into court and the bond given. Stamps v. Birmingham, Wolverhampton and Stour Valley Ry., 7 Hare, 256.

Enlarging Time—By Consent.]—If the parties consent to enlarge the time for making an award beyond the statutable term of three months, the court will not set aside the award on the ground that it is made beyond the prescribed time and that the parties cannot by consent dispense with the provisions of the statute. Palmer v. Metropolitan Ry., 31 L. J., Q. B. 259; 10 W. R. 714.

—— By Court.]—The power given to the court by Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 8, to remit matters referred under that act to the reconsideration of the arbitrator, applies also to matters referred under the Lands Clauses Act; so also the power given by s. 15 to enlarge the time for making the award, even after the proper time has expired. Dare Valley Ry. v. Rhys, 17 W. R. 550. Affirmed on appeal, infra.

Referring back.]—When the court refers a matter back to an umpire, who has made an award, for reconsideration, that award is avoided altogether. Dare Valley Ry. v. Rhys, 38 L. J., Ch. 417; L. R. 4 Ch. 554; 20 L. T. 291; 17 W. R. 717.

And such reference back of an award of the value of land under the Lands Clauses Act, operates as an original reference to the umpire, so that, by virtue of s. 23, if no proceedings are taken on it for three months, the price is to be determined by a jury. Ib.

But, by Lord Hatherley, C., when an award has been made a rule of court it comes within the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 15; and therefore, if it is referred back by the court for redetermination, and no new award is made within three months, it is still in the discretion of the court under that act to allow or not an enlargement of the term for redetermination by the arbitrator. Ib.

Taking up — Enforcement — Mandamus.]—A person who has obtained an award of compensation, in respect of lands injuriously affected, may, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 35, require the promoters of the undertaking to take up the award. Harper, Ex parte, 23 W. R. 67. See Reg. v. West Midland Ry., 10 W. R. 583.

A prerogative writ of mandamus is the proper remedy for enforcing the taking up of awards made under the Lands Clauses Act. Reg. v. Lambourn Valley Ry. (22 Q. B. D. 463) distinguished. Reg. v. L. & N.-W. Ry., 63 L. J., Q. B. 695; [1894] 2 Q. B. 512; 10 R. 359; 58 J. P. 719.

Where a difference between a landowner and the promoters of an undertaking has been referred and an award made, the court will compel the promoters by mandamus, at the landowner's instance, to take up the award. Reg. v. South Devon Ry., 15 Q. B. 1043; 20 L. J., Q. B. 145; 15 Jur. 464.

The promoters must, for that purpose, pay the fees due on the award, the arbitrators or umpire having a lien on the award for such fees, which the promoters are bound to satisfy, except so far as the obligation may be limited by s. 34. Ib.

On shewing cause against a rule nisi for a mandamus calling on the defendants to take up an award, no objection can be taken that the prosecutor is not properly before the court on account of defects in his notice under s. 23 or under s. 68. Reg. v. Sutton Harbour Commissioners, 2 W. R. 10.

Enforcing.]—An award of arbitrators or an umpire upon a claim for compensation for lands injuriously affected by the works of a company, like the assessment of a compensation jury, merely ascertains the amount, not the claimant's right to compensation. Such an award, therefore, cannot be enforced by motion, like an ordinary award. Newbold and Metropolitan Ry., In re, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 405.

Setting Aside.]—If a question of disputed compensation is submitted to arbitration, and an umpire is appointed under s. 28, by the board of trade, and the submission is made a rule of court, the court has jurisdiction to set aside the award of the umpire, though neither the appointment of the umpire, nor his award, is made a rule of court. Bradshaw, In re, 12 Q. B. 562; 17 L. J., Q. B. 362; 12 Jur. 998.

The court will not entertain the objection that the award is contrary to the evidence. Ib.

Payment to Whom.]—The owner of business premises mortgaged them with the machinery and fixtures. A railway company gave notice to take part of the premises for its railway, but before the price was fixed the mortgagor died, and the mortgagees entered into possession of the property. A suit was instituted for the administration of the mortgagor's estate, which proved to be insolvent, and a receiver was appointed, who, with the consent of the mortgagees, carried on the business. Arbitrators and an umpire were appointed to fix the compensation money payable by the company. The umpire awarded 15,950*l.*, of which he certified that he had awarded 2,800*l.* in respect of the loss of profits in carrying on the business. The executors claimed the 2,800*l.* as belonging to the mortgagor's estate, to be divided among his general creditors:—Held, that the sum of 2,800*l.* was in the nature of compensation for the value of the goodwill of the business, which passed with the premises; and that the whole of the sum of 15,950*l.* belonged to the mortgagees. Pile v. Pile, Lambton, Ex parte, 45 L. J., Ch. 841; 3 Ch. D. 36; 35 L. T. 18; 24 W. R. 1003—C. A.

(b) Validity.

Returns to Mandamus.]—A mandamus to a railway company, reciting that premises in the occupation of B. had been injuriously affected by the works of the company, and that the company declining to join in the appointment of an arbitrator to estimate the compensation due to B., he had appointed an arbitrator ex parte, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 25, who had duly made his award; and commanding the company to take up the award. A return that B. also occupied other lands which were taken by the company, and that before the execution of their works it was agreed between B. and the company that the company should pay to him a certain sum of money in full satisfaction of his claim in respect of the lands which were so taken, and of the premises which were so injuriously affected, which sum was duly paid:—Held, a good return. Reg. v. West Midland Ry., 11 W. R. 857.

When a claim for compensation for injuriously affecting land has been referred to arbitration, without prejudice to the right of the company to dispute the claim, and an award has been made, and a mandamus is obtained commanding the company to take up the award, a return that the land had not been injuriously affected is good. Reg. v. Cambrian Ry., 10 B. & S. 315; 38 L. J., Q. B. 198; L. R. 4 Q. B. 320; 20 L. T. 437; 17 W. R. 667.

Form of Award.]—When an award had been made on a claim against a company in respect of lands alleged to be injuriously affected under an agreement for reference pursuant to the Lands Clauses Act, s. 68, the umpire having awarded that the company should pay a specified sum by way of compensation:—Held, that though in form the umpire had no power to order the company to pay, yet that such informality did not vitiate the award so far as it ascertained the amount of damages, assuming the company's liability. Harper and G. E. Ry., In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 507; L. R. 20 Eq. 39; 32 L. T. 214; 23 W. R. 371.

By a submission between L. and a railway company, after reciting that the company was authorised to take lands, of which he was or claimed to be owner, that they had given him notice that they required his lands, and that it was agreed that they should become the purchasers in the mode thereinafter pointed out; it was convenanted that it should be referred to T. to determine the value to be paid for the lands; that the purchase-money should be paid within three days after the making of the award; and "thereupon L. should execute a conveyance, subject to the payment of the amount of such purchase-money into the Court of Chancery, under the circumstances and in the manner provided for by the Lands Clauses Act, 1845." The arbitrator found the value of the land at a certain sum, and directed it to be paid "within three days after," &c., following the words of the submission:—Held, that, assuming even that the arbitrator had exceeded his jurisdiction in ordering the money to be paid, the rest of the award was good, and that, as the award ascertained the amount of the purchase-money which the company, by the submission, had agreed to pay, there was sufficient to enable the court to make an order on them to pay it. Lindsay v. Direct London and Portsmouth Ry., 1 L. M. & P. 529; 19 L. J., Q. B. 417; 15 Jur. 224.

Held, also, that it was no objection that it was not shewn that the company had taken possession of the land. Ib.

Execution of Conveyance.]—Held, also, that the payment of the money and the execution of the conveyance to L. were not dependent conditions, but that the payment was to precede the conveyance; and that it was therefore no answer that a conveyance had not been tendered. Ib.

When, after notice to treat, the amount of compensation to be paid for land compulsorily taken has been fixed by an award under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, an action for such compensation cannot be maintained until a conveyance of the land has been executed. East London Union v. Metropolitan Ry., 38 L. J., Ex. 225; L. R. 4 Ex. 309.

Effect of Award.]—A railway company was empowered to abandon the tramways which communicated with the ironworks of A.; and having given to A. notice of their intention to take certain of his lands, the amount of compensation was referred to an umpire, who was to ascertain and direct what should be paid "for the interest in the lands, and for any damage that might be sustained by reason of the execution of the works." A. made a claim before the arbitrator for compensation in respect of damage which he alleged he would sustain if the tramways were stopped up, and the umpire awarded that a certain sum should be paid by the company to A., "as and for purchase and compensation for and in respect of his interest in the lands and hereditaments, and for damage sustained, and which may be sustained, by him, by reason of the execution of the works of the railway, or in the exercise by the company of the powers of the act":—Held, that it did not appear upon the face of the award, that the umpire had exceeded his jurisdiction, by awarding compensation in respect of a claim for damage not within the reference. Brogden and Llynvi Valley Ry., In re, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 229; 30 L. J., C. P. 61; 4 L. T. 361. See also Buccleuch (Duke) v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 41 L. J., Ex. 137; L. R. 5 H. L. 418; 27 L. T. 1.

Semble, that in an action on an award under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, when the defendant pleads that the compensation awarded is in respect of matters not the subject of compensation, the award is not evidence that the compensation awarded is in respect of matters the subject of compensation. Rhodes v. Airedale Drainage Commissioners, 45 L. J., C. P. 861; 1 C. P. D. 402; 35 L. T. 46; 24 W. R. 1053—C. A.

The plaintiffs claimed compensation in respect of their messuage having been injuriously affected by the sewage works of the board of works, made by them under the powers of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855; and by an agreement between the plaintiffs and the board of works, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the amount of compensation, if any, to which they were entitled was referred to an arbitrator. In an action for the amount of compensation awarded, it is no defence that the claim for compensation was made more than six months after the damage had been sustained, since s. 106 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, so limiting the time for issuing process, or instituting any proceeding against the board of works for anything done under the powers of their acts, did not apply to such a claim, and, if it could apply, the objection that the claim was made too late should have been set up when the plaintiffs gave notice of their claim, and not after the matter had, with the board's consent, been referred. Delany v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 37 L. J., C. P. 59; L. R. 3 C. P. 111; 17 L. T. 262; 16 W. R. 137—Ex. Ch.

—— Reference at Trial.]—In 1832 a market gardener became the occupier of land and premises adjoining the works of a gas company. In 1836 he took a lease, which would have expired in 1853, but in 1850 he obtained a renewal of this lease until 1874. At the time of the last renewal the company were enlarging their works, and building a new retort-house, much larger, and nearer his premises. He brought an action, in 1854, against the company for damages for the nuisance which the works occasioned to him as a market gardener. On the case coming on for trial, a reference was agreed upon, and the arbitrator, by his award, found that damage had accrued to a considerable extent. Notwithstanding the award, the company added to their works, and built a third retort-house. On a bill filed for a perpetual injunction:—Held, that the award of the arbitrator sufficiently established the right of the market gardener, at law, to such injunction, without the verdict of a jury. Imperial Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Broadbent, 7 H. L. Cas. 600; 29 L. J., Ch. 377; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1319.

Sum Awarded—Interest.]—It is no objection to the award that the price of the land, and the compensation for damage by severance, though each is expressly claimed, are assessed in a gross sum. Bradshaw, In re, 12 Q. B. 562; 17 L. J., Q. B. 362; 12 Jur. 998.

A claimant in respect of land, of which he is tenant in fee, cannot object that the award assesses the compensation on the assumption that he is in possession, whereas it is occupied by a lessee. Ib.

A railway company gave notice to treat for lands. The landowners thereupon gave notice to the company that they were owners and lessees of the land, and that their interest therein was particularly described in a schedule served therewith; that they claimed as compensation for the purchase-money and for damage that might be sustained by the execution of the works, 2,280*l.* 8*s.*, and that if that sum was not paid, they desired to have the amount settled by arbitration; they thereby appointing their arbitrator, and requiring the company to appoint an arbitrator on their behalf. In the schedule annexed were included pieces of land severed by the railway, and respectively of less than half an acre, which the landowners required the company to purchase. The company thereupon served the landowners with a notice appointing an arbitrator, to whom was to be referred the amount of compensation to be paid by the company for the purchase of the lands. At the reference the landowners gave evidence of the value of the small pieces of land mentioned in the schedule, being respectively less than half an acre. The umpire awarded one entire sum for the purchase of the fee-simple, which the company required and for the small pieces mentioned in the schedule:—Held, that as nothing had been submitted but the value of the land which the company desired to purchase, and as one entire sum was awarded for that and the small pieces of land which the landowners required the company to take, the award was bad, but the court refused to set it aside. North Staffordshire Ry. and Wood, In re, 6 Railw. Cas. 25; 2 Ex. 244; 17 L. J., Ex. 354.

A railway company gave to a leaseholder the usual notice to treat, and it was referred to arbitration to ascertain the value of the premises and the damages sustained by the execution of the works, and the compensation to be paid by the company in respect thereof. The arbitrator awarded 2,700*l.* as the compensation to be paid for all the leaseholder's interest, of whatever nature, in the leasehold :—Held, that the award was bad. Wakefield v. Llanelly Ry., 34 Beav. 245. Affirmed, 12 L. T. 509 ; 13 W. R. 823—L.JJ.

Mesne Profits.]—An award is not bad for not expressly awarding compensation in respect of damage done to land before the making of the award, by reason of the land having remained untenanted in consequence of the notice. Ware v. Regent's Canal Co., 9 Ex. 395 ; 7 Railw. Cas. 780 ; 23 L. J., Ex. 145.

Lands were taken by a railway company, for the purposes of their railway. In June the owner of the lands brought ejectment to recover possession. In August the company executed a deed-poll, under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 77, for the purpose of vesting the lands in themselves. At the trial a verdict was taken for the plaintiff, subject to a reference of the action, and all matters in difference between the parties to an arbitrator, who was to ascertain what sum should be paid by the company to the plaintiff as the price of, or compensation for, the land of the plaintiff, the plaintiff thereby consenting to make and execute a conveyance. The arbitrator made this award, and directed that a verdict for the plaintiff should stand, and that a sum of money should be paid by the company to the plaintiff as the price of and compensation for the land, which the company, at the time of making the order of reference, had taken for the purposes of the railway. The plaintiff having signed judgment, issued a writ of possession, under which he took possession of the land, and afterwards brought an action for mesne profits : —Held, that the question of mesne profits was a matter in difference between the parties which appeared by the award to have been disposed of by the arbitrator. Smalley v. Blackburn Ry., 2 H. & N. 158 ; 27 L. J., Ex. 65.

Silence as to Part of Claim—Negative.]—By a submission to arbitration of a question of disputed compensation, the arbitrator was to determine what sums should be paid for the purchase of land, and what "other if any" sum for severance damage. He, after reciting the submission, and that he had considered the matters so referred to him, awarded a sum to be paid for the purchase of the land, without saying anything as to any severance damage :—Held, that the award was final and good, and that the arbitrator by his silence negatived any right to compensation in respect of severance damage. Beaufort (Duke) and Swansea Harbour Trustees, In re, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 146 ; 29 L. J., C. P. 241 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 979.

Where Land not injuriously affected.]—By an award made under the Lands Clauses Act, the arbitrator awarded one entire sum as the amount of damage sustained by a party by reason of his messuage being injuriously affected by the execution of the works of a railway company, to wit, by the erection of an embankment, and by the narrowing of the road in front of the messuage. To a declaration on the award for not paying the sum awarded, a plea by the company that the messuage was not injuriously affected by the narrowing of the road, is a good plea. Beckett v. Midland Ry., 1 H. & R. 189 ; 35 L. J., C. P. 163 ; L. R. 1 C. P. 241 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 231 ; 13 L. T. 672 ; 14 W. R. 393.

Conclusive as to Right.]—In 1832 a market gardener became the occupier of land and premises adjoining the works of a gas company. In 1836 he took a lease, which would have expired in 1853, but in 1850 he obtained a renewal of this lease until 1874. At the time of the last renewal the company were enlarging their works, and building a new retort-house, much larger, and nearer his premises. He brought an action, in 1854, against the company for damages for the nuisance which the works occasioned to him as a market gardener. On the case coming on for trial, a reference was agreed upon, and the arbitrator, by his award, found that damage had accrued to a considerable extent. Notwithstanding the award, the company added to their works, and built a third retort-house. On a bill filed for a perpetual injunction :—Held, that the award of the arbitrator sufficiently established the right of the market gardener, at law, to such injunction, without the verdict of a jury. Imperial Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Broadbent, 7 H. L. Cas. 600 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 377 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1319.

iv. Special Case.

Umpire Stating.]—An umpire appointed to ascertain the amount of compensation under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, has power to state a special case for the opinion of a superior court under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 5. Rhodes v. Airedale Drainage Commissioners, 45 L. J., C. P. 861 ; 1 C. P. D. 402 ; 35 L. T. 46 ; 24 W. R. 1053—C. A.

Appeal.]—The Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from the decision of the High Court of Justice upon a special case stated by an umpire appointed under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, to assess the compensation for lands taken for the purposes of an undertaking, or injured by the execution of the works thereof. Bidder v. North Staffordshire Ry., 48 L. J., Q. B. 248 ; 4 Q. B. D. 412 ; 40 L. T. 801 ; 27 W. R. 540—C. A.

When to be ascertained.]—The costs of arbitration which are to be settled by the arbitrators need not be incorporated in the award, but may be ascertained at a subsequent time by the persons who made the award. Gould v. Staffordshire Waterworks Co., 5 Ex. 214 ; 1 L. M. & P. 264 ; 6 Railw. Cas. 568 ; 19 L. J., Ex. 281 ; 14 Jur. 528. Contra, Quick v. L. & N.-W. Ry., 5 Railw. Cas. 20 ; 5 D. & L. 685 ; 18 L. J., Q. B. 89 ; 13 Jur. 408, overruled.

Such adjudication of the costs need not be within three months after the time of the reference. Ib.

Enforcing Determination by Mandamus.]—The term "the arbitrators" in s. 34 of Lands Clauses Act, 1845, may mean either the arbitrators or umpire, according as the compensation shall have been determined by the arbitrators or umpire. If the arbitrators or umpire, as the case may be, refuse or neglect to settle the costs, they may be compelled by mandamus to do so. Ib.

Agreement before Special Act.]—Before the passing of the company's act empowering them to take the plaintiff's land, they had entered into an agreement to buy his interest, the price in case of difference to be determined by a surveyor. The award made no provision as to costs:—Held, that the Lands Clauses Act did not apply. Catling v. G. N. Ry., 21 L. T. 769; 18 W. R. 121—L.JJ.

Agreement silent as to Costs.]—Where a party claiming compensation under a railway act agrees to refer his claim to arbitration instead of taking the verdict of a jury under the provisions of the act, and the reference and the award are silent about the costs, he is not entitled, on account of an award in his favour, to receive costs according to the provisions of the act, as if the jury had given a verdict in his favour. Reynal, Ex parte, 5 Railw. Cas. 60; 16 L. J., Q. B. 304.

Where no Offer made.]—The Lands Clauses Act, s. 51, giving the costs of inquisition to the owner of land when the assessment is greater than the sum offered, does not apply where the promoters have made no offer, and are not liable at all for the claim made. Todd v. Metropolitan District Ry., 24 L. T. 435; 19 W. R. 720.

Previous Offer—Time—Contents.]—A company was empowered to take land for its undertaking, and gave to the owner notice to treat under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, and he gave notice, under s. 23, of his desire to have the compensation settled by arbitration, naming his arbitrator, and the company named their arbitrator. The arbitrators appointed an umpire, and on two occasions enlarged the time for making their award. The company after this made an offer which was not accepted, and the arbitration proceeded. The umpire having awarded a less sum than that offered:—Held, that the offer was too late, and that the claimant was entitled to costs under s. 34. Gray & North-Eastern Ry., In re, 45 L. J., Q. B. 818; 1 Q. B. D. 696; 34 L. T. 757; 24 W. R. 758.

Under s. 34 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which provides that the costs of and incident to an arbitration under the act "shall be borne by the promoters of the undertaking unless the arbitrators shall award the same or a less sum than shall have been offered by the promoters of the undertaking," the claimant is entitled to the costs of and incident to the arbitration and award—even though a less sum be awarded than that offered by the promoters of the undertaking—if the subject-matter of the award is not the same as the subject-matter of the offer by the promoters. Miles v. G. W. Ry., 65 L. J., Q. B. 649; [1896] 2 Q. B. 432; 75 L. T. 290—C. A.

A canal company requiring to purchase land, received a notice from the owner claiming 28,000*l.* as compensation. On the 18th of August the company gave the claimant notice of their intention to issue their warrant for summoning a jury, and offering 15,237*l.* as the sum they were willing to give. On the 28th of August the claimant gave the company notice of his desire to have the compensation settled by arbitration. On the 26th of October the company gave the claimant notice that they had appointed an arbitrator, and offered 17,000*l.* as compensation. On the 8th of November the claimant appointed an arbitrator. On the 18th of November the two arbitrators appointed an umpire. The umpire awarded the claimant 16,400*l.*:—Held, that the offer of 17,000*l.*, having been made when the first arbitrator was appointed and before the beginning of the arbitration, was a good offer, and was not invalidated by the previous offer of 15,237*l.*; and the sum awarded being a less sum than 17,000*l.*, the claimant was not entitled to the costs of the arbitration. Fitzhardinge (Lord) and Gloucester and Berkeley Canal Co., In re, 41 L. J., Q. B. 316; L. R. 7 Q. B. 776; 27 L. T. 196; 20 W. R. 800.

If an umpire awards in respect of part of the landowner's claim for compensation a larger sum than the company offers in respect of that part, and at the same time awards as to another distinct part of the claim, in respect of which the company offers nothing, that the landowner has suffered no damage, he is entitled to those costs only which are incident to that part of his claim in respect of which compensation has been awarded. Reg. v. Biram, 17 Q. B. 969; 16 Jur. 640.

A person claiming compensation under a waterworks act, which incorporated the Lands Clauses Act, agreed with the company to appoint as sole arbitrator, for the purpose of settling the amount of such compensation, a person to be nominated by two others. They accordingly nominated an arbitrator, who awarded to the claimant a sum exceeding 50*l.*:—Held, that the claimant was entitled to the costs of the arbitration, although no offer had been made by the company, or the other preliminaries mentioned in the statute complied with. Martin v. Leicester Waterworks Co., 3 H. & N. 463; 27 L. J., Ex. 432.

A claimant having immediately on the expiration of twenty-one days from the service of his notice of claim nominated an arbitrator on his behalf, the promoters subsequently and before nominating their arbitrators, and before the claimant delivered his nomination to his arbitrator, tendered a sum for damages and costs, which was refused, and the umpire afterwards awarded a less sum for compensation:—Held, that the claimant was not entitled to the costs of the arbitration. Yates v. Blackburn Corporation, 6 H. & N. 61; 29 L. J., Ex. 447. See also ante, col. 1564.

—— Taking up Award—Umpire's Fees—Payment by Landowner—Repayment by Promoters.]—When an umpire has awarded a landowner for his land a larger sum than has been offered by a railway company (having compulsory powers to purchase under private acts which incorporate the Lands Clauses Act, 1845), the company is bound to take up the award and pay the umpire's fees. Should, however, the landowner do so, he cannot recover from the company the money so expended, as such payment is voluntary, and is in no sense costs properly incurred. Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Wirral Rys., infra.

Of Tenant for Life.]—The tenant for life of a settled estate is entitled to charge the estate with the costs, charges, and expenses, properly incurred by him in or about an arbitration entered into between him and the company under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act regarding the value of the land, on the ground that under the act he is made the fiduciary agent for such purposes on behalf of the estates. Berkeley (Earl), In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 3; L. R. 10 Ch. 56; 31 L. T. 531; 23 W. R. 195.

Powers of Arbitrator over.]—An order by consent having been made in a suit brought by a landowner against a railway company, that the matters in dispute should be submitted to an arbitrator who was also to determine the costs and expenses, and the arbitrator having sent in his certificate of costs, and the company objecting thereto and claiming to have such costs settled by the taxing-master:—Held, that the certificate was proper and must be enforced. Rowcliffe v. Devon and Somerset Ry., 21 W. R. 433.

An arbitrator having such costs to settle may obtain professional help. Ib.

—— Under Public Health Act.]—An arbitration held for the assessment of compensation in respects of lands taken compulsorily by a local board by virtue of the powers of the Public Health Act, 1875, is not an arbitration under that act within ss. 179 and 180, but is regulated by the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act incorporated by s. 176. The costs of such arbitration are, therefore, not in the discretion of the arbitrator. Rayner, Ex parte, 47 L. J., Q. B. 660; 3 Q. B. D. 446; 39 L. T. 232.

Taxation.]—The 32 & 33 Vict. c. 18, s. 1, only applies to arbitrations proceeding simply under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and not to arbitrations which embrace matters that could not be the subject of arbitration under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, except by agreement between the parties. Doulton v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 39 L. J., Q. B. 165; L. R. 5 Q. B. 333; 18 W. R. 790.

A corporation demanded of a neighbouring landowner a statement of his interest in lands required for the disposal of sewage under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and in answer a claim was made for compensation, and notice given to settle by arbitration. Arbitrators and umpire were duly appointed, but before award the parties agreed in writing that the corporation should have immediate possession of the lands required upon certain terms as to payment of interest; the corporation was to pay all costs incidental to the agreement, arbitration and conveyance of the land as between solicitor and client, and the time for making the award might be extended. Upon delivery of the bill of costs after the award, the corporation applied to have taxation, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1869, by a master:—Held, that the parties had contracted themselves out of the application of that act, and that the costs might be taxed in chancery under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 38. Wombwell v. Barnsley Corporation, 36 L. T. 708.

The master is not bound, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1869, s. 1, to tax the costs of an arbitration unless the claimant is entitled to costs under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 34. Fitzhardinge (Lord) and Gloucester and Berkeley Canal Co., In re, 41 L. J., Q. B. 316; L. R. 7 Q. B. 776; 27 L. T. 196; 20 W. R. 800.

—— Review of.]—When costs of an inquiry before arbitrators under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, "are taxed and settled as between the parties by one of the taxing-masters of the superior courts of law" under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 18, s. 1, the court has no jurisdiction over the master's taxation on a motion to review. Sandbach Charity Trustees and North Staffordshire Ry., In re, 47 L. J., Q. B. 10; 3 Q. B. D. 1; 37 L. T. 391; 26 W. R. 229—C. A.

There is no remedy by review of the decision of a taxing-master who has disallowed an item as not recoverable by the landowner from the promoters under s. 35 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Owen v. L. & N.-W. Ry. (L. R. 3 Q. B. 54), and Sandbach Charity and North Staffordshire Ry., In re ([1891] 1 Ch. 99), followed. Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Wirral Rys., 64 L. J., Ch. 850; [1895] 2 Ch. 812; 12 R. 546; 73 L. T. 234; 44 W. R. 19—C. A.

Action for—Before Taxation.]—In an arbitration the arbitrator awarded compensation, but said nothing as to costs:—Held, that the claimant was entitled to costs, and that the right to costs was entirely independent of the taxation of them, and an action could be maintained for the costs though the amount of such costs had not been previously settled or ascertained by taxation; and consequently an order for the taxation made by the judge on giving his judgment for the plaintiff was a valid order. Holdsworth v. Wilson (4 B. & S. 1) approved. Metropolitan District Ry. v. Sharpe, 50 L. J., Q. B. 14; 5 App. Cas. 425; 43 L. T. 130; 29 W. R. 617; 44 J. P. 716—H. L. (E.)

Where an umpire appointed under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 125, awarded the amount of compensation and the costs of the reference should be paid by the local board of health:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain an action for costs before taxation. Holdsworth v. Wilson, 4 B. & S. 1; 32 L. J., Q. B. 289; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 171; 8 L. T. 434; 11 W. R. 733—Ex. Ch.

—— Before Conveyance.]—Where taxed costs of an arbitration become payable to the owner, they are payable to him within a reasonable time, and the execution of a conveyance by him is not a condition precedent. Capell v. G. W. Ry., 52 L. J., Q. B. 348; 11 Q. B. D. 345; 48 L. T. 505; 31 W. R. 555—C. A.

No Award made.]—A bill by a company against an individual claiming to be injuriously affected under s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act was dismissed, with liberty to the defendant to apply for the costs, if he should establish his right to compensation. The parties proceeded by arbitration, but neither took up the award. Upon motion by the defendant that the company might pay the costs, or be compelled to take up the award:—Held, as to the first, that the defendant was premature, no award having been made; and, as to the second, that the court had no jurisdiction. Sutton Harbour Co. v. Hitchens, 16 Beav. 381.

Lien on Land.]—When land is taken by a railway company under the Lands Clauses Act, and the price is settled by arbitration, the costs of the arbitration and award payable to the vendor do not stand on the same footing as the purchase-money, and the vendors have no lien on the land for such costs. Ferrers v. Stafford and Uttoxeter Ry., 41 L. J., Ch. 362; L. R. 13 Eq. 524; 26 L. T. 652; 20 W. R. 478.

Effect of Special Act.]—The Lands Clauses Act, 1845, contained special provisions with regard to claims for compensation for lands affected by the works of a railway, and directed that (except in certain specified cases) compensation should be awarded with costs. A special act (38 & 39 Vict. c. cevili.) declared that the provisions of the general act, were, "except where expressly varied by the special act," incorporated with it. The general act provided the forms of proceedings in arbitrations—such as the appointment of arbitrators by the contending parties, and the appointment of an umpire by the arbitrators, and declared that compensation might be recovered with costs. The special act directed that arbitrations conducted under its provisions should be conducted by an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade, but contained no specific directions as to the award of costs. An arbitration of this sort took place under the special act. The arbitrator awarded compensation, but said nothing as to costs:—Held, that the claimant was entitled to costs, for that the substitution of one form of proceeding in the arbitration different from that in the general statute, expressly varied the provisions of the general statute as to that matter, but did not repeal the provision as to costs in the general statute, nor affect the general rule that the party succeeding in such an arbitration should recover costs. Metropolitan District Ry. v. Sharpe, 50 L. J., Q. B. 14; 5 App. Cas. 425; 43 L. T. 130; 28 W. R. 617; 44 J. P. 716—H. L. (E.)

c. By Justices.

Limitation of Time for Complaint.]—When a person is required to give up any lands under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 121, and have the amount of compensation settled by two justices, if the lands have not been injuriously affected, it is not necessary that the complaint shall be made to the justice within six months from the time of the notice under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, ss. 1 and 11. Reg. v. Hannay, 44 L. J., M. C. 27; 31 L. T. 702; 23 W. R. 164.

The determination by justices under s. 24 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, of the compensation to be paid by a railway company to a landowner for having in the construction of the railway injuriously affected his land, is not an order of the justices for the payment of money within s. 11 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43 (which limits the time for making a complaint to six months from the time when the matter of such complaint arose), and therefore the justices have jurisdiction under s. 24 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, to hear and determine the question of such disputed compensation, although the application be made more than six months after the land has been so injuriously affected. Edmundson, In re (17 Q. B. 67), overruled. Reg. v. Edwards, 53 L. J., M. C. 149; 13 Q. B. D. 586; 51 L. T. 586; 49 J. P. 117—C. A.

Interested Justices.]—The provision in the s. 3 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, that the word "justice," where used in the act, shall mean a justice who shall not be interested in the matter requiring his cognisance, is inserted ex abundanti cautelâ, and is only declaratory of the common law, and does not exclude the jurisdiction of a justice where the parties concerned consent that he shall act. Wakefield Local Board v. West Riding and Grimsby Ry., 6 B. & S. 794; 35 L. J., M. C. 69; 14 W. R. 100; 10 Cox, C. C. 162.

Residue of Term less than a Year.]—Compensation for a residue of a term which will expire within a year is to be determined, in case of difference, by two justices under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 121, and not by arbitration under s. 68. Reg. v. G. N. Ry., 46 L. J., Q. B. 4; 2 Q. B. D. 151; 35 L. T. 551; 25 W. R. 41.

Date of Notice fixes Interest.]—The Holborn Valley Improvement Act, 1867, which empowers the corporation of London to acquire certain houses, &c., incorporates the London Improvement Act, 1847, which empowers the corporation to take lands required after six months' notice to treat for their purchase, and in case of dispute to issue their precept to impannel a jury to assess the compensation; and directs persons to give up possession after six months' notice; and also incorporates s. 121 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, which directs that where the tenant's interest does not exceed a tenancy for a year, or from year to year, the compensation shall be assessed by justices. The corporation gave a tenant notice that they intended to take his house; that they were willing to treat in respect thereof; and that he must quit in six months:—Held, that for the purpose of determining whether his compensation was to be assessed by a jury or by justices, his interest at the time of giving the notice, and not at its expiration, was to be considered, and therefore he was entitled to have his compensation assessed by a jury. Tyson v. London Corporation, 41 L. J., C. P. 6; L. R. 7 C. P. 18; 25 L. T. 640; 20 W. R. 112.

Tenants from Year to Year.]—Where the occupier of land has no greater interest therein than as a tenant for a year, or from year to year, and such land has been entered upon or injuriously affected by the promoters of an undertaking, he can obtain compensation only by the determination of two justices, and is not entitled to have his claim settled by arbitration under s. 68. Reg. v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., 4 El. & Bl. 88; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 419; 2 W. R. 591. S. P., Knapp v. L. C. & D. Ry., 2 H. & C. 212; 32 L. J., Ex. 236; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 671; 8 L. T. 541; 11 W. R. 890.

By royal charter, persons were incorporated as the governors of the possessions, revenues, goods, and chattels of a free grammar school. The governors were to find a house, to be called the schoolhouse, in which the school should be fitly kept. They had also power to elect and remove the master as often as, according to their discretion, they might see necessary and convenient. They appointed a schoolmaster, and put him into possession of the schoolhouse. The resolution by which he was appointed contained terms to which he subscribed his consent, and by which he was to keep the house in repair, to take certain articles at a valuation, and give them up at quitting, being paid for them at a valuation, and to give three calendar months' notice before relinquishing his appointment. Two-thirds of the governors, with the sanction of the bishop, were to have the power of removing him, giving three months' notice; but in either case the office was to be vacated only on the 21st June or 21st December:—Held, that the schoolmaster had no greater interest in the house than as tenant for a year, or from year to year, and therefore, in seeking compensation, was confined to the remedy given by s. 121. Ib.

Compensation to a person having no greater interest than as tenant from year to year in premises required under the Holborn Valley Improvement Act (27 & 28 Vict c. lxi.), can only be assessed by justices. Reg. v. London Corporation, L. R. 2 Q. B. 292; 16 L. T. 280.

—— Valid Lease in Equity.]—A written agreement void at law, but equivalent in equity to a lease, is an interest greater than a yearly tenancy, within the Lands Clauses Act; and a tenant having and producing such an agreement is not liable to have the value of his interest assessed by two justices. Sweetman v. Metropolitan Ry., 1 Hem. & M. 543; 10 L. T. 156; 12 W. R. 304. S. P., Rogers v. Hull Dock Co., 34 L. J., Ch. 165; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1245; 13 W. R. 217.

—— No Lands taken.]—When no part of the lands of a tenant from year to year is taken, but his interest in the lands is injuriously affected by the railway works, he is entitled to claim compensation, and to have it determined under s. 68, before a jury or arbitrators; and his case does not come within s. 121, which provides for the assessment of the compensation being made before justices only when some part of the lands is required by the company. Somers and Metropolitan Ry., In re, 31 L. J., Q. B. 261; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 617; 10 W. R. 717.

A tenant for a year or from year to year is not entitled to have the amount of compensation, in respect of his interest, determined under s. 121, where the company has merely given a notice to treat under s. 18, but has not required him to give up possession. Reg. v. Stone, 35 L. J., M. C. 208; L. R. 1 Q. B. 529; 14 L. T. 552; 14 W. R. 791.

Tenancy for less than a Year and more than a Year.]—A magistrate, in assessing compensation, under s. 121 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, for the taking and injuriously affecting lands held by a tenant whose interest in the land taken is not for more than a year, has no jurisdiction to award compensation in respect of adjoining lands held by the tenant for more than a year for injuriously affecting such lands for more than a year. Bexley Heath Ry. v. North, 64 L. J., M. C. 17; [1894] 2 Q. B. 579; 9 R. 751; 71 L. T. 533; 58 J. P. 832—C. A.

If any part of a claim for compensation under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is in respect of an interest for more than a year, a magistrate cannot assess the compensation in respect of any part of such claim under s. 121, but the whole compensation must be assessed by a jury or arbitrators under s. 68. Ib.

Costs—Local Act.]—Under a local improvement act which incorporated the Lands Clauses Act, power was given to the corporation to lay sewers in lands, making full compensation for any damage, and where the method of recovering compensation was not provided, two justices might hear and determine the same:—Held, that though nothing was said about costs, full compensation necessarily included the costs of applying to justices. Huddersfield Corporation v. Shaw, 54 J. P. 724.

Form.]—The justices need not put their decision into writing, but may give it verbally. Reg. v. Combe, 32 L. J., M. C. 67; 11 W. R. 441.

d. In Superior Court.

Jurisdiction—Title—Amount.]—The question to be tried under s. 41 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, by a judge of a superior court with a jury, is the same as that tried before that act by the sheriff with a jury, and, consequently, the judge and jury have no jurisdiction to determine the title of the compensation, but can only determine the amount. East London Ry., In re, Oliver's Claim, 24 Q. B. D. 507; 63 L. T. 147; 38 W. R. 312—C. A.

—— Judge and Jury.]—Semble, that, notwithstanding the Judicature Acts and Rules, a trial in the high court under s. 41 cannot be by a judge without a jury. Ib.

—— Master.]—The jurisdiction conferred by s. 41 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, upon a judge of any one of the superior courts of common law at Westminster to make an order for the trial of a question of compensation in one of the superior courts of common law is transferred to the High Court of Justice by s. 16 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and may be exercised by a Master under the powers of Order LIV. r. 12, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883. Donisthorpe, In re, 66 L. J., Q. B. 399; [1897] 1 Q. B. 671; 76 L. T. 371; 45 W. R. 386—C. A.

Time for Appeal.]—In an issue stated under the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, s. 41, to try a question of compensation, the time for appealing is not limited to twenty-one days by Ord. LVIII. rr. 9 and 15. New River Co. v. Midland Ry., 36 L. T. 539; 25 W. R. 502—C. A.

First Trial by Sheriff set aside—Power to order Second Trial in High Court.]—A claim for compensation having been tried before a jury, under s. 39 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the verdict was set aside by the court on the grounds of treating, a champagne luncheon having been given by the plaintiff to the jury. The plaintiff then gave renewed notice of his claim, under s. 60, on 17th March, 1881; and on 4th April the defendants took out a summons, returnable on 8th April, under s. 41 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, for an order that the question of compensation should be tried in the high court. The defendants had duly issued their warrant to the sheriff before the original trial, but no fresh warrant was issued by them after the second notice, and the twenty-one days limited by s. 41 of the act of 1868 for its issue elapsed after the taking out of the summons, but before it was returnable:—Held, that a judge had no jurisdiction to make the order. Tanner v. Swindon Ry., 45 L. T. 209.

New Trial.]—The court has no power to grant a new trial of an issue directed under s. 41 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, to determine the right to compensation for lands taken for the purposes of a railway. Birmingham Land Co. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 58 L. J., Q. B. 587; 22 Q. B. D. 435; 60 L. T. 317; 37 W. R. 285.

When Action lies.]—A company was empowered by statute to build a bridge over the Ouse. The act recited that the building of such bridge might diminish the tolls received at a neighbouring bridge over the same river, belonging to another company; it therefore enacted, that if in the first three years after the opening of the railway there should be an annual decrease in the tolls of the last-mentioned bridge, as compared with the tolls during the three preceding years the railway company should forthwith pay the bridge company a sum equal to ten years' purchase of such annual decrease, taken upon an average of the three years in which it occurred. The decrease took place, and the compensation was claimed:—Held, that an action lay against the company for the amount, and that a mandamus to pay was not a more effectual remedy, and ought not to be granted. Reg. v. Hull and Selby Ry., 6 Q. B. 70; 3 Railw. Cas. 705; 13 L. J., Q. B. 257; 8 Jur. 491.

The owner of houses, which were liable to be taken for making a railway under an act of parliament, received notice from the promoters that they would be required for the railway, and the company demanded the particulars of his interest therein, and stated their willingness to purchase. The particulars were furnished by the landowner, and the sum of 4,500*l.* was claimed as compensation for taking the property, and he required payment thereof, or that a warrant should be issued by the company to summon a jury to assess the amount. The company took no further step in the matter:—Held, that the landowner could not maintain an action to recover the 4,500*l.* Burkinshaw v. Birmingham and Oxford Junction Ry., 6 Railw. Cas. 600; 5 Ex. 475; 20 L. J., Ex. 246.

If, in the execution of works authorised by an act of parliament damage is sustained, and the act provides a special mode in which compensation for such damage may be recovered, no action will lie for it. But this only relates to works carefully and skilfully executed, and if there is a want of proper care and skill on the part of those executing the works, an action for the negligence to recover damages for the injury thereby sustained will lie. Clothier v. Webster, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 790; 31 L. J., C. P. 316; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 231; 6 L. T. 461; 10 W. R. 624.

—— Plea of Fraud.]—In an action against a railway company for the full compensation claimed because of a default by the company to summon a jury within twenty-one days, a plea that the claim was not a bonâ fide claim within the statute, but in fraud of the company and without any reasonable cause, will not be allowed. Hooper v. Bristol Port Ry., 35 L. J., C. P. 299.

—— Special Tribunal Non-existent.]—Where a special tribunal appointed by statute for ascertaining the compensation to be given for damage sustained by the exercise of compulsory powers is no longer available, the compensation may be ascertained and enforced by action. Bentley v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., 60 L. J., Ch. 641; [1891] 3 Ch. 222; 65 L. T. 22.

Court of Chancery.]—The lessee of premises' which a railway company had given notice they were about to take for the purposes of the railway, claimed a future right of renewal of the lease. The company, who disputed this right, entered into possession of the land under an agreement for the payment of compensation in respect of the lessee's interest in the existing term, without prejudice to her claim in respect of the future right. Upon a bill by the lessee to establish her right of renewal:—Held, that inasmuch as the Lands Clauses Act contained no machinery for settling such a question, and the lessee had no remedy elsewhere, the court had jurisdiction. Bogg v. Midland Ry., 36 L. J., Ch. 440; L. R. 4 Eq. 310; 16 L. T. 113.

The court itself ascertained and fixed the amount of compensation, without referring the matter to another tribunal; compensation to bear interest at 4*l.* per cent. from the time when the reversion fell into possession. Beaufort (Duke) v. Patrick, 17 Beav. 60; 22 L. J., Ch. 489; 17 Jur. 682; 1 W. R. 280.

A lessee of lands taken by a railway company, without notice to treat, filed a bill against the company for an injunction to restrain them from taking more land, and an assessment of damages, eight months after the company had entered upon his land. Pending the proceedings, the necessity for an injunction ceased, and the lessee did not apply for one:—Held, that inasmuch as his right to an injunction and damages was clear at the time of filing his bill, he was entitled at the hearing to an inquiry as to damages, and a direction that the company should pay the sum assessed with costs. McRae v. L. B. & S. C. Ry., 18 L. T. 226.

A company gave notice to treat as to some building land, and a question was made whether, on the construction of a private act of parliament, the lessees had the right of perpetual renewal or not; an arbitrator assessed the value of the interest, and the money was paid into court to the account of the lessors, lessees, and other parties. A correspondence ensued, and a petition was presented setting it out, and numerous parties were served, who all appeared separately asking for investment in the names of the petitioners, and payment of the dividends to the receiver:—Held, that the correspondence amounted to an agreement that the petitioners must be considered as having the right of perpetual renewal, but otherwise the court was bound to decide it on the act, a jury or an arbitrator having no power to decide anything but the value of the interest. Brandon v. Brandon, 13 W. R. 251.

Held, also, that, supposing it was decided that the petitioners had not the interest, the court, by its own machinery, would determine the value, and direct payment of the rest (if there was any surplus) to the parties paying it in. Ib.

F. RESTRAINING PROCEEDINGS TO OBTAIN.

Where Land not Injuriously affected.]—The court does not interfere by injunction to restrain parties who insist that their property has been injuriously affected within the meaning of s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act from prosecuting their claim under the act upon the mere ground that the act has not provided the means of determining the preliminary question whether the property has been injuriously affected or not. But whether the same rule applies to a case in which there are several grounds of claim, some of which have been satisfied, quære. Norfolk (Duke) v. Tennant, 9 Hare, 745 ; 16 Jur. 398.

A canal act provided that in case the company and the coal-owner could not agree as to the amount of compensation for the coal taken for the purposes of the canal, it should be settled by a jury summoned by the commissioners, whose verdict was "to be conclusive, and should not be removed by certiorari or other process whatever into any of the courts of record at Westminster or any other court." A bill was filed, praying an injunction to restrain proceedings before a jury, on the ground that the defendant was entitled to no compensation, and that the special jurisdiction provided by the act was not so constituted as to be likely to come to a just conclusion :—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction, if the defendant was entitled to any compensation, the amount of which had to be ascertained. Barnsley Canal Co. v. Twibell, 7 Beav. 19 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 134.

The defendant claimed a sum of money from a railway company, by way of damages, for having injuriously affected his land by crossing the road leading to it, and called upon the company either to pay the sum claimed or to summon a jury to assess the amount of compensation. The company alleged that the defendant's land was not injuriously affected, within the meaning of s. 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and filed their bill to restrain the defendant from taking proceedings to assess the damage :—Held, in conformity with a decision of Lord Truro, which was opposed to a decision of Lord Cottenham, that an injunction could not be maintained. South Staffordshire Ry. v. Hall, 6 Railw. Cas. 389 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 397 ; 15 Jur. 322. Affirmed, 3 Macn. & G. 353 ; 16 Jur. 93.

Proceedings instituted without Authority.]—The lessee of a ferry served a notice on a railway company on behalf of himself and his lessors claiming compensation for injury to the ferry, and requiring the dispute to be submitted to arbitration under the Lands Clauses Act. The lessors had not given authority to use their names ; the act of the railway company provided for compensating the lessors of the ferry, but did not mention their lessee ; and the notice claimed one lump sum without distinguishing the interests of the lessors and the lessee. The railway company brought an action for an injunction to restrain the lessee from proceeding to arbitration under the notice :—Held, that a proceeding in the name of a person who had given no authority ought to be stayed, and that an injunction ought to be granted, the unauthorised use of the name of the lessors distinguishing the case from North London Railway v. G.N. Ry. (11 Q. B. D. 30) :—But held, on appeal, that though the court in which an action is brought has jurisdiction to stay proceedings in it if it has been brought without authority, the court has no general jurisdiction to restrain persons from acting without authority, and that an injunction could not be granted to restrain a person from taking proceedings out of court in the name of a person who had given no authority to use it. London and Blackwall Ry. v. Cross, 55 L. J., Ch. 313 ; 31 Ch. D. 354 ; 54 L. T. 309 ; 34 W. R. 201—C. A.

Effect of Agreement.]—T. claimed damages for injury done to his brewery by the erection of a new market at S. The damages claimed were —first, for narrowing a street bounding the brewery ; secondly, for temporary obstruction of the thoroughfare ; and thirdly, for obstruction of the access of light and air, and contracted ventilation. This last damage did not appear to have been pressed, or discovered, until the new market buildings had arisen to a considerable height. The defendant gave one notice embracing all the three heads, to proceed by arbitration, according to ss. 25 & 68. There had been a treaty for compensation for the two former heads, but it did not appear to have been completed and carried out. There had been no treaty for compensation as to the third :—Held, that the nature of the compensation treated for being quite clear, the defendant could be restrained by injunction from proceeding under the notice he had given. Norfolk (Duke) v. Tennant, 9 Hare, 745 ; 16 Jur. 398.

Although the compulsory taking of land under the provisions of railway acts may, to a certain extent, and for certain purposes, place the company and the landowner in the relative position of vendor and purchaser ; yet it does not follow that a court of equity will decree the specific performance of such sales. Whether in a case depending exclusively on a notice to take lands given by a company, under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the court will interfere to compel the company to adopt the subsequent proceedings directed by the act for giving compensation to the landowner, quære. Adams v. London and Blackwall Ry., 2 Macn. & G. 118 ; 2 H. & Tw. 285 ; 6 Railw. Cas. 282 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 557 ; 14 Jur. 619.

In a case where such a notice had been followed by a claim to compensation on the part of the landowner and a subsequent agreement between the parties, which claim and agreement were, however, ultimately abandoned and repudiated on both sides, the court allowing a demurrer to a bill filed by the landowner, refused to interfere to compel the company, who were in possession of the land, to summon a jury :—Holding, that in this case the notice per se did not give the court jurisdiction, and that the rights of the parties were to be regulated by the provisions of ss. 68 and 85 of the Lands Clauses Act 1845. Ib.

Where Interest Uncertain.]—A railway company, under the powers of their act, gave notice to the lessees of a factory and buildings that they required a part of their premises. The lessees thereupon gave a counter notice, requiring the company, under s. 92 of the Lands Clauses Act to take the whole. The company took no further proceedings until the lease of the premises had expired. The lessees having remained in possession of the premises, the railway company, without serving any new notice on the defendants, had the value of their interest in the whole of the premises assessed, deposited the amount in court, delivered a bond, and entered into possession of a part of the premises under s. 85. The defendants, conceiving that the company had no right to proceed under s. 85, sent in a claim, and gave them notice to issue their warrant to the sheriff, to summon a jury to assess compensation under s. 68. The company thereupon filed their bill to restrain such proceedings. Negotiations had been entered into by the reversioners with the company and with the defendants, which rendered it doubtful to what interest in the premises the latter were entitled. On motion to dissolve an injunction, granted ex parte :— Held, that the injunction to restrain proceedings by the defendants, under s. 68 be continued until the rights of the several parties had been ascertained. L. & S. W. Ry. v. Coward, 5 Railw. Cas. 703 ; 1 H. & Tw. 377, n.

An incorporated company were improving a harbour under the powers of an act, whereof the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, were made part. In the course of the works a cofferdam was made, which temporarily prevented ships from approaching so near the warehouses adjoining the harbour as they had been accustomed to do. A lessee of such a warehouse claimed compensation for the damage thus occasioned to him to the amount of 65*l.*, or to have the same ascertained by arbitration. The court refused to grant an injunction restraining him from proceeding under the compensation clauses of the Lands Clauses Act. Sutton Harbour Improvement Co. v. Hitchins, 1 De G. M. & G. 171 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 73 ; 16 Jur. 70.

Where Taking not Authorised.]—A railway company, under the powers of their act, purchased a subsisting lease in lands, and they gave a notice to the plaintiff, the owner of the reversion in fee, for summoning a jury to assess the value of the fee-simple and inheritance thereof. The plaintiff filed his bill, insisting that the company were not authorised by their act to take more than a certain portion of the land, and praying an injunction to restrain them from proceeding to assess the value of the excess beyond that portion :—Held, that inasmuch as the contemplated proceedings would, if the company were not authorised by their act to take the land in question, be a nullity, and inasmuch as the entry and possession of the plaintiffs or derivative lessees was lawful, and no case being made of any sudden grievous injury done to the inheritance, the motion for the injunction must be refused with costs. Mouchet v. G. W. Ry., 1 Railw. Cas. 567.

The court will restrain a company from proceeding except with relation to what is included in their notice to the owners, and the jury from assessing the value of any other land than that for the purchase of which the owner has been required by the notice to treat ; the proceeding before the jury must be consistent with the precept and the precept with the notice. Stone v. Commercial Ry., 4 Myl. & C. 122 ; 1 Railw. Cas. 375 ; 3 Jur. 946.

Abandonment of Notice.]—Ten days before the expiration of the time for compulsorily taking lands, a railway company gave notice to the plaintiff of their intention to take his lands. They subsequently introduced a bill into parliament authorising them to abandon the undertaking, but they did not further proceed with it, and about sixteen months after the date of their notice, they served the plaintiff with a further notice of their intention to summon a jury to assess the value of his lands. He filed a bill to restrain the company from proceeding to act upon this notice, and a demurrer by the company was overruled. Hedges v. Metropolitan Ry., 28 Beav. 109 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1275 ; 3 L. T. 643.

A railway company in 1856 took possession of a meadow, a large part of which belonged to one owner and a small part to another, who did not know the position or the exact extent of his land. The company, in 1859 took a conveyance of the large part, on which conveyance the extent of the small part was stated. The company did not pay for the small part, and the owner, in 1868, brought an ejectment against the company, obtained judgment, and was put into possession. His possession was disturbed by the company, and he filed a bill to restrain them. The company offered to pay the value of the land, as in 1856, and interest thereon, which the landowner refused. The company then produced a notice to treat, given in 1856, and gave notice of their intention to proceed under that notice. The landowner filed a second bill to restrain them :— Held, that, under the circumstances, the company were not entitled to proceed under the notice to treat. Stretton v. Great Western and Brentford Ry., L. R. 5 Ch. 751 ; 23 L. T. 379 ; 18 W. R. 1078.

Where Proceedings pending as to Access to Land.] — The metropolitan board of works, under the powers conferred on them by the Thames Embankment Act, 1862, cut off from its river frontage a piece of land belonging to the defendant. The question of compensation was referred to an umpire, who made his award in the belief that the land had been made inaccessible to carriages by the embankment works. By s. 62, the board of works was bound to provide means of access to the land. The defendant filed a bill to compel them to make the land accessible to carriages, and at the same time commenced an action for the whole amount awarded. The board of works filed a bill for an injunction against the action :—Held, that the action must be restrained until the hearing of the cause. Metropolitan Board of Works v. Salisbury (Marquis), 26 L. T. 390 ; 20 W. R. 507.

1. What are.

Lands not required for Undertaking.]—The words "which shall not be required," in the heading prefixed to the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 127, do not refer to the period when the lands are acquired ; and s. 127 prescribes a period (in the absence of any such provision in the special act) at which a survey is to be taken as to what lands are not then required for the purposes of the undertaking. G. W. Ry. v. May, 43 L. J., Q. B. 233 ; L. R. 7 H. L. 283 ; 31 L. T. 137 ; 23 W. R. 141.

Semble, that lands adjacent to a railway station, occupied by granaries, coal-sheds and a public-house, let to tenants and used by them in connection with the traffic upon the railway, were "used for the purposes of the undertaking" within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act. Betts v. G. E. Ry., infra.

Semble, by Bramwell, L.J., where the natural drainage of land, belonging to a railway company and demised by them for agricultural purposes, flows into a reservoir used by them for the supply of water to their engines, the land is not superfluous within the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 127. Hooper v. Bourne, infra, in C. A.,

W. brought an action for trespass against a railway company in placing part of the pier of a bridge over their line upon his land. The land had been originally conveyed by the railway company as superfluous land to the plaintiff's predecessor in title, by a conveyance describing it as bounded by the railway on one side and certain cottages on the other. The railway was in a cutting, and the visible boundary of the land was a wall fourteen inches thick at the surface of the ground. This wall was in part a retaining wall, built to prevent the side of the cutting falling in, and was much thicker below the surface than above it. The pier complained of extended less than two feet from the visible boundary wall, and was built wholly upon ground lying vertically above the footings of the lower part of the wall:—Held, that the ground vertically above such footings was not land required for the purposes of the railway within the meaning of s. 127 of the Lands Clauses Act, which the company were unable to sell, and had passed to the plaintiff's predecessor under the description in the conveyance. Ware v. L. B. & S. C. Ry., 52 L. J., Ch. 198; 47 L. T. 541; 31 W. R. 228.

User or Intended User of Land.]—When lands acquired by a railway company under its compulsory powers are, at the expiration of the time prescribed by s. 127 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, found not to be required for the permanent purposes of the undertaking, they are superfluous lands within the meaning of that section, though they may, within that time, have been used for temporary purposes of the undertaking. G. W. Ry. v. May, 43 L. J., Q. B. 233; L. R. 7 H. L. 283; 31 L. T. 137; 23 W. R. 141.

The employment of such lands by the depositing upon them earth and spoil from a neighbouring cutting, which is allowed and intended to remain there without being of any further use to the railway, is, after the depositing of such earth and soil has ceased, a user for a temporary purpose. Ib.

Land which is taken compulsorily by a railway company for the purposes of its act, and which is bonâ fide retained by the company with a reasonable expectation of using it for such purposes, does not at the expiration of ten years from the time fixed for the completion of the works vest in an adjoining owner as superfluous land under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 127, merely because, from insufficiency of traffic, or from want of funds, the company cannot immediately apply it to such purposes, although it is in the meanwhile let out to yearly tenants, and applied to purposes for which it is in its then condition suitable. Betts v. G. E. Ry., 49 L. J., Ex. 197; 42 L. T. 1: 28 W. R. 50; 44 J. P. 282—H. L. (E.) Affirming 3 Ex. D. 182—C. A.

In an action of ejectment to recover lands from a railway company as superfluous, the question to be left to the jury is, whether a reasonable person with a knowledge of all the facts actually existing at the end of the ten years prescribed in s. 127, would then have been justified in coming to the conclusion that the lands would be required for the purposes of the company. Ib.

Where a railway company is authorised by its special act (with which the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, are incorporated) to acquire lands compulsorily and also for extraordinary purposes, land delineated in the parliamentary plans, and described in the books of reference, and purchased by the company pursuant to agreement, no notice to treat having been given, must be deemed to have been acquired under the provisions of the special act, and the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, within the meaning of s. 127 of the latter act; and although for some years after the purchase no works are constructed upon the land, yet if at a subsequent time it becomes useful for the purposes of the railway, it cannot be deemed to have been purchased for extraordinary purposes. Hooper v. Bourne, 47 L. J., Q. B. 437; 3 Q. B. D. 258; 37 L. T. 594; 26 W. R. 295—C. A. Affirmed, 49 L. J., Q. B. 370; 5 App. Cas. 1; 42 L. T. 97; 28 W. R. 493; 44 J. P. 327—H. L. (E.)

The mere fact that the land had not been built upon is not conclusive; all the circumstances must be considered. Ib.

The fact that the lands were in the neighbourhood of a populous town was a circumstance to raise a presumption that the lands would be wanted on account of increased traffic on the railway. Ib.

Per Lord O'Hagan:—An actual present intention to employ the land for the purposes of the railway need not have been formed within the prescribed time, in order to prevent a forfeiture at the end of it. Ib.

In a case of this kind the burden of proving a title to the land, as superfluous land, lies upon the claimant. And, semble, that the fact that they were so wanted in 1868 raised a reasonable presumption that in 1863 the want of them for railway purposes had been foreseen. Ib.

Per the Lord Chancellor (Earl Cairns):—If a railway company purchases land and the minerals under its surface, and the surface is not at that time wanted for the purposes of the railway, but afterwards becomes so, and can be used without requiring the support of the minerals, quære, whether there is any authority which requires the company to sell the minerals apart from the land, or, in default of such sale, vests them in the adjoining owner. Ib.

Not within Limits of Deviation.]—When lands are included in the plans and books of reference scheduled to a company's act, and are purchased after a notice from the company to treat, they are liable to vest in the owners of adjoining lands as superfluous lands, although they may not be included within the limits of deviation delineated on the company's plans. G. W. Ry. v. May, supra. And see Horne v. Lymington Ry., infra.

Time when Determined.]—If lands are not liable to vest at the expiration of the time mentioned in s. 127, they are entirely exempt from the provisions of the act applicable to the sale or to the vesting of superfluous lands. G. W. Ry. v. May, supra.

Undertaking Abandoned.]—The term "superfluous lands," in ss. 127 and 128 of the Lands Clauses Act, preceded by the expression "the lands which shall not be required for the purposes thereof," is sufficient to include the case of an undertaking being abandoned. Astley v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., 2 De G. & J. 453; 27 L. J., Ch. 478; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 567; 6 W. R. 561.

Sect. 127 of the Lands Clauses Act refers only to superfluous lands, and not to the case of the railway being abandoned or given up. Smith v. Smith, 38 L. J., Ex. 37; L. R. 3 Ex. 282.

Sect. 127 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, does not apply to the case of a derelict line of railway. Duffy's Estate, In re, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 307.

"Dispose of."]—A railway company compulsorily purchased portions of A.'s land for the purpose of a branch railway, but suffered their powers to expire without making it. Before the period of ten years, within which they were bound to dispose of superfluous lands, expired, they promoted a bill for enabling them to make another branch railway, and proceeded to carry on works on the above portions of his land for the purposes of the proposed branch line:—Held, that A.'s right of repurchase had not arisen, for that the words "dispose of," in s. 128 of the Lands Clauses Act, refer to a transfer of the land to some other person, not to its application to a new purpose. Astley v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., 2 De G. & J. 453; 27 L. J., Ch. 478; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 567; 6 W. R. 561.

What Interests in Land.]—A company became amalgamated with others; and the new company, after the period of ten years had expired, obtained an extension act, which provided that the respective periods by the several acts relating to the company limited for the sale of their superfluous lands should be extended for five years from the passing of the act, and those several acts should be read and construed as if that period had been fixed by each of those acts for that purpose:—Held, that the obligation to resell the surplus land applied to reversions or rather partial interests in land acquired by the company as well as to property in which they had acquired the fee-simple. Moody v. Corbett, 35 L. J., Q. B. 161; L. R. 1 Q. B. 510; 14 W. R. 737—Ex. Ch. S. C., in Q. B., 5 B. & S. 859.

Mines and Minerals.]—When lands which a railway company is authorised by its special act to take, have been conveyed to them, together with an express grant of the mines and minerals thereunder, although the surface may afterwards become superfluous by virtue of the Lands Clauses Act, s. 127, yet the mines and minerals do not vest in the adjoining owners. Hooper v. Bourne, 49 L. J., Q. B. 370; 5 App. Cas. 1; 42 L. T. 97; 28 W. R. 493; 44 J. P. 327—H. L. (E.)

Accommodation Works.]—A railway company bought from the plaintiff a small piece of land, the whole of which, according to their original plan, would have been covered by the embankment of the railway. Being obliged to provide a communication between severed lands of another landowner, the company altered their levels so as to narrow the embankment and leave unoccupied a strip of the land purchased from the plaintiff. This strip they turned into a road for the use of the other landowner. The plaintiff thereupon, before the period named for the sale of superfluous lands arrived, filed a bill to enforce a right of pre-emption as to the strip:—Held, that the land was not superfluous land, for that the making accommodation works which the company was compellable to make was one of the purposes of their acts, and that the plaintiff, therefore, had no title to relief. Beauchamp (Earl) v. G. W. Ry., 38 L. J., Ch. 162; L. R. 3 Ch. 745; 19 L. T. 189; 16 W. R. 1155.

Lands acquired by Voluntary Agreement.]—Lands taken compulsorily by the promoters of a railway, unless used or disposed of within the statutory period, are deemed superfluous lands, and as such vest in the adjoining owners. But this statutory rule has no application to lands acquired by voluntary agreement for extraordinary purposes arising incidentally. City of Glasgow Ry. v. Caledonian Ry., L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 160.

When lands are included in the plans and books of reference scheduled to a company's act, and are purchased after a notice from the company to treat, they are liable to vest in the owners of adjoining lands as superfluous lands, although they may have been purchased at a price settled by private agreement and without arbitration. G. W. Ry. v. May, infra.

A railway company, by its special act, obtained in 1856, was authorised to construct a railway and a landing-place, and also to purchase from the owners thereof, upon terms to be mutually agreed upon, a bridge across a river, together with all rights, lands, tolls and works connected therewith. The repair of the bridge was essential for the safety of the railway. The owners of adjoining land brought ejectment in respect of some of the land connected with the bridge, and not included within the limits of deviation of the railway, on the ground that it was superfluous land, which had become vested in them under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 127:—Held, that this section did not apply to land acquired, as this was, by purchase, nor to land obtained for this purpose; and that, therefore, the railway company did not forfeit its right to hold the lands sought to be recovered, although not used by the company for the railway. Horne v. Lymington Ry., 31 L. T. 167.

The right of pre-emption is confined to land acquired by a company under its parliamentary powers; but if the usual notice to treat has been given in exercise of the powers, the right is not lost in consequence of the price being subsequently settled by agreement instead of an award or an inquiry before a jury. Carington v. Wycombe Ry., L. R. 3 Ch. 213; 18 L. T. 96; 16 W. R. 494.

How Separated from Land Required by Company.]—"Superfluous land" must be land separated by a vertical, not by a horizontal, boundary from land required for the purposes of the company. Metropolitan District Ry. and Cosh, In re, 49 L. J., Ch. 277; 13 Ch. D. 607; 42 L. T. 73; 28 W. R. 685; 44 J. P. 393—C. A.

A railway company purchased land for the purpose of making an underground railway. They excavated the soil, constructed the line, and then built an arch over it, and replaced the surface over the arch:—Held, that the company were not authorised by s. 127 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, to sell the vacant space over the arch as "superfluous land." Ib.

Where a station is erected on arches on land taken for the purposes of a private act, the part of the land under the arches is not "superfluous land" within s. 127 of the Lands Clauses Act. Mulliner v. Midland Ry., 48 L. J., Ch. 258; 11 Ch. D. 611; 40 L. T. 121; 27 W. R. 330.

Time for Sale Extended by Statute.]—When lands had vested in the adjoining owners at the expiration of the time prescribed by s. 127, an act of parliament, passed in the following year, extending the time for the sale of superfluous lands belonging to the company, was held not to apply to those lands, though they were at the passing of the act in the ostensible possession of the company, or their lessees, as market gardeners. G. W. Ry. v. May, 43 L. J., Q. B. 233; L. R. 7 H. L. 283; 31 L. T. 137; 23 W. R. 141.

The words of a section extending the time for the resale will not be construed so as to defeat the vested rights which had arisen from the lapse of the time allowed for the resale. Moody v. Corbett, 35 L. J., Q. B. 161; L. R. 1 Q. B. 510; 14 W. R. 737—Ex. Ch. S. C., in Q. B., 5 B. & S. 859.

Evidence—Onus of Proof.]—The burden of proving a title to land, as superfluous land, lies upon the claimant. Hooper v. Bourne, 49 L. J., Q. B. 370; 5 App. Cas. 1; 42 L. T. 97; 28 W. R. 493; 44 J. P. 327—H. L. (E.)

—— Strip between Hedge and Fence.]—A railway company in 1838 bought part of a field under the powers of their act, and erected a post-and-rail fence on the boundary. They then made a ditch within the fence, and threw up a bank on which they planted a quickset hedge at the distance of four feet six inches from the fence. As the hedge grew up the fence was allowed to fall into decay, and about the year 1846 it was removed. From the year 1854 up to the commencement of this action in 1875, the strip of land between the quickset hedge and the site of the fence was occupied and cultivated with the remainder of the field, partly as an arable field and partly as garden-ground, the railway company in no way interfering with it except that their workmen went over it to trim the hedge:—Held, that the circumstances conclusively shewed the strip between the hedge and the line of the post-and-rail fence to be superfluous land within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 127, and that it had therefore vested in the owner of the rest of the field, and moreover, that the owner of the rest of the field had had such a possession of the strip in question as was sufficient to extinguish the title of the company under the Statute of Limitations. Norton v. L. & N. W. Ry., 13 Ch. D. 268; 41 L. T. 429; 28 W. R. 173—C. A.

—— Conveyance by Company not Conclusive.]—The mere fact of a railway company purporting to convey away lands acquired by them for the purposes of their undertaking is not conclusive to shew that the lands so conveyed are superfluous lands within the meaning of s. 128 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Therefore in an action brought by H. against both companies to establish his right of pre-emption under s. 128 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, in the lands conveyed, the ten years from the time fixed by the M. Company's acts for the completion of their works not having yet expired:—Held, that the mere fact of the conveyance was not sufficient to shew that the lands were superfluous within the meaning of that section; and that, inasmuch as it appeared from the evidence that had the lands remained in the hands of the M. Company they would not have been superfluous for the purposes of that company within that section, the plaintiff's right of pre-emption had not yet arisen. Hobbs v. Midland Ry., 51 L. J., Ch. 320; 20 Ch. D. 418; 46 L. T. 270; 30 W. R. 516.

Land acquired by a railway company for the purposes of their undertaking was within the period prescribed by statute for the sale of their superfluous land compulsorily purchased by another railway company:—Held, that such compulsory sale was not evidence that the land was superfluous land in the hands of the selling company within s. 127 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and that, consequently, the right of pre-emption under s. 128 did not arise. Carington v. Wycombe Ry. (37 L. J., Ch. 213; L. R. 3 Ch. 377) and Hobbs v. Midland Ry. (51 L. J., Ch. 320; 20 Ch D. 418) discussed. Dunhill v. North Eastern Ry., 65 L. J., Ch. 178; [1896] 1 Ch. 121; 73 L. T. 644; 44 W. R. 231; 60 J. P. 228—C. A.

—— Evidence of Attempted Sale.]—In an action against a railway company to recover a piece of superfluous land which the company was bound to dispose of within ten years after it had been acquired by the company, the plaintiff proposed to shew that thirteen years after that time the company put the land up for sale by public auction as superfluous land. In order to prove this fact the auctioneer was called, who deposed that he had received his instructions for the sale from one of the directors of the company, and also from a person who acted as their solicitor in former sales of land:—Held, that this was not even primâ facie proof that the sale was by the authority of the company, although more than twelve months had elapsed between the sale and the trial. Moody v. L. B. & S. C. Ry., 1 B. & S. 290; 31 L. J., Q. B. 54; 9 W. R. 780.

A description in an advertisement of sale of lands "as superfluous lands" is sufficient to stamp the lands with the character of superfluous lands. L. & S. W. Ry. v. Blackmore, 39 L. J., Ch. 713; L. R. 4 H. L. 610; 23 L. T. 504; 19 W. R. 305.

Lands used for Building Purposes.]—Lands used for building purposes must be lands actually laid out for that purpose at the time of their being taken by the railway. Coventry v. L. B. & S. C. Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 90; L. R. 5 Eq. 104; 17 L. T. 368; 16 W. R. 267.

And they will not be brought within the exception in s. 128, "as used for building purposes," merely by being marked out in plots for, and by being capable of being used for, building purposes, but must be connected with building purposes. L. & S. W. Ry. v. Blackmore, infra.

Lands within a Town.]—To bring lands within the exception in s. 128 as within a town, they must be encompassed by the buildings constituting the town. L. & S. W. Ry. v. Blackmore, 39 L. J., Ch. 713; L. R. 4 H. L. 610; 23 L. T. 504; 19 W. R. 305.

The terms of the exception of the Lands Clauses Act, s. 128, in respect of land situate within a town, or land built upon or used for building purposes, are not satisfied by the mere fact of the land taken being within the borough boundary of some town, or having upon it one or two houses, or being capable of use as building ground. But it must either belong to that part of the solum of a town which is surrounded or covered by continuous houses, or, if not situate in a town itself, be land covered with continuous buildings eodem modo in which the solum of the town may be described as so covered, or be land actually and de facto used for building purposes. Carington v. Wycombe Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 213; L. R. 3 Ch. 377; 18 L. T. 96; 16 W. R. 494.

2. Rights of Vendors and Adjoining Owners.

"Owner" of Land from which purchased Lands were Severed.]—The land purchased from the plaintiff was separated from the rest of his property by a high road:—Held, that he was nevertheless owner of the lands from which the purchased lands were originally severed, within the meaning of s. 128 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Hobbs v. Midland Ry., 51 L. J., Ch. 320; 20 Ch. D. 418; 46 L. T. 270; 30 W. R. 516.

Adjoining Owner.]—A person may be an adjoining owner to superfluous lands within s. 128 of the Lands Clauses Act, although he purchased such adjoining lands from the company itself. And, it would not be sufficient if his lands only touched the superfluous lands at a point. L. & S. W. Ry. v. Blackmore, 39 L. J., Ch. 713; L. R. 4 H. L. 610; 23 L. T. 504; 19 W. R. 305.

All adjoining proprietors have equal rights of pre-emption, and if there is one only, an inquiry will be directed whether any adjoining owners are desirous of purchasing. Ib.

When commonable lands have been inclosed under an award made pursuant to a local statute, passed subsequently to 41 Geo. 3, c. 109, and by the award the soil of the roads running between the allotments remains vested in the lord of the manor, if the land upon one side of a road becomes superfluous within the Lands Clauses Act, s. 127, it will vest in the lord of the manor, for the right to the grass and herbage arising upon the road under 41 Geo. 3, c. 109, s. 11, is insufficient to render the proprietor of the close upon the other side of the road an adjoining owner. Hooper v. Bourne, 47 L. J., Q. B. 437; 3 Q. B. D. 258; 37 L. T. 594; 26 W. R. 295—C. A. S. C., in H. L., supra.

Private land separated surplus lands of a railway from the lands of certain lessees who had a right of way over it, the ownership of the soil being in their reversioner:—Held, that they were nevertheless adjoining owners. Coventry v. L. B. & S. C. Ry., 37 L. J., Ch. 90; L. R. 5 Eq. 104; 17 L. T. 368; 16 W. R. 267.

Several persons were owners adjoining a piece of surplus land all in one piece:—Held, that they were each entitled to a pre-emption over the whole before any part of it could be sold to a stranger. Ib.

—— Mode of Apportionment.]—The Court of Queen's Bench having decided that the surplus land forfeited by the company must be apportioned among the adjoining owners according to a line drawn from the point where their boundaries met to the nearest point of the land actually used by the company:—Held, that this mode of apportionment was wrong, and that the land ought to be divided among the owners of the adjoining properties in proportion to the frontage of each; that is, the length of the line of contact of each property, if the line was made straight from the point of intersection of the boundaries on one side, to the point of intersection of the boundaries on the other. Moody v. Corbett, 35 L. J., Q. B. 161; L. R. 1 Q. B. 510; 14 W. R. 737—Ex. Ch. S. C., in Q. B., 5 B. & S. 859.

Acceptance not Necessary.]—If superfluous lands are not sold within the time prescribed by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 127, they, at the expiration of that time, vest in the owners of the adjoining lands, and no act is necessary on the part of such owners indicating their acceptance of such lands. G. W. Ry. v. May, 43 L. J., Q. B. 233; L. R. 7 H. L. 283; 31 L. T. 137; 23 W. R. 141.

Land offered for Sale before Ten Years.]—Although the right of pre-emption cannot be claimed in regard to superfluous land which remains in the possession of the company until the expiration of ten years from the time limited by its act for the completion of its works, yet, if the company at any earlier period offers the land for sale to a third party, the right arises at once. Carington v. Wycombe Ry., L. R. 3 Ch. 213; 18 L. T. 96; 16 W. R. 494.

The right of an adjoining owner to claim pre-emption of superfluous lands arises if within the ten years allowed by the act the company attempts to sell such lands. L. & S. W. Ry. v. Blackmore, supra.

Land applied to new Purpose before Ten Years.]—A railway company compulsorily purchased portions of A.'s land for the purpose of a branch railway, but suffered their powers to expire without making it. Before the period of ten years, within which they were bound to dispose of superfluous lands, had expired, they promoted a bill for enabling them to make another branch railway, and proceeded to carry on works on the above portions of A.'s land for the purposes of the proposed branch line:—Held, that A.'s right of repurchase, under s. 128 of the Lands Clauses Act, had not arisen, for that the words "dispose of," in that section, refer to a transfer of the land to some other person, not to its application to a new purpose. Astley v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry., 2 De G. & J. 453; 27 L. J., Ch. 478; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 567; 6 W. R. 561.

Whether Right is Personal only.]—The right of pre-emption of superfluous lands under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 128, is not confined to the proprietors from whom the company purchased, but devolves to future proprietors of the lands from which the purchased lands were severed. Carington v. Wycombe Ry., L. R. 2 Eq. 825; 15 L. T. 49; 14 W. R. 1018. See S. C., on appeal, supra.

An act of parliament gave a company power to buy lands for the purpose of its undertaking, and to resell any lands which it might purchase but not make use of, and directed it before selling any land, to offer the same to the person or persons of whom it was purchased, but it fixed no limit of time within which the sale of surplus land was to be made:—Held, that the right of pre-emption thus given was merely personal to an individual from whom land was purchased, and was extinguished on his death. Highgate Archway Co. v. Jeakes, 40 L. J., Ch. 408; L. R. 12 Eq. 9; 24 L. T. 567; 19 W. R. 692.

Statute of Limitations.]—A railway company in 1838 bought part of a field under the powers of their act, and erected a post and rail fence on the boundary. They then made a ditch within the fence, and threw up a bank, on which they planted a quickset hedge, at the distance of four feet six inches from the fence. As the hedge grew up, the fence was allowed to fall into decay, and about the year 1846 it was removed. From the year 1854 up to the commencement of this action in 1875, the strip of land between the quickset hedge and the site of the fence was occupied and cultivated with the remainder of the field, partly as an arable field and partly as garden ground, the railway company in no way interfering with it, except that their workmen went over it to trim the hedge:—Held, that (notwithstanding Searby v. Tottenham Ry., L. R. 5 Eq. 409), the owner of the rest of the field had had such a possession of the strip in question as was sufficient to extinguish the title of the company under the Statute of Limitations. Norton v. L. & N. W. Ry., 13 Ch. D. 268; 41 L. T. 429; 28 W. R. 173—C. A.

3. Sale and Disposition.

Before Offer to adjoining Owner.]—A railway company having, by the act of parliament incorporating them, a power to sell any lands which they might not require for their purposes, "provided always, that the said company, before they should dispose of any such lands, &c., should first offer to sell such lands, &c., to the person or persons whose premises should immediately join the lands, &c., proposed to be sold," &c., sold by public auction certain premises to the defendant, without having previously made any offer to sell to the owner of the adjoining premises. Defendant took that objection to the title, and then the company made the offer to the adjoining owner, which was declined. The company filed their bill for specific performance:—Held, upon a case at law sent from the Court of Chancery, that, by the subsequent offer to the owner of the adjoining premises, the company had a power to sell and convey the premises in question to the defendant. London and Greenwich Ry. v. Goodchild, 3 Railw. Cas. 507; 13 L. J., Ch. 224; 8 Jur. 455.

Held, upon the equity reserved, that the objection was one of conveyance and not of title, and that the company were not incapacitated from contracting to sell prior to the offer of pre-emption, but only from conveying; and that their neglect to make the offer prior to the contract was not such a misfeasance as to prevent them from enforcing the contract. Ib.

—— Conditions as to Title.]—A contract for sale of superfluous land of a railway company which had been conveyed by the company to the vendor contained a stipulation that the purchaser should assume and admit that everything (if anything was necessary) was done by the company to enable them to sell the land as surplus land, and should not call for or require production of any evidence to that effect; and a further stipulation that if the purchasers should fail to comply with the terms of the agreement the deposit should be forfeited to the vendor. The land was not situate in a town or used for building purposes. In the course of the investigation of the title the purchaser discovered that the prior owners had not waived their right of pre-emption; and as the vendor refused to remedy the defect, the purchaser brought an action claiming a return of the deposit and damages. The vendor then sold the land to one of the prior owners:—Held, that the purchaser was bound by the stipulations to admit the title of the company to sell to the vendor; and that as he had refused to abide by that stipulation he had broken the contract, and could not maintain the action, or claim a return of his deposit. Hamand v. Best, 48 L. J., Ch. 503; 12 Ch. D. 1; 27 W. R. 742.

Alienation of Land under Arch.]—A railway company, having the usual powers under their special act to take and use land for the purpose of the railway and works, cannot, whether for valuable consideration or otherwise, alienate for any purpose except the purposes of the act any portion of its land, not being "superfluous land" within s. 127 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and not being land taken for extraordinary purposes within s. 45 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, nor any easement over the same. Mulliner v. Midland Ry., 48 L. J., Ch. 258; 11 Ch. D. 611; 40 L. T. 121; 27 W. R. 330.

The B. railway company having, under their act, acquired land, constructed their railway, and erected a station which was partly built on arches, sold to their contractors their superfluous land, and also purported to convey to them without consideration a right of way under one of the arches leading to part of the land so sold though not being a way of necessity thereto. The contractors sold the land and alleged right of way to the plaintiff. The M. railway company had, under the said act, entered into a working agreement with the B. railway company, whereby, after the line was opened, the M. railway company were "to manage, work and use" the railway and works, and to develop the traffic. The M. railway company now required the arch in question as a closed yard for loading and unloading goods. In an action by the plaintiff to restrain the M. railway company from interfering with his right of way:—Held, that the alienation of the right of way under the act was ultra vires; that the M. railway company were entitled to use the land under the arch in the way proposed; and that, their title being prior to that of the plaintiff, who must be taken to have notice of the company's rights, his action could not be sustained. Ib.

Power of Sale in Act.]—A railway company had the usual power of selling superfluous lands. By a subsequent extension act, powers were given to the company of leasing and mortgaging, without limit as to time, such of these lands as were connected with the structure of the railway:—Held, that the extension act did not take away the power of sale and substitute powers of leasing and mortgaging, but amplified the power of sale by removing some of the restrictions upon it. Tomlin v. Budd, 43 L. J., Ch. 627; L. R. 18 Eq. 368; 22 W. R. 529.

Taking up Award, as to.]—Where under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 130, a reference took place to ascertain the price of certain superfluous land of a railway company, and the arbitrator, who was appointed and proceeded under the earlier sections of the statute, made his award, which the company refused to take up; the court, upon an application for a mandamus to compel the company to take it up, refused the writ. Jones v. South Staffordshire Ry., 19 L. T. 603.

Sale by one Company to another.]—The M. railway company having, under their special act passed in 1872, acquired for the purposes of their undertaking certain lands forming part of a farm belonging to H., purported, acting in excess of their parliamentary powers, to sell and convey the lands to the S. railway company under a bonâ fide arrangement by which they were to be held and used for the purposes of the undertakings of both companies:—Held, that the conveyance from the M. company to the S. company must be set aside as ultra vires. Hobbs v. Midland Ry., 51 L. J., Ch. 320; 20 Ch. D. 418; 46 L. T. 270; 30 W. R. 516.

Covenant to Reconvey—Validity.]—By a deed dated in August, 1865, which recited that the railway company were seised in fee-simple of certain land which was no longer required for the purposes of their railway, the company conveyed the land to G. in fee for 100*l.* and G. covenanted with the company that he, his heirs or assigns, would at any time thereafter whenever the land might be required for the railway or works of the company, and whenever thereunto requested by the company on a six calendar months' notice, and upon receiving 100*l.*, reconvey the land to the company:—Held, that the covenant reserved to the company an interest in the land, and that the sale was ultra vires and void, for that under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 127, land sold by a company as superfluous land must be sold absolutely without reserving any interest to the company. L. & S. W. Ry. v. Gomm, 51 L. J., Ch. 530; 20 Ch. D. 562; 46 L. T. 449; 30 W. R. 620—C. A.

A. conveyed land to B., reserving the minerals, and covenanted that in case he, his heirs or assigns, should at any time sell the minerals under the adjoining land, he, his heirs or assigns, would offer to B., his heirs or assigns, the reserved minerals at the same price per acre:—Held, that the covenant was not obnoxious to the rules against perpetuities, and the offer must be made in writing. Birmingham Canal Co. v. Cartwright, 48 L. J., Ch. 552; 11 Ch. D. 421; 40 L. T. 784; 27 W. R. 597.

A covenant by a purchaser of superfluous lands, sold under s. 127 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, to resell a strip of the land ten feet wide, at 4*l.* a perch, to the railway company when required, does not invalidate the conveyance of the whole plot of land sold by the company. L. & S. W. Ry. v. Gomm (20 Ch. D. 562) distinguished. Ray v. Walker, 61 L. J., Q. B. 718; [1892] 2 Q. B. 88.

A railway company on the 12th of July, 1867, conveyed certain superfluous lands, the period for the sale of which under their special act expired on the 13th of July, 1867, and the conveyance contained a covenant by the purchasers that they would pay the purchase-money on or before the 12th of July, 1869, with interest in the meantime; and by an indenture of even date and made between the same parties, it was declared that until the whole of the purchase-money and interest were paid the company should have a lien on the deed of conveyance and the lands therein comprised:—Held, upon a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, raising the question whether s. 127 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, had been satisfied, that, having regard to expressions in L. & S. W. Ry. v. Gomm (20 Ch. D. 562), to the effect that when land is sold as superfluous no interest in it can be retained by the company, the question was one of such doubt that it must be left open and not answered in a way which would force the title on a purchaser or prejudice the vendor's title. Thackwray and Young, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 72; 40 Ch. D. 34; 59 L. T. 815; 37 W. R. 74.

Restrictive Covenant.]—A railway company selling its superfluous land is at liberty to impose such restrictive conditions upon the user and enjoyment of the land as may most conduce to their advantage as vendors, and there is nothing in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to deprive them in this respect of the rights of ordinary vendors. Higgins and Hitchman's Contract, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 772; 21 Ch. D. 95; 30 W. R. 700; 46 J. P. 805.

Right to Support.]—Where a railway company has compulsorily purchased land with mines and minerals subjacent thereto, and subsequently sells a portion thereof as superfluous land, the purchaser from the railway company does not acquire the right of subjacent support for his surface, as against the owner of the mines and minerals, and therefore cannot maintain an action for damages against the mine owner for so working his mines as to cause injury to the surface and the buildings erected thereon. Pountney v. Clayton, 52 L. J., Q. B. 566; 11 Q. B. D. 820; 49 L. T. 283; 31 W. R. 664; 47 J. P. 788—C. A.

Land previously subject to Statutory Prohibition against Building.]—An Inclosure Act, passed in 1806, provided that no buildings should at any time thereafter be erected on a certain strip of land. In 1865 a railway company under their statutory powers acquired a portion of the strip of land for the purposes of their undertaking. A part of the land thus acquired became superfluous land, and the company in 1868 sold and conveyed the superfluous part to a purchaser who demised it to the defendant. The defendant in 1885 commenced building on the land:—Held, that the land acquired by the company was freed from the prohibition of building only for the purposes of the company's undertaking, and that, when part of it was sold as superfluous land, the prohibition of building revived in respect of that part. An injunction to restrain the defendant from building on the land in contravention of the provisions of the Inclosure Act was granted at the suit of an owner of adjoining land. Bird v. Eggleton, 54 L. J., Ch. 819; 29 Ch. D. 1012; 53 L. T. 87; 33 W. R. 774; 49 J. P. 644.

Sale of Surplus Lands with House thereon—Implied Obligation to Purchaser.]—A railway company sold a piece of their surplus land to the plaintiff together with a house, which they had allowed him to erect thereon. The house was close to their line of railway, which there ran over a series of arches, through two of which there was some access of light to two of the lower windows of the plaintiff's house. The company retained in their own hands lands on the other side of the railway opposite the plaintiff's house; and their conveyance to him contained a recital that all the land acquired by them other than that sold to the plaintiff would be required by them for the construction of their railway, and it contained no express grant of right, or covenant as to light. The defendant's predecessor in title afterwards acquired from the company, under a conveyance subject to any right of light which the plaintiff might have, the fee of the lands opposite the plaintiff's house, and erected buildings thereon, and he also took a lease of the arches. The defendant subsequently acquired this property, and blocked up the openings of the two arches nearest the plaintiff's house with hoardings :—Held, that the company, on selling a portion of their surplus lands to the plaintiff, had entered into an implied obligation not to do or permit anything on the land retained by them which would interfere with the plaintiff's reasonable enjoyment of the land he purchased, except what was required for the construction of their railway ; and that, the hoarding not being for that purpose, a mandatory injunction ought to be granted. Myers v. Catterson, 59 L. J., Ch. 315 ; 43 Ch. D. 470 ; 62 L. T. 205 ; 38 W. R. 488—C. A.

Tenant of Railway Company—Estoppel.]—A railway company acquired land for the purpose of their railway, but, not wanting it, let it from year to year to B. ; in consequence of their neglect to sell it, the Lands Clauses Act, s. 127, became applicable ; the adjacent landowner did not interfere, and B. continued tenant till his tenancy was determined by notice to quit. Before this he had let it to the defendant, who refused to go out on the ground that the company's title had ceased :—Held, that whatever was the effect of the section, there was evidence of B. holding under a new tenancy from year to year, after such section became applicable, that he would therefore have been estopped from disputing the company's title, and that therefore the defendant was also estopped. L. & N. W. Ry. v. West, 36 L. J., C. P. 245 ; L. R. 2 C. P. 553.

Creditor entitled to Order for Sale.]—An existing railway company was authorised to make an extension line, by an act which enacted that the capital might be raised by an issue of new shares, to be called extension shares, and that the works authorised by it should, for financial purposes, form a separate undertaking, and that the capital and new shares created under its powers should constitute a separate capital ; and that the profits of the extension line applicable to dividend should be wholly applied in payment of dividend on the extension shares ; and that the extension shareholders should not be entitled to dividends out of any other profits of the company, and that the company might raise by mortgage any additional sums not exceeding 28,000*l.* ; but not till all the extension capital had been subscribed for and half of it paid up ; and that the money raised by new shares or mortgage should be applied only for the purposes of the extension act. A contractor, to whom the company was indebted in respect of the construction of the original line, obtained judgment against the company, extended certain surplus lands acquired under the powers of the extension act, and then applied to the court for a sale :—Held, that the creditor was entitled to an order for sale ; for that, whatever might be the rights of the different classes of shareholders inter se, the lands were lands of the company, liable to be sold for payment of any judgment debts of the company. Ogilvie, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 336 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 174 ; 25 L. T. 860 ; 20 W. R. 226.

Upon a petition of a judgment creditor of a railway, an order was made, without directing inquiries, for a sale of surplus land of the company not required for the undertaking and not used for building purposes, which had been delivered in execution to the petitioner under an elegit, the registry of which was still in force. The company was ordered to execute a proper conveyance. Calne Ry., In re, L. R. 9 Eq. 658.

Priority—Surplus Lands—Debenture-holders.]—Sect. 23 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, does not give to creditors of a railway company in respect of mortgages, bonds, or debenture-stock, any lien or charge which they did not possess before the act, so as to entitle them to payment in priority out of the proceeds of surplus lands of the company, which have been sold on the application of the judgment creditors of the company. Hull, Barnsley and West Riding Ry., In re, 58 L. LETTERS.

Property in—Between Solicitor and Client.]—A solicitor is entitled to retain as his own property letters addressed to him by his client and copies in his letter-book of his own letters to the client, after the client has transferred the business to which such letters relate to other solicitors. Wheatcroft, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 669; 6 Ch. D. 97; 26 W. R. 69.

When the solicitor of a company writes a letter apparently on the behalf of the company, he has no such property in the letter as to entitle him to prevent its publication, although he swears that it was written in his private capacity. Howard v. Gunn, 32 Beav. 462.

—— Of Receiver.]—The receiver of a letter is the owner of it, and may use it for all lawful purposes: the only right which the writer of it has in reference to it is to restrain publication. Hopkinson v. Burghley, 36 L. J., Ch. 504; L. R. 2 Ch. 447; 15 W. R. 543.

The receiver of a letter has a sufficient property in the paper upon which it is written, to entitle him to maintain detinue for it against the sender, into whose hands it had come as a bailee. Oliver v. Oliver, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 139; 31 L. J., C. P. 4; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 512; 5 L. T. 287; 10 W. R. 18.

The property in and the right to retain letters remain in the person to whom they are sent; but the sender has still that kind of interest, if not property, in the letters which enables him to restrain their publication, unless it can be clearly shewn that such publication is necessary for the vindication of character. Lytton (Earl) v. Devey, 54 L. J., Ch. 293; 52 L. T. 121.

The sending of a letter bearing the character of a literary composition does not give the person to whom it is transmitted the right to publish it for his own benefit; otherwise, if published to vindicate his character from false imputations cast upon him by the writer. Perceval (Lord) v. Phipps, 2 Ves. & B. 19; 13 R. R. 1.

The receiver of a letter has at most but a joint property with writer, and possession does not give him licence to publish it. Pope v. Curl, 2 Atk. 342.

Addressed to Agent at Principal's Office—Compelling Agent to rescind Order to Post-office.]—B. was employed to manage one of L.'s branch offices for the sale of machines, and resided on the premises. He was dismissed by L., and on leaving gave the postmaster directions to forward to his private residence all letters addressed to him at L.'s branch office. He admitted that among the letters so forwarded to him were two which related to L.'s business, and that he did not hand them to L., but returned them to the senders. L. brought an action to restrain B. from giving notice to the post-office to forward to B.'s residence letters addressed to him at L.'s office, and also asking that he might be ordered to withdraw the notice already given to the post-office:—Held, that the defendant had no right to give a notice to the post-office, the effect of which would be to hand over to him letters of which it was probable that the greater part related only to L.'s business; and that the case was one in which a mandatory injunction compelling the defendant to withdraw his notice could properly be made, the plaintiff being put under an undertaking only to open the letters at certain specified times, with liberty for the defendant to be present at the opening. Hermann Loog v. Bean, 53 L. J., Ch. 1128; 26 Ch. D. 306; 51 L. T. 442; 32 W. R. 994; 48 J. P. 708—C. A.

Marked "Private."]—The defendant in an action cannot, by marking his letters "private," &c., impose upon the plaintiff, who had refused to hold any personal communication with him, any condition as to the way in which they might be used. Kitcat v. Sharp, 52 L. J., Ch. 134; 48 L. T. 64; 31 W. R. 227.

Reclaiming after Posting.]—A banker at Lyons posted a letter containing bills of exchange to D. in London, but before the departure of the mail he received a telegram from D., telling him to remit nothing. The banker accordingly sent to the post-office to reclaim his letter, which by the regulation of the French post-office he was entitled to do on complying with certain formalities. By mistake the formalities were not observed and the letter was forwarded to its destination. In the meantime D. had filed a petition for liquidation:—Held, that the property in the bills did not pass to the trustee. Cote, Ex parte, Dereze, In re, 43 L. J., Bk. 19; L. R. 9 Ch. 27; 29 L. T. 598; 22 W. R. 39.

Restraining Publication.]—Injunction granted on application of the executor to restrain defendant from publishing letters the property of the testator. Granard v. Dunkin, 1 Ball & B. 207; 12 R. R. 18.

Injunction to restrain the executor of the person to whom they were written, from publishing private letters without leave of the executors of the persons who wrote them. Thompson v. Stanhope, Ambl. 737.

Letters written by the plaintiff to the defendant, having been returned by him, with a declaration, that he did not consider himself entitled to retain them, the publication of copies taken before the return, without the knowledge of the plaintiff, was restrained by injunction, though represented by the defendant as necessary for the vindication of his character. Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swan. 403; 19 R. R. 87.

No injunction to restrain the publication of letters as painful to the feelings of the writer. Ib.

The publication of letters may be restrained, although not designed for profit. Ib.

The acts of the party may supply reasons for not restraining the publication of letters. Ib.

The principle of the equitable jurisdiction to restrain the publication of letters doubted, but semble, it is founded on a right of property in the writer. Ib.

The person receiving letters may destroy them. Ib.

In a suit to restrain the publication of private letters, the court granted an interlocutory injunction, although the plaintiff did not fully prove his title to relief, on the ground that to refuse an injunction would be to determine the whole suit on an interlocutory application. Andrew v. Raeburn, L. R. 9 Ch. 522; 31 L. T. 73; 22 W. R. 564. And see cases supra.

Restraining Opening.]—An injunction was granted restraining defendants from opening letters addressed to their predecessors in business, from whom they had obtained exclusive licences to work particular patents assigned. Schiele v. Brakell, 11 W. R. 796.

A., who had been for some years manager of a company carrying on business at 190, Regent Street, severed the connection, and set up in the same line of business at 203, Regent Street. Letters, some of them on his own private affairs, continued to be occasionally addressed to A., 190, Regent Street, as to which letters, forwarded by the post-office to 190, the company claimed the right of opening and deciding whether they were intended for A. or for themselves. Upon motion by A. to restrain the company from receiving and opening letters addressed "A., 190, Regent Street," and bearing no external indication that they were intended for the company, and also to restrain the postmaster-general from delivering letters so directed to any other than A.'s present address (203, Regent Street):—Held, that as against the postmaster-general, who had been improperly brought before the court, the motion must be refused; but that the company must give an undertaking until the hearing not to open, except in A.'s presence, letters addressed to him at 190, Regent Street, unless, after due notice, A. should not attend at the company's offices for the purpose by a specified hour. Stapleton v. Foreign Vineyard Association, 11 L. T. 77; 12 W. R. 976.

A plaintiff prayed an injunction to restrain the defendant from falsely representing that the latter was carrying on business in succession to, or in connection with him; the bill averred general acts of misrepresentation, but one case only was made out in which the defendant had opened a letter addressed to the plaintiff, answered it in his own name, and endeavoured to obtain the custom which that letter offered to the plaintiff:—Held, that though this raised a grave suspicion against the defendant, it was not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to an injunction. Edgington v. Edgington, 11 L. T. 299. And see Hermann Loog v. Bean, supra.

Adoption of the Act—Demand of Poll.]—At a meeting of the ratepayers of the district of W., duly convened by the defendants under s. 6 of the Free Libraries Act, 1855, a resolution in favour of the adoption of that act was carried. A poll was demanded on behalf of two ratepayers, but was not taken. A mandamus directed to the defendants having been applied for commanding them to adopt and carry out the provisions of the act within the district:—Held, that the common-law right to have a poll taken existed, and had not been taken away by the Free Libraries Amendment Act, 1877, and that, as the poll had never been taken, the resolution of the meeting was of no effect, and the act had not been properly adopted. Reg. v. Wimbledon Local Board, 51 L. J., Q. B. 219; 8 Q. B. D. 459; 46 L. T. 47; 30 W. R. 400; 46 J. P. 292—C. A.

Where the question is put to a meeting of ratepayers held under the Public Libraries Act, 1855, s. 8, whether the act shall be adopted for the parish, a poll can be demanded as of right. Reg.

v. St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, Vestry, 32 L. T. 558.

—— Requisition—Poll—Owners or Occupiers entitled to Vote.]—Under the Public Libraries Amendment Act, 1877, the persons to vote are "the inhabitants who would have to pay the assessment":—Held, that in cases where owners were made ratable in place of occupiers, the occupiers were nevertheless the inhabitants who would have to pay, inasmuch as the rates paid by the owners are, for the purpose of the qualification to vote, made attributable to the occupiers by the joint effect of s. 147 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and ss. 7 and 19 of the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869:—Therefore the mayor of the municipal borough of Croydon having received a requisition from ten ratepayers, under the provisions of the Public Libraries Act, 1866, calling upon him to ascertain the opinions of the ratepayers of the borough as to the adoption of the Public Libraries Acts, acted properly in issuing, under the provisions of the Public Libraries Amendment Act, 1877, voting papers to the occupiers, and not to the owners, of premises in the borough. Att.-Gen. v. Croydon Corporation, 58 L. J., Ch. 527; 42 Ch. D. 178; 61 L. T. 291; 37 W. R. 648; 53 J. P. 726.

Rate—Recovery of Arrears—Demand and Payment of less than proper amount—Mistake.]—The provisions of the Public Libraries Act, 1855, having been adopted by the parish of Wandsworth, a rate of 1*d.* in the pound was duly made and demanded of the London and South-Western Railway Company, assessed upon the full ratable value of certain lands occupied by them in the parish for railway purposes. The railway company thereupon claimed under s. 13 of that act to be assessed on only one-third of the ratable value, on the ground that the property was "land." The vestry clerk omitted to observe that only "lands used as arable, meadow, or pasture ground, or as woodlands or market-gardens or nursery-grounds," were exempted under this section from assessment at more than one-third of their full ratable value, and allowed the abatement; he also entered in the rate-book the amount of rate assessed on the remaining two-thirds of the company's property as "irrecoverable." The same abatement was given and a similar entry was made for three years. The new overseers of the parish, having discovered the mistake that had been made, demanded the arrears of rate on the two-thirds of the full ratable value; but these the company declined to pay, and upon the hearing of the summons taken out by the overseers the justices declined to issue a distress warrant for the amount:—Held, upon an application for a mandamus to the justices to issue their warrant, that the sums unpaid on the two-thirds of the full ratable value of the railway company's property were recoverable as arrears, and that the overseers were entitled to obtain a distress warrant for the loss of these arrears under 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, ss. 7 and 11, notwithstanding that a mistake of law had been made in the original demands and in the entry in the rate-book. Reg. v. Blenkinsop, 61 L. J., M. C. 45; [1892] 1 Q. B. 43; 66 L. T. 187; 40 W. R. 272; 56 J. P. 246.

1. GRANT.

By Parol.]—A beneficial licence to be exercised upon land may be granted without deed, and without writing. Taylor v. Waters, 7 Taunt. 374; 18 R. R. 499.

—— Of Right to Drain.]—A verbal licence is not sufficient to confer an easement of having a drain in the land of another to convey water, and such licence may be revoked, though it has been acted upon. Cocker v. Cowper, 1 C. M. & R. 418; 5 Tyr. 103.

Written Contract connected with Land—Breach.]—An action will lie for the breach of a written contract, by which A., for a valuable consideration, agrees with B. that B. may dig and carry away cinders from a cindertip, forming part of A.'s land, though the contract, not being under seal, is incapable of granting or passing an easement. Smart v. Jones, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 717; 33 L. J., C. P. 154; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 678; 10 L. T. 271; 12 W. R. 430.

Right to Shoot and take away Game.]—A grant of a right to shoot over land and to take away a part of the game killed is a grant of an interest in land and within the Statute of Frauds. Webber v. Lee, 51 L. J., Q. B. 485; 9 Q. B. D. 315; 47 L. T. 215; 30 W. R. 866; 47 J. P. 4—C. A.

To take away Goods.]—A., being on the eve of insolvency, made a bonâ fide verbal assignment of all his goods to B. in trust for the payment of his debts, and to hold the surplus for relations who had advanced money to him. An order was given by B., with A.'s consent, for sending the goods to an auctioneer for sale from time to time, and several portions were accordingly parted with and sold:—Held, that the successive deliveries were made under a mere licence to sell the goods from time to time, and that the property in the whole did not pass to B. Normansell v. Creft, 17 L. J., Q. B. 297.

A licence is not implied by law to a purchaser of goods (though sold under an execution or a distress), to enter upon the premises of the former owner and take them away, although they have remained there with his assent. Williams v. Morris, 8 M. & W. 488; 11 L. J., Ex. 126.

To Enter and Repair.]—In a lease of a newly-constructed grain warehouse there was a covenant by the lessor that he would during the term "keep the main walls and main timbers of the warehouse in good repair and condition." The lessee entered under the lease and stored grain in it in a reasonable and proper way. After a short time a beam which supported one of the floors broke, and ultimately the external walls sank and bulged outwards, and the lessor spent a large sum in repairing the premises. In an action by the lessor to recover from the lessee what he had thus expended:—Held, that the lessee had not been guilty of waste. Saner v. Bilton, 47 L. J., Ch. 267; 7 Ch. D. 815; 38 L. T. 281; 26 W. R. 394.

Held, also, that the covenant implied a licence by the tenant to the landlord to enter upon the premises for a reasonable time for the purpose of executing the necessary repairs. Ib.

A landlord in the absence of an express power is not entitled to enter upon the demised premises to repair. Stocker v. Planet Building Society, 27 W. R. 877.

To Eject.]—A licence given by a tenant to his landlord to eject him from the premises is void, as offending against 5 Ric. 2, st. 1, c. 8. Edridge v. Hawker, 50 L. J., Ch. 577; 18 Ch. D. 199; 45 L. T. 168; 29 W. R. 913.

To remove Fixtures.]—A plaintiff, a tenant of a house for a term of years, being possessed of shelves, stoves, ranges, ovens, boilers and other articles of household use, his own property, but annexed to the freehold, requested the landlord to purchase them at the expiration of the term, or let them remain for purchase by the incoming tenant, but to be taken away by the plaintiff if the tenant should refuse them. The landlord wrote an answer, declining to purchase, but adding, "I have no objection to your leaving them on the premises and making the best terms you can with the incoming tenant." The articles remained unsevered from the freehold till the entry of the new tenant, who came in under a demise from the same landlord, but who declined to take them. The plaintiff (after the tenant had been two months in possession) demanded liberty to enter and remove the fixtures, but the tenant refused permission; and the plaintiff thereupon brought an action for the hindrance, and trover against the tenant:—Held, that if the landlord's letter to the plaintiff amounted to a licence to take away the articles, yet not being under seal it was no valid grant of such privilege as against a new tenant in possession, and not party to the licence. Ruffey v. Henderson, 17 Q. B. 574; 21 L. J., Q. B. 49; 16 Jur. 84.

To lop Hedges.]—A parol demise of land reserved to the landlord "all the hedges, trees, thorn bushes, fences, with lop and top":—Held, that such reservation operated as a licence to enter the land for the purpose of cutting and carrying away the trees. Hewitt v. Isham, 7 Ex. 77; 21 L. J., Ex. 35.

By Will—Right of Way.]—A.'s and B.'s lands adjoined each other, A.'s land being on the south and B.'s on the north, and about the middle of the boundary was a gate into B.'s land at the end of a lane or road leading to this gate from the public street, and passing through A.'s land. On the eastern side of B.'s land adjoining the highway, was a house in a ruinous state, which was once, in 1830, a dwelling-house, and in the centre of B.'s land, equidistant from the gate and the house, and surrounded by a garden, was a separate building, then used as a kitchen for the house. The remainder of B.'s land had been partly and at different times garden, orchard, grass, &c. The owner of A.'s and B.'s premises, who died in 1830, by his will devised to his nephew, B.'s predecessor, the kitchen and garden. The will then continued as follows: "I will and direct that my nephew, John Harrison, shall have the privilege or right of a road for loading coals and dung, and other necessary things, through the gate to the kitchen and garden." This right of a road, which was the lane or road above mentioned, was at that time the only approach to the kitchen and garden. Shortly afterwards the remainder of the premises now occupied by B. came by inheritance into the possession of John Harrison, whereby he had other access to the highway through the ruined dwelling-house, though the only approach for a horse and cart was through the way in dispute. B., who carried on the business of a coal higgler, used the kitchen as a stable for his horse, and made use of the way with his cart and horse:—Held, that this grant of a right of way was merely a personal privilege for the life of the grantee; for that by the words of the devise merely a life estate in the easement passed, and it was manifestly the intention of the testator that the right should not extend beyond the lifetime of the devisee. Pym v. Harrison, 33 L. T. 796—C. A.

Supply of Water.]—A. and B. were tenants of adjoining premises under the same landlord. A. had a well upon his premises, from which B.'s premises were supplied with water by means of a pipe. Both premises, with others, were put up for sale by auction, in lots, one of the conditions being that each lot was subject to all rights of way and water and other easements (if any) subsisting thereon. A. and B. both purchased the lots of which they had been tenants. The vendor insisted that A. had purchased subject to B.'s right of water. A. filed a bill for a specific performance of the contract, without any liability to such easement:—Held, that B. had no easement or right of water, but merely a licence from his landlord during his tenancy; and that A. was entitled to the relief asked. Russell v. Harford, L. R. 2 Eq. 507; 15 L. T. 171.

To place Bathing-Machines.]—Before bathing-machines came into use, certain parts of the shore of Hastings had been used from time immemorial for the purpose of bathing. Subsequently an act was passed prohibiting persons from bathing from the shore, except from bathing-machines, the owners of which were obliged to obtain a licence from the local board for permission to ply for hire:—Held, that this licence did not confer a right on the proprietors of bathing-machines to place them on the shore without the permission of the owner of the shore. Mace v. Philcox, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 600; 33 L. J., C. P. 124; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 680; 9 L. T. 766; 12 W. R. 670.

To take Ice from Canal.]—A canal company, in consideration of the lessee's expenditure on certain ice-houses on the banks of the canal, granted a lease thereof, with licence to take ice from a part of the canal:—Held, that the licence was not exclusive, but that it was a grant of sufficient ice to enable the lessee to fill the ice-houses; and that, so long as the lessee was able and willing to take this quantity of ice, the lessors could not derogate from their grant by subsequent licences which would interfere with it. Newby v. Harrison, 3 De G. F. & J. 287 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 863 ; 4 L. T. 424 ; 9 W. R. 849.

To use Boats on Canal.]—The proprietors of a canal by a deed granted to the plaintiff the sole and exclusive right of putting or using pleasure-boats for hire on the canal :—Held, that this did not confer such an interest in the plaintiff as to give him a right of action against another person for using pleasure-boats for hire on the canal. Hill v. Tupper, 2 H. & C. 121 ; 32 L. J., Ex. 217 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 725 ; 8 L. T. 792 ; 11 W. R. 784.

Action by Licensee.]—A party claiming ownership in a field granted to the plaintiff a parol licence to search therein for minerals. The plaintiff, acting under this licence, dug pits in the field, and threw up sand and gravel, mixed with ore, which the defendant took away, professing to act under the authority of a third party. Before the defendant took away the sand, gravel, and ore, the party who gave the plaintiff the parol licence granted him a similar licence by deed :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain an action for the gravel, sand, or ore, as against the defendant, who was a wrongdoer. Northam v. Bowden, 11 Ex. 70 ; 24 L. J., Ex. 237.

Defence to Action of Trespass.]—Action for assault : plea, that the defendant was possessed of an office and premises wherein the plaintiff was trespassing, whereupon the defendant requested him to leave the office and premises, which the plaintiff refused to do, and thereupon the defendant gently removed him. Replication, that M. had instituted liquidation proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, in the county court, and had convened a general meeting of his creditors, to be holden at the office and premises in the plea mentioned, on the 3rd February, 1874, and the defendant was the solicitor of M. in such proceedings, and in and about summoning the meeting, which was duly held at the said time and place ; and the plaintiff, then being the solicitor and duly appointed proxy of T., a creditor of M., attended the meeting as such, and the defendant was present at the meeting as solicitor and on behalf of M., and officiated thereat as the duly elected chairman ; and a proof made under the proceedings by T., and a writing under his hand duly appointing the plaintiff his proxy in the matter of the proceedings, were produced to the defendant, then being such chairman, and afterwards and during the continuance of the meeting, and before its termination or adjournment, and whilst the plaintiff was lawfully attending the same as such proxy at the office and premises, the plaintiff refused to leave the same when so requested by the defendant, as he lawfully might for the cause aforesaid :—Held that the plaintiff was not a trespasser on the occasion. The defendant having given the plaintiff leave to be present at the meeting as proxy for a creditor, the latter had a right, coupled with an interest, entitling him to be on the creditor's premises. Vaughan v. Hampson, 33 L. T. 15.

2. REVOCATION AND DETERMINATION.

Nature of Licence.]—A licence under seal, if a mere licence, is as revocable as a licence by parol ; and a licence by parol, coupled with a grant of a nature capable of being made by parol, is as irrevocable as a licence by deed. Wood v. Ledbitter, 13 M. & W. 838 ; 14 L. J., Ex. 161 ; 9 Jur. 187.

But a licence by parol, coupled with a parol grant, or a pretended grant of something which can only be granted by deed, is a mere licence ; it is not an incident to a valid grant, and is, therefore, revocable. Ib.

A., being possessed of a close of land, on which was erected a stand, which overlooked a race-course, authorised the issuing of tickets for admission to that stand during the continuance of the races, one of which tickets was purchased by B. for valuable consideration :—Held, that A. had a right, without assigning any reason, and without offering to return the value of the ticket, to order B. to quit the stand, and, on his refusal, to remove him by force. Ib.

—— To warehouse Goods—Time given.]—A. allowed B. to stack timber upon a wharf adjoining the premises let to him by A., and the rent was paid partly in respect of this privilege :—Held, that such licence might also be considered as continued by C., and that it could not be revoked without allowing B. reasonable time to remove the timber. Cornish v. Stubbs, 39 L. J., C. P. 202 ; L. R. 5 C. P. 334 ; 22 L. T. 21 ; 18 W. R. 547.

Although a licence to place articles on the property of another may be revocable at any moment, the licensee is entitled to notice of the revocation, and to a reasonable time for the removal of the articles. Mellor v. Watkins, L. R. 9 Q. B. 400 ; 23 W. R. 55.

Where a party, on the 28th October, sold a rick of hay on his land, with the condition that it might remain there, and be carried away from time to time by the purchaser, up to Lady-day next :—Held, that this licence could not be revoked. Wood v. Manley, 3 P. & D. 5 ; 11 A. & E. 34 ; 9 L. J., Q. B. 27 ; 3 Jur. 1028.

To use Trench.]—An agreement to let a party have a trench for water, though given for a valuable consideration, if there is no conveyance, is a parol licence revocable at the will of the grantor. Fentiman v. Smith, 4 East, 107 ; 7 R. R. 533. S. P., Cocker v. Cowper, 1 C. M. & R. 418 ; 5 Tyr. 102.

To make Skylight.]—But a parol licence to put a skylight over the defendant's area (which impeded the light and air from coming to the plaintiff's dwelling-house through a window), cannot be recalled at pleasure after it has been executed at the defendant's expense ; at least not without tendering the expenses he had been put to ; and therefore no action lies as for a private nuisance arising from the existence of such skylight. Winter v. Brockwell, 8 East, 308 ; 9 R. R. 454.

To erect Weir.]—A parol licence, after it is executed at the expense of the grantee, is not countermandable by the grantor. Where, therefore, the plaintiff's father gave the defendant leave, by parol, to lower the bank of a river and erect a weir, whereby a part of the water which before flowed to the plaintiff's mill was diverted : —Held, that his son could not maintain an action against the defendant for continuing the weir, although his father, a few years after the licence was given, had required them to raise up the bank and pull down the weir. Liggins v. Inge, 5 M. & P. 712; 7 Bing. 682; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 202.

Partition of Pew.]—Action for disturbing the possession of a pew: plea, an agreement by the plaintiff with the defendant and A., being churchwardens, that they should make a partition and divide the pew into two unequal pews, and that the churchwardens should have licence to place parishioners in the lesser of them; and that the defendant and A. did, at their expense, so divide the pew, and place parishioners in the pew:—Held, that the agreement not being by deed, the licence thereby granted was revocable, though acted upon at the expense of the defendant. Adams v. Andrews, 15 Q. B. 284; 20 L. J., Q. B. 33; 15 Jur. 149.

Irrevocable.]—A licence to be exercised upon land for twenty-one years, granted for a valuable consideration and acted upon, cannot be countermanded. Walter v. Harrison, 4 M. & W. 538; 1 H. & H. 405; 2 Jur. 1019. See preceding case.

An auctioneer who is employed to sell goods on the premises of the proprietor has not such an interest in the goods as will make a licence to enter on the premises irrevocable. Taplin v. Florence, 10 C. B. 744; 20 L. J., C. P. 137; 15 Jur. 402.

A parol agreement, by which a person is authorised to enter on premises, cannot make the licence to enter irrevocable. Ib.

Method of Determination.]—The locking a gate, through which parol leave has been given to pass, is of itself a sufficient notice of revocation of the leave. Hyde v. Graham, 1 H. & C. 593; 32 L. J., Ex. 27; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1229; 7 L. T. 563; 11 W. R. 119.

The plaintiff and the defendant having agreed, on a dispute existing between them as to a right of way, that the defendant should use the way, ad interim, without prejudice, until it should be determined how the question should be settled:—Held, the plaintiff having locked the gate, and the defendant broken the lock, that the equitable position of the parties was not such as to bar an action of trespass at common law. Ib.

—— Assignment.]—A licence is determined by an assignment of the subject-matter in respect of which the privilege is to be enjoyed. Coleman v. Foster, 1 H. & N. 37; 4 W. R. 489.

By a lease not under seal A. and B., trustees on behalf of themselves and the other proprietors of a theatre, demised it to C. for three years, reserving to themselves and the other proprietors free liberty of admission to the theatre. C., by lease not under seal, let the theatre to the plaintiff for two nights, subject to the terms on which he held the theatre:—Held, that the licence was determined, and that an action of trespass might be maintained by the plaintiff against the defendant, a proprietor, who entered the theatre during his tenancy. Ib.

—— Completion of Work.] — Action for entering the plaintiff's close, and cutting down the sides of a sluice or a goit there, and widening the same. Plea, justifying the trespass under a deed by which the plaintiff demised land to W. S. and G. S. (under whom the defendant claimed) for 999 years, and by which power was given to them to cut a goit or a sluice through the plaintiff's close in a certain direction, and power from time to time during the term to repair and amend the goit or sluice, making reasonable satisfaction to the plaintiff for damage done to the grass of the plaintiff; provided that for the term of two years from the commencement of the rent no trespass or damage should be charged or paid for. Replication, that before the expiration of two years from the commencement of the rent, and during the term, W. S. and G. S., in the exercise of the power, cut, made, and completed a goit or a sluice in such direction as in the deed mentioned, and through the close in the deed, being the goit or sluice in the declaration and in the plea mentioned, which goit or sluice was of the width in the plea mentioned; and that the goit or sluice so remained and continued in that state and condition, was used and enjoyed until the defendant, under colour of the deed, and in pretended further exercise of the power, broke and entered the close of the plaintiff:—Held, that the power given in the deed to make a goit or a sluice, having been once exercised, was exhausted, and therefore the replication was good. Bostock v. Sidebottom, 18 Q. B. 813; 16 Jur. 1013—Ex. Ch.

Revocation—Breach—Action by Licensee.]—The right of a licensor to revoke a licence granted by him may co-exist with the right of the licensee to maintain an action against the licensor for breach of contract committed by him in revoking the licence. Wood v. Ledbitter (14 L. J., Ex. 161; 13 M. & W. 838) distinguished. Kerrison v. Smith, 66 L. J., Q. B. 762; [1897] 2 Q. B. 445; 77 L. T. 344.

A. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. Nature of Right.

Nature of Right.]—The rules with respect to lien are the same in equity as at law. Oxenham v. Esdaile, 2 Y. & J. 493; 5 D. & R. 49; 3 B. & C. 225.

The question whether a tradesman has a lien on goods in his hands for his general balance, or only for so much as relates to the particular goods, is decided on the same grounds at law and in equity. To extend it, the party must shew an agreement, or something from which to infer an agreement. Gladstone v. Birley, 2 Mer. 404.

The right of lien is not the result of an express contract; it is given by implication of law. Chambers v. Davidson, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 158; 36 L. J., P. C. 17; L. R. 1 P. C. 296; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 967; 15 W. R. 34.

The right of lien arises either by implication of law, or by express contract between the parties. Kirchner v. Venus, 12 Moore, P. C. 361; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 395; 7 W. R. 455.

Voluntary Exertions.]—A quantity of timber placed in a dock on the bank of a navigable river, being accidentally loosened, was carried by the tide to a considerable distance, and left at low water upon a towing-path. A. finding it in that situation, voluntarily conveyed it to a place of safety—beyond the reach of the tide at high-water:—Held, that A. had no lien on the timber for the trouble or expense to which he might have put himself in the carriage of it; but was liable to an action of trover unless he delivered it up to the owner, on demand, though nothing was tendered him by the owner by way of compensation. Nicholson v. Chapman, 2 H. Bl. 254; 3 R. R. 374.

Question of Contract—Parties.]—T. & Co., owners of flats or barges at Liverpool, were employed by H. & Co. to carry certain copper-ore to L., an owner of crushing-mills at Birkenhead, who, in consideration of being employed to crush the ore, agreed to indemnify H. & Co. against all risk in the transit. Whilst on its way to Birkenhead, the barge with the ore on board foundered in the river. T. & Co. thereupon gave notice of the loss to H. & Co., and requested to be employed to raise the cargo, to which a clerk in the employ of H. & Co. replied, "We have nothing to do with it: you had better see Mr. L. He has the management of it." T. & Co. then went to L., who said, "Oh. I am all right. I am insured with M.;" and in answer to a suggestion of T. & Co. as to the necessity for prompt action, he added, "You had better prepare for getting it up; but you must go to M. for orders." T. & Co. then went to M., who said, "You had better go on with it, and do the best you can for us." T. & Co. thereupon proceeded with the work, and, after incurring great labour and expense, succeeded in recovering the ore. H. & Co. afterwards tendered the sum agreed to be paid for the carriage of the ore to Birkenhead, and demanded it; but T. & Co. refused to part with it, claiming a lien upon it for the expenses incurred in raising it from the bottom of the river:—Held, that there was no contract for the work done, as between T. & Co. and H. & Co. in respect of which such claim of lien could be sustained. Castellain v. Thompson, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 105; 32 L. J., C. P. 79; 7 L. T. 424; 11 W. R. 147.

A. put a phaeton into the possession of M. for him to paint it, and paid M. beforehand for the painting. M. never painted it, but placed it on the premises of B., where it stood three months:—Held, that B. had no lien on the phaeton for his charge for the standing of it, unless the jury was satisfied that M. had placed it there by the authority of A. Buxton v. Baughan, 6 Car. & P. 674.

By an agreement between A. and B., A. agreed to exert himself to prove that B. was entitled to certain property in India, for which A. was to have half the value of what might be recovered. A. succeeded in recovering a certain amount, which was sent home to the correspondents in London of a firm in Calcutta, who acted for A. in the matter. Upon demurrer to a bill to declare A.'s right to half the amount under the agreement:—Held, that A. had no lien on the fund. Alexander v. Hammond, 3 W. R. 145.

Contract to spend Money on Land partially Performed.]—A man who enters into a contract to expend a certain sum of money on land, and after spending part of it declines to perform the contract, has no lien on the land for the money which he has expended. Wallis v. Smith, 21 Ch. D. 243; 47 L. T. 389. S. C., in C. A., 52 L. J., Ch. 145; 21 Ch. D. 243; 47 L. T. 389; 31 W. R. 214.

A. agreed to grant a lease to B., who was to enter at once and expend money on improvements, with a proviso that if he failed within three months to grant a valid lease he would repay to B. the amount of his outlay, and from and after such failure B. should be at liberty to quit, and the agreement should cease except as to B.'s right to payment. A. being unable to grant a lease for want of title:—Held, that B. had a lien on A.'s interest in the premises for his outlay. Middleton v. Magnay, 2 H. & M. 233; 10 L. T. 408; 12 W. R. 706.

Club Premises—Improvements.]—At a general meeting of the members of a club, a resolution was passed authorising the managing committee of the club to raise 1,000*l.* for the purpose of improving and adding to the buildings of the club-house, and providing the necessary fittings and furniture therefor; the committee, being unable to raise the money by a mortgage of the club property, raised it on the guarantee of some individual members of the committee; the money was expended for the purposes aforesaid, and the members of the club enjoyed the advantages of the improvements made and the furniture so bought. The individual members of the committee having had personally to pay the amount so raised:—Held, that they had a lien or charge on the club premises so added to and improved, and on the furniture and all the other property of the club acquired or purchased by the money advanced by them, and the court decreed payment, or in default gave them liberty to apply for a sale of such property. Minnitt v. Talbot (Lord), 1 L. R., Ir. 143.

Land—Money spent on Alterations and Repairs.]—The plaintiff was entitled to a rent-charge created by a deed of 1778, which contained a power on nonpayment to enter upon the premises charged, and receive the rents until satisfaction of all arrears of the rent-charge, "together with all such costs, charges, and expenses as should be laid out and expended by him, or occasioned by reason of the nonpayment thereof." In 1844, the rent-charge being in arrear, and the property so dilapidated as to be unproductive, the plaintiff entered into possession and expended money in repairs:—Held, that he had no lien on the land for the moneys so expended, whether the defendant, the owner of a subsequent rent-charge, had notice of such repairs and had acquiesced in the making thereof or not, and that the remedy of the plaintiff, if any, was at law, and depended on the construction of the deed of 1778. Hooper v. Cooke, 25 L. J., Ch. 467; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 527—L.JJ.

A father, an equitable owner of land, erected a granary thereon; he afterwards allowed his sons to use and occupy it, and they erected other buildings thereon, at a great expense:—Held, that the sons had a lien on the premises for their outlay. Unity Mutual Banking Association v. King, 25 Beav. 72; 27 L. J., Ch. 585; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 470; 6 W. R. 264.

Real Estate—Bond Debt and Interest.]—In 1806 a bond was executed by A. in favour of B., and by a contemporaneous settlement it was settled by B., the obligee, upon certain trusts. By his will, dated in 1812, A., the obligor, charged his real and personal estate with payment of the bond debt. He shortly afterwards died. The plaintiff claimed, as assignee of the bond, a valid equitable lien on the obligor's real estate in respect of the bond debt and interest. The defence was, that the obligor died possessed of personal estate amply sufficient to pay the bond debt and interest, and that the plaintiff's predecessors in title ought to have obtained payment out of such personal estate, and that not having done so, they waived their right to have recourse to the real estate:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a valid charge in equity for the amount of the bond and interest upon the real estate of the obligor. Justice v. Fooks, 57 L. T. 868.

—— Payment of Rent by Lessee—Salvage.]—A. being lessee of certain lands under a lease containing the ordinary covenants by him as lessee for payment of rent, and a condition of re-entry in case of nonpayment, assigned his interest under the lease to B., who covenanted with A. to pay the rent and to keep him indemnified against it. B. mortgaged the premises comprised in the lease to C. by way of sub-demise. Arrears of rent became due which the lessor compelled A. to pay under the covenant in the lease. In an action against B. and C., A. sought for a declaration that the sum so paid by him for rent was a salvage payment, and was charged on the premises in priority to C.'s mortgage:—Held, that A. had no interest in the premises authorising him to make a salvage payment, and that therefore he had no lien on the premises for the rent so paid by him. O'Loughlin v. Dwyer, 13 L. R., Ir. 75.

Sum paid to take Goods out of Pawn.]—A. delivered to B. a pawnbroker's duplicate, for B. to take some goods of A.'s out of pledge. B. did so, but on A. sending to B. for the goods, B. said that he had not got them, and refused to tell who had:—Held, that, if after this trover was brought against B., he could insist on a lien on the goods for the money he had advanced to get them out of pledge. Jones v. Cliff, 5 Car. & P. 560.

Not gained by Tort.]—A party cannot acquire a lien by his wrongful act. Madden v. Kempster, 1 Camp. 12.

Therefore, goods delivered to a person claiming them wrongfully, who pays freight and other charges, cannot be detained for those expenses against the rightful owner. Lempriere v. Pasley, 2 Term Rep. 485.

Where no Possession.]—A party cannot have a lien on goods if he never was in possession of them or their produce, whatever equitable interest he may have had. Heywood v. Waring, 4 Camp. 291.

There can be no lien upon any property unless it is in the possession of the party who claims the lien. Shaw v. Neale, 6 H. L. Cas. 581; 27 L. J., Ch. 444; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 695; 6 W. R. 635.

A bailee can have no lien on a chattel, where, by the essence of the contract, he has no right to the uninterrupted possession of it. Jackson v. Cummins, 5 M. & W. 342; 8 L. J., Ex. 265; 3 Jur. 436.

The general rule of the civil law is, that possession of movables is not necessary to the validity of a lien, whether created by contract or act of law, and that such lien will attach upon movable property, even in the hands of a bonâ fide purchaser, without notice. Tatham v. Andree, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 386; 2 N. R. 554; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1019; 9 L. T. 2; 12 W. R. 22.

Lien may exist after possession determined; as after the death of tenant for life, of a West India estate for supplies provided by him. Scott v. Nesbitt, 14 Ves. 442; 9 R. R. 318.

Debt partly barred by Statute.]—A person has a lien on goods for a debt, though his remedy for part of it is barred by the Statute of Limitations. Spears v. Hartly, 3 Esp. 81. See also Broomhead, In re, 5 D. & L. 52; 16 L. J., Q. B. 355.

By whom given—Extent of.]—A person can only give a lien on deeds as against himself, and to the extent of his own interest. Turner v. Letts, 20 Beav. 185; 24 L. J., Ch. 638; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1057; 3 W. R. 352, 494. S. P., Wilson v. Anderton, 1 B. & Ad. 450; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 48.

No Right of Sale under.]—The lien at law upon a chattel for a portion of the price unpaid confers no right of sale upon the person having such lien, although the retention of the chattel may be attended with expense. Thames Ironworks Co. v. Patent Derrick Co., 1 Johns. & H. 93; 29 L. J., Ch. 714; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1013; 2 L. T. 208; 8 W. R. 408.

Right to Possession.]—A shipping agent having a lien on a bill of lading on goods which he had shipped, may, if the lien is not satisfied before the goods have reached their destination, have them brought home in order to retain his lien on them, and is not liable to any action for so doing. Edwards v. Southgate, 10 W. R. 528.

Set-off against.]—In trover for certain ironwork, the defendant set up as a defence a lien on the ironwork, for work done to it at the plaintiff's request:—Held, that a claim of set-off to a larger amount on the part of the plaintiff was no answer to the lien, unless it had been agreed between the parties that the one should be deducted from the other. Pinnock v. Harrison, 3 M. & W. 532; 1 H. & H. 114; 7 L. J., Ex. 137.

Custody of Goods.]—An innkeeper retaining the goods of his guests by virtue of such lien is not bound to use greater care as to their custody than he uses as to his own goods of a similar description. Observations on Cowell v. Simpson, (16 Ves. 275). Angus v. McLachlan, 52 L. J., Ch. 587; 23 Ch. D. 330; 48 L. T. 863; 31 W. R. 641.

Where an employer pays a builder sums of money during the progress of the work exceeding the value of the work actually done, and the builder becomes bankrupt before completion, the employer has no lien on the materials that are intended to be used in the work for the sums over-advanced. Tripp v. Armitage, 4 M. & W. 687; 1 H. & H. 442; 8 L. J., Ex. 107; 3 Jur. 249.

2. AGREEMENT FOR.

Must be Clear.]—To constitute a lien on any property, there must be a clear agreement for the specific appropriation of that property. Jones v. Starkey, 16 Jur. 510.

Effect of.]—If a mercantile relation which might involve a lien is created by a written contract, and security given for the result of the dealings in that relation, the express stipulation and agreement of the parties for security exclude lien, and limit their rights by the extent of the express contract that they have made. Chambers v. Davidson, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 158; 36 L. J., P. C. 17; L. R. 1 P. C. 296; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 967; 15 W. R. 34.

Personal Licence.]—The plaintiff's intestate bought a coach of the defendant, and gave him bills for the price, and agreed that the defendant "do have and hold a claim upon the coach until the debt be duly paid." One of the bills being dishonoured, and the testator dead, the defendant obtained possession of the coach by a trick:—Held, that the agreement operated as a mere personal licence from the testator to the defendant to obtain possession of the coach, and would have been a defence to an action brought by the testator, but was not available after the property had been transferred to the administrator. Howes v. Ball, 7 B. & C. 481; 1 M. & Ry. 288; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 106; 31 R. R. 256.

Licence to Seize.]—The plaintiff having a cow at grass in the defendant's field, and being indebted for the agistment, agreed with him that the cow should be a security, that he would not remove her till the defendant was paid, and that, if he did, the defendant might take her wherever she might be, and keep her till he was paid. The plaintiff removed the cow, not having paid the debt, and the defendant seized her in the high road. In trespass for the taking:—Held, that the agreement might be set up as a defence under a plea that the cow was not the plaintiff's. Richards v. Symons, 8 Q. B. 90; 15 L. J., Q. B. 35; 10 Jur. 6.

Nature of Possession.]—Where A. pledges a chattel with B., and pursuant to an agreement made between them at the time, A. has the possession of it for a limited period, for the use of B.; and at the end of such period it is returned to its ordinary place of custody, B. does not forfeit his lien, the possession of A. being, in such case, the possession of B. Reeves v. Capper, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 136; 6 Scott, 877; 1 Arn. 427; 2 Jur. 1067.

Nature of Security.]—A. being possessed of an old vessel, sent her to B.'s yard to be repaired. B. agreed to find timber for the repairs, and materials were accordingly supplied by B. and other persons to the amount of 200*l*. The vessel was repaired in B.'s yard with these materials, but no work was done upon her either by B. or the other creditors. On the vessel being advertised for sale B. and the other persons insisted that she should not be removed until they were paid. A.'s agent assented, and said they should be paid out of the purchase-money, and signed an authority to the auctioneer to that effect. The sale then proceeded, and the vessel was knocked down to C. for 300*l*. Immediately after the sale, B. and the other creditors applied to C. for payment, and he promised that he would, the following Thursday, bring the purchase-money for the auctioneer to pay the creditors with. C. did not do so:—Held, that the agreement for payment of the repairs out of the purchase-money, of which C. was cognisant, and to which he had assented, precluded him from maintaining trover until such payment was made. Norris v. Williams, 1 C. & M. 842; 2 L. J., Ex. 257.

In December, 1861, a bankrupt contracted with W. to build a barge for him, to be paid for in bricks; the barge to be completed on the 5th of June, 1862. The bankrupt hired a yard for a certain number of months for the purpose of performing the contract, which period expired before the completion of the work. In June it was agreed by the bankrupt in writing that the barge should be held as a security by W. for advances made by him; and in July the bankruptcy took place. The advances made by W. having exceeded the amount of work done and material supplied by the bankrupt:—Held, that W. had a lien upon and was entitled to the custody of the barge, unless the assignees chose to complete the contract. Watts, Ex parte, Attwater, In re, 1 N. R. 170; 32 L. J., Bk. 35; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 238; 7 L. T. 585—L.C.

B. & Co. agreed to build a ship for A. To enable them to proceed with the work, and before the agreement was signed, C. advanced money on the understanding that he should have an assignment of the agreement, and a lien upon the ship. The agreement was cancelled. B. & Co. then agreed to sell the vessel, which was in an unfinished state, to C. Four days previously they had stopped payment, and shortly afterwards were made bankrupts:—Held, that C. was entitled to a lien upon the ship. Swainston v. Clay, 32 L. J., Ch. 503; 8 L. T. 563; 11 W. R. 811—L.JJ.

To detinue for title-deeds, the defendant pleaded that K. was seised of the messuages to which they related, and devised them to D. for life, who agreed with the defendant to sell him all her interest therein; that before this agreement the deeds were in the custody of the defendant as D.'s agent, and that upon the making of the agreement E. left them in the possession of the defendant, that he might hold them till the agreement was performed:—Held, that this statement did not shew, with sufficient certainty, any contract whereby the defendant acquired a lien on the deeds. Robertson v. Shoveler, 13 M. & W. 609; 2 D. & L. 687; 14 L. J., Ex. 120.

Appropriation of Cargo.]—A. opened an account with a bank, it being agreed that he should be allowed to overdraw to a certain amount, but that for further overdrafts beyond that amount he should find security. A. overdrew beyond the specified amount without depositing any security. The bank pressed for payment of the whole, or at least a portion of the balance. A., in reply, wrote to the manager to state, that the arrival of the ship "Tagus," which was daily expected, would put him in ample funds to adjust the account, and inclosed a policy on the cargo of the "Tagus" for 5,000*l.*, indorsed payable to the manager of the bank:—Held, that this was not such a specific appropriation of the cargo of the "Tagus" as would give the bank a lien upon it in preference to other creditors of A. Jones v. Starkey, 16 Jur. 510.

To constitute a lien on any property, there must be a clear agreement for the specific appropriation of that property. Ib.

Mortgage of Public-house—Balance due to Brewer.]—By agreement between A., a publican, and B., a brewer, it was stipulated that A. should deposit the lease of his house with B. as security for an advance of 150*l.*, for which A. had given B. a promissory note, payable on demand, and B. engaged not to call upon A. to pay the 150*l.* for two years, on condition that the interest thereon should be duly paid half-yearly; that the rent should be paid agreeably to the covenants of the lease, and that A. should take of B. all the beer consumed on the premises, and pay for it every twenty-eight days. The agreement then provided, that in case of failure on the part of A. to perform any or either of the conditions after fourteen days' notice, B. should be at liberty immediately to put the note in force, and if not paid with interest, to sell the lease, and that the expenses attending such sale, together with the principal and interest due on the note, should be deducted from the amount realised by such sale, as also any account that might be then due and owing for beer:—Held, that the power of sale not having been exercised, on payment or tender of the principal and interest due on the note, A. (or his assignee) was entitled to maintain detinue for the lease; and that B. could not set up a lien on it for the balance due on the beer account. Chilton v. Carrington, 15 C. B. 95; 3 C. L. R. 138; 24 L. J., C. P. 10; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 89; 3 W. R. 17.

3. General Liens.

How Established.]—A right of general lien can only be established either by contract express or necessarily implied, or by custom; and such a custom in a particular trade is not established by mere evidence of the popular opinion of the members of that trade that a right of general lien was or ought to be a privilege of their trade. Spotten, In re, Provincial Bank, Ex parte, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 412.

The law does not favour general liens, and a general lien can only be claimed as arising from dealings in a particular trade or line of business, such as wharfingers, factors and bankers, in which the existence of a general lien has been judicially acknowledged, or in other trades where there is express evidence of custom. Bock v. Gorrissen, 2 De G. F. & J. 434; 30 L. J., Ch. 39; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 81; 3 L. T. 424; 9 W. R. 209. S. P., Leuckhart v. Cooper, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 99; 3 Scott, 521; 6 L. J., C. P. 131.

Excluded by Terms of Special Contract.]—Foreign correspondents of a London firm directed the firm to purchase for them Mexican bonds to a specified amount, at a specified price, and to hold the bonds at the disposal of the correspondents. The London firm made and notified the purchase, and wrote to the correspondents that they would, until further orders, retain the bonds for safe custody:—Held, that the letters constituted a special contract sufficient to exclude a general lien on the part of the London firm, if they would otherwise have been entitled to any. Ib.

A colliery company agreed with the defendants for the carriage of their goods over defendants' line. The defendants were "to have the right at any time to detain any goods or waggons in their possession by way of lien to secure the general balance owing to them." An engine of the colliery company having been sent to the defendants for repair, the defendants claimed to hold it, whilst in their establishment undergoing repairs, as a security, not only for the cost of such repairs and the charge for haulage, but also for a general balance due to them for the carriage of coals, &c.:—Held, that the terms of the above condition between the defendants and the colliery company, which was intended merely to enlarge the rights of the defendants as carriers, and to give them as such a right of lien beyond what they would have at common law, applied only to coals and such-like "goods," to be carried in the ordinary way, and not to the engine in question, which was delivered to the defendants, not under any contract to carry, but under an agreement to repair, to which the charge for haulage was incidental; and, therefore, that the right of general lien claimed by the defendants did not attach. Kinnear v. Midland Ry., 19 L. T. 387.

Wharfinger and Shipping Agent.]—S., a woolstapler at Huddersfield, was in the habit of making purchases of wool, which he directed to be consigned to the defendant, a wharfinger and shipping agent at Hull, who forwarded them to him at Huddersfield by carrier. In July, 1841, S. purchased certain wool in Scotland, which was paid for by E., his agent there, and by him forwarded to the defendant at Hull. Part of this wool, consisting of ten bags, arrived at Hull on the 27th of September, and a portion of it was, at ten o'clock on that morning, taken possession of by the defendant, the remainder being taken possession of by him between ten o'clock and four. E. received from S., in repayment of the advances made by him for the purchase of the wool in question, acceptances of S., which were running at the time of S.'s bankruptcy, and were afterwards dishonoured. On the 21st of September E. received a letter from S., in which he informed him of his insolvency, and directed him to get the wool and to do the best he could to save himself. Accordingly, on some day between the 26th of September and the 1st of October, E. gave directions to the defendant to seize the wool. The remaining portion of the wool arrived at Hull on the 3rd of October, and was delivered into the defendant's warehouse on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of that month. An act of bankruptcy was committed by S. on the 22nd of September. The defendant, who claimed to retain the wool in satisfaction of a general balance, had been in the habit of sending to the bankrupt by the carrier, together with the goods, printed delivery orders which stated that all goods were considered as general lien, subject not only to freight, but also to the balance of any former account due from the owners or consignors. These orders had been seen more than once in the bankrupt's hands, and, on one occasion, the weights therein stated had been altered by him:—Held, in trover by the assignees of S. to recover the value of the thirty-six bags of wool, first, that E. had no right to the goods, in respect of which the defendant could retain them. Bowman v. Malcolm, 11 M. & W. 833 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 397.

Carriers—After Winding-up of Company.]—When a company has been wound up under the Companies Act, 1862, and the business is duly carried on by the official liquidator, a creditor who has continued his dealings with the company cannot exercise a general lien on its goods for the whole amount due to him by virtue of an agreement made between him and the company previously to the winding-up. Wiltshire Iron Co. v. G. W. Ry., 40 L. J., Q. B. 308 ; L. R. 6 Q. B. 776 ; 23 L. T. 666 ; 19 W. R. 935—Ex. Ch.

A company was wound up, and the business carried on by the official liquidator. Previously to the winding-up, the company had made an agreement with a railway company for the carriage of goods on a credit account, upon the terms that goods belonging to or sent by them should be subject to a general lien in favour of the railway company, to take effect, at their option, at any time after failure of any sum due on the credit account, or in case of bankruptcy, insolvency, or stoppage of payment :—Held, that the railway company could not enforce this lien upon goods which they had received after the winding-up, to be carried on account of the new business. Ib.

In 1876 an agreement was entered into between the L. Coal Company and the G. W. Railway Company, by which the charges for coal consigned by the coal company were carried to a "ledger account," one condition of which was, that the goods and waggons belonging to or sent by the person having a ledger account should be subject to a general lien in favour of the railway company for all moneys due to them, &c., from such person on any account, such lien to take effect immediately after the failure of payment on demand of any sums appearing to be due on the ledger account ; "in case of bankruptcy, insolvency, or stoppage of payment, such lien to take effect immediately for any sum appearing due in the books of the company," with a right to sell such goods and waggons, and out of the proceeds to return the sums due. The coal company became insolvent, and on the 16th December, 1885, a petition was presented for winding-up ; on the 20th January, 1886, a provisional liquidator was appointed, and in February, 1886, an order to wind up was made. When the petition was presented the coal company was indebted to the railway company in respect of charges for freight. Of the fifteen waggons in use by the coal company, and employed in carrying coal over the railway company's line, nine had been received by the railway company prior to presentation of the winding-up petition, and had been detained by them ever since ; four in the possession of the railway company when the petition was presented had travelled up and down the line since, but returned into the possession of the railway company before the date of the winding-up order ; two did not come into the possession of the railway company until between the presentation of the petition and the winding-up order. The liquidator claimed delivery up by the railway company of the fifteen waggons which the company claimed to retain in satisfaction of the general lien under the agreement :—Held, that the lien given to the railway company by the agreement, which was made for the ordinary purposes of the coal company's business, was good and valid, and took effect upon the insolvency of that company, and had not been displaced by anything that had taken place in the winding-up proceedings. Llangennech Coal Co., In re, 56 L. T. 475.

—— Agreement with Bankrupt—Receiver's Goods not Liable.]—A trader opened a credit account with a railway company for freight. An account of what was due was to be delivered once a month, and payment was to be made within seven days after delivery ; and the company were to have a general lien, for all the moneys due upon any account, upon all goods in the hands of the company. The trader filed a petition for liquidation ; and a receiver and manager of his estate and business was appointed, who, in order to carry on the business, bought goods with his own money and sent them to the railway company consigned to the trader. The company refused to deliver the goods until they were paid what was owing to them by the trader for freight due when the petition was filed. The receiver paid the money under protest, and the goods were delivered. The Court of Bankruptcy, on the receiver's application, ordered the money to be repaid :—Held, on appeal, that the company would have no defence to an action by the receiver for the money paid to them, but that the Court of Bankruptcy had no jurisdiction to order repayment. G. W. Ry., Ex parte, Bushell, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 734 ; 22 Ch. D. 470 ; 48 L. T. 196 ; 31 W. R. 419—C. A.

4. Waiver.

Non-assertion of Claim.]—A person having a lien upon goods does not waive that lien by the mere fact of his omitting to state that he claims to retain the goods in that right when they are demanded ; nor is it sufficient evidence of a waiver of his lien, that he bought these goods with others which he also refused to deliver up, although he had no lien on them, the sale as to the whole being void. White v. Gainer, 9 Moore, 41 ; 2 Bing. 23 ; 1 Car. & P. 324 ; 2 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 101.

A debenture for a tontine annuity was deposited by an intestate with his bankers, one of whom received the dividends, and placed them to the credit of the intestate's account ; the intestate died in 1801, and a commission issued against the bankers in 1810 ; notwithstanding which, the same partner continued to receive the dividends, and pay them to the intestate's widow up to the period of his own death, which happened in 1822 ; some time after which, the assignees of the banker claimed a lien on the debenture for a debt due from the intestate to the banking-house :—Held, that after so long an abandonment of any claim of lien, the assignees could not now support such claim ; and that the debenture also could not be considered as having been left in the order and disposition of the bankers, it having been deposited in the nature of a trust. Douglas, Ex parte, 3 Deac. & C. 310.

Inconsistent Conduct.]—A wharfinger having a lien on goods for his general balance, on being applied to, made a charge only in respect of the particular goods, but owing to inability to get change affixed the consignor's card on the goods on the understanding that the consignor would send for the goods and pay the sum that had been named:—Held, a waiver of his lien for the general balance. Morley v. Hay, 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 104.

Claim on Different Ground.]—But a man waives his right of lien, if upon being applied to, to deliver up goods, he claims to retain them on a different ground than that upon which he rests his case of lien. Boardman v. Sill, 1 Camp. 410, n.

A lien may be waived by a party's setting up a claim to retain the chattel upon a different ground, and making no mention of the lien. Weeks v. Goode, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 367.

In an action against A. and B. for a lease, the evidence of conversion was as follows: A demand having been made upon A., he declined to give up the lease until rent due to B. was paid, but he added that it was more B.'s business than his own, and as he was not in, he (A.) would either send the lease in the course of the day, or would write the plaintiff a letter declining to return it. The plaintiff receiving neither lease nor letter, issued a writ on the following morning:—Held, that this amounted to an absolute refusal, notwithstanding A. and B. had, at the time (though it was not mentioned), a lien upon the lease for a small sum due to them for business done by them as attorneys for the plaintiff. Ib.

Excessive Claim—Tender.]—Where a party claims to detain goods upon two causes of lien, in such a way as to dispense with tender of either, he is guilty of a conversion, unless he can sustain both. Kerford v. Mondel, 28 L. J., Ex. 303.

In trover by a freighter against a shipowner to recover goods, the charterparty giving a lien for dead freight, but the master to sign bills of lading, which bound the goods for "freight as agreed," the freighter having when he demanded the goods been prepared to pay the freight for carriage, and the shipowner refused to deliver the goods except on payment of the dead freight:—Held, that freight for carriage alone was due, that the refusal was an implied dispensation of the tender of it, and that trover was maintainable. Ib.

The mere demand of an excessive sum by a creditor holding a lien does not dispense with a tender from the debtor of the sum really due; but if the demand of the larger sum is so made that it amounts to an announcement that it is useless to tender any smaller sum, this dispenses with any tender, even if it appears that the debtor was unwilling to tender the amount really due. The Norway, B. & L. 404; 3 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 245; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 892; 13 L. T. 50; 13 W. R. 1085.

Where a party who has a specific lien on goods refuses to deliver them up unless the amount of a general balance is paid, it is unnecessary for the owner to tender the sum due in respect of those goods, in order to support trover. Jones v. Tarlton, 9 M. & W. 675; 1 D. (N.S.) 625; 11 L. J., Ex. 267; 6 Jur. 348.

A picture was placed by A. in the hands of B. for sale. B. deposited it with C. On its being demanded by A., C. claimed 5*s.* for warehouse-room; but on a second demand being made with an offer to pay any claim which C. might have for warehouse-room, C. refused to give up the picture without being paid 8*l.* due to him from B.:—Held, that the demand of the 8*l.* amounted to a waiver of the claim for warehouse-room, and that it rendered a specific tender in respect thereof unnecessary. Dirks v. Richards, 4 Man. & G. 574; 5 Scott (N.R.) 534; Car. & M. 626; 6 Jur. 562.

If a party has a specific lien on the goods of another, and when required to deliver them up, claims a lien upon them for a sum either greater than or different from that for which he is entitled to hold them, his lien is gone; but if he claims to hold them both for the sum to which he is entitled, and also for a further sum to which he is not entitled, his lien in respect of the former remains, and the owner ought, on such refusal, to tender that sum. Scarfe v. Morgan, 4 M. & W. 270; 1 H. & H. 292; 7 L. J., Ex. 324; 2 Jur. 569.

By taking Security.]—If a security is taken for a debt for which the party has a lien upon property of the debtor, such security being payable at a distant day, the lien is gone. Hewison v. Guthrie, 3 Scott, 298; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 755; 2 Hodges, 51; 5 L. J., C. P. 283.

Engineers contracted with the debtor, the owner of a barge, to supply steam machinery to the vessel, at the docks of a dock company, for the price of 1,050*l.*, to be paid by approved bills; one at three months for 260*l.* when the boiler and engine should be placed in the vessel, one at three months for 260*l.*, and one at six months for 530*l.*, when the vessel should have made a trial trip. The vessel having been taken to the docks was there entered in the name of one of the engineers; and, whilst shipwrights and other agents of the debtor were occasionally or constantly on board, the vessel remained in the possession of the engineers till the boat was ready to make a trial trip. In the interim the engineers had been paid 360*l.*, partly in cash and partly by the debtor's acceptance, which they discounted. On the day appointed for the trial trip the debtor filed a liquidation petition, and a receiver took possession of the vessel. A few days afterwards the debtor's acceptance was dishonoured:—Held, that the lien of the engineers for the unpaid price for the machinery and their labour was not affected by their having agreed to take bills in payment, nor by the nature of the possession, nor by their having discounted the debtor's acceptance. Willoughby, Ex parte, Westlake, In re, 16 Ch. D. 604; 44 L. T. 111; 29 W. R. 935.

A person who has a lien on property accompanied by the guarantee of a third person, does not lose his lien by taking the bills of that third person for the amount, concurrently with, and in order to a sale of the property to satisfy the debt. Solarte v. Maes Hilbers, 1 L. J., K. B. 196.

A., and B., a solicitor, were executors. B. deposited some of his deeds in the trust-box, to secure some money due to the testator's estate. The box remained in B.'s possession, and on his death the deeds were found to have been abstracted from it, and they could not be identified. The legal personal representative of B. then deposited certain specific deeds, selected by A., as a security for the debt:—Held, assuming that A. had, in consequence of B.'s wrongful act, obtained a general lien on all B.'s deeds for the money, still that he had waived it by taking the particular security from the legal personal representative. Mason v. Morley, 34 Beav. 471; 34 L. J., Ch. 422; 12 L. T. 414; 13 W. R. 669. And see Brough v. Oddy, Taml. 215.

Where a vendor received part of the purchase-money, which had been borrowed from the defendant, and took a bond with sureties for the residue:—Held, that by entering into the deed of conveyance, which recited the assignment of the premises to the defendant by way of mortgage for the sum advanced, the vendor waived his lien. Cood v. Pollard, 10 Price, 109; 9 Price, 544; 23 R. R. 713.

If a tradesman, having goods in his possession, upon which he has a lien, parts with those goods on the promise of a third person to pay the demand, such promise is not within the statute of frauds, and may be by parol. Castling v. Aubert, 2 East, 325. S. P., Houldítch v. Milne, 3 Esp. 86; 6 R. R. 815.

An innkeeper who accepts security from his guest for the payment of hotel charges does not waive his lien at common law upon the goods of the guest for the amount of such charges unless there is something in the nature of the security, or in the circumstances under which it was taken, which is inconsistent with the existence or continuance of the lien, and therefore destructive of it. Angus v. McLachlan, 52 L. J., Ch. 587; 23 Ch. D. 330; 48 L. T. 863; 31 W. R. 641.

Agreement to take Security.]—A creditor demanding security for a debt, the debtor agreed by letter to hypothecate certain bales of goods in the docks, but subsequently, under advice, refused to deliver the warrants. The creditor then filed a bill for a declaration that there was a lien on the goods, for delivery of the goods, and for an injunction and receiver:—Held, that the effect of the agreement to hypothecate was a forbearance on the part of the creditor. Alliance Bank v. Broom, 11 L. T. 332; 13 W. R. 127.

Part Payment.]—The right of an unpaid vendor to a lien on goods in the hands of his agent is not taken away by the fact that the vendor has recovered a verdict for their price against the purchaser, and, under a county court order for payment of the debt by instalments, has been paid one instalment of it. Scrivener v. G. N. Ry., 19 W. R. 388.

Execution at Instance of Creditor.]—If a party, having a lien on goods, causes them to be taken in execution at his own suit, he thereby destroys his right of lien, although the goods were never removed from his premises. Jacobs v. Latour, 2 M. & P. 201; 5 Bing. 130; 6 L. J., (o.s.) C. P. 243.

Partial Appropriation.]—A., B. and C., being part owners of a vessel, were partners in whale fishery adventures, in which the course had been for C., as ship's husband, to sell the whalebone towards expenses, to deposit the blubber in a warehouse rented by A., B. and C. of D., to divide the oil there produced, to put it into separate casks marked with their respective initials, and for D., the warehouseman, to deliver out the oil upon the order of each partner respectively, unless notice was given by C. that such partner's share of the disbursements was unpaid, and in that case to detain the oil until payment. Twenty-nine tons having been set apart for A., and placed in casks marked with his initials, and twenty tons having been delivered to his order, he became bankrupt, his share of the disbursements being unpaid. Afterwards notice of nonpayment was given by C. to D.:—Held, that B. and C. had a lien as against the assignees of A., upon the remaining nine tons for A.'s share of the disbursements, not abandoned by the qualified appropriation of the twenty-nine tons, or by the assent to the removal of the twenty tons. Holderness v. Shackels, 3 M. & Ry. 25; 8 B. & C. 612; 7 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 80.

Conversion.]—A. agreed to buy of B. a stack of hay for 86*l.*, to be paid for as taken away, and to be removed by the 31st of May. Part of the hay was removed and paid for by A. before the 31st of May, and in August the remainder was cut up and used by B.:—Held, that as B.'s lien on the hay was determined by the act of conversion, A. was entitled to the possession of the hay, and might maintain trover. Gurr v. Cuthbert, 12 L. J., Ex. 309.

Delivery to Carrier.]—One who has a lien on goods in his possession, if he afterwards delivers them to a ship carrier to be conveyed on account and at the risk of his principal, though unknown to the carrier, cannot recover his lien by stopping the goods in transitu, and procuring them to be redelivered to him by virtue of a bill of lading signed by the carrier in the course of his voyage. Sweet v. Pym, 1 East, 4; 5 R. R. 497.

Permitting Removal.]—If A., having repaired a carriage for B., allows him to take it away from time to time, he cannot afterwards detain it for the amount of the repairs, neither can he detain it upon the claim for standage, without an express contract to pay for standage, or unless the owner leaves it upon the premises beyond a reasonable time after notice. Hartley v. Hitchcock, 1 Stark. 408; 18 R. R. 790.

By Factor acting for Third Parties.]—H. & Co. of Newfoundland, by order of D. of Jamaica, shipped a cargo of fish on board a vessel chartered by D., and consigned it to S., D.'s factor at Kingston, Jamaica. After D. had ordered this cargo, he required from S. a further advance of money (D. being at that time largely indebted to him), and told him that he expected this cargo, and that S. might sell it on D.'s account, and give him credit for the proceeds. S. made the advance required, but nothing was reduced into writing as to the pledge of the cargo. Before the vessel arrived D. became insolvent, and told S. his factor, that such being the case, he could not think of receiving the cargo. The cargo arrived, and D., by letter to S., repeated his determination not to receive the cargo, and told S. to sell it, and remit the proceeds to H. & Co.'s house at Liverpool. D. also wrote to H. & Co. at Liverpool, to inform them of the transaction, but H. & Co. did not write to acquiesce in that arrangement until eight months afterwards. S. appeared to acquiesce in the wish of D., and did not at that time claim any lien. S. sold the cargo, but refused to account for the proceeds to H. & Co., who thereupon brought an action for their recovery:—Held, that S. must be taken to have acted in the sale as the agent of H. & Co.; and that if S. had any lien originally, he had, by his conduct, waived it. Harrison v. Scott, 5 Moore, P. C. 357; 10 Jur. 443.

1. CONSIGNEES.

General Lien of.]—The general lien of a consignee cannot be set up against the express directions of the consignor given to him at the time when the cargo was accepted. Frith v. Forbes, 4 De G. F. & J. 409; 32 L. J., Ch. 10; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1113; 11 W. R. 14.

B. & Co. consigned a cargo to the defendants and sent to them the bill of lading in a letter: "The present serves to cover bill of lading for timber, &c., shipped per 'China,' against which we have valued on you at six months in favour of F., S. & Co., for 1,200*l*., which please kindly protect." On the same day B. & Co. sent to F., S. & Co., the bill of exchange which was drawn on the defendants to the order of F., S. & Co., and concluded, "place the same with or without advice to account consignment per 'China.' After the bill of lading arrived F., S. & Co. presented the bill of exchange, but the defendant refused to accept it. Shortly afterwards B. & Co. stopped payment, and afterwards the cargo arrived:—Held, that it was effectually appropriated to meet the bill, and that F., S. & Co. had a lien upon it in priority to the claim of the defendants for the balance due to them on their general account as consignees. Ib.

Right to Policy-moneys—Foreign Consignor.]—The defendants, an English firm, traded with D., a Spanish shipping agent at Havannah. The plaintiffs, who were Spanish merchants at Havannah, consigned a cargo of goods to the defendants through the agency of D. The defendants knew that D. was acting for a third party who was alluded to as the "interesado," but the name of the plaintiffs was not disclosed. The defendants effected an insurance in London on the ship in the name of themselves and for the benefit of all parties interested. The ship having been lost, the policy-money was paid to the defendants, and D. being insolvent, the plaintiffs claimed the whole of the money after deducting the premiums and expenses. The defendants claimed a lien for the balance of their general account due from D.:—Held, that an action lay by the Havannah principals against the London merchants for the policy-moneys; and that the London merchants were not entitled to a lien upon the moneys for the balance of their general account with the Havannah agents, and could not in that action set off their claim to that balance, or set off anything except the premium stamps and commission in respect of the insurance. Mildred v. Maspons, 53 L. J., Q. B. 33; 8 App. Cas. 874; 32 W. R. 125—H. L. (E.) Affirming 47 L. T. 318—C. A.

Direction to Appropriate.]—A. consigns a cargo to B., with a direction to pay to C. out of the proceeds a sum of money, and writes to C. to that effect: C. has no lien on the proceeds. Heywood, Ex parte, 2 Rose, 355.

Abandonment.]—D. advanced S., who was about to speculate in sugars, 10,999*l*. on a verbal agreement that D. should have a lien on the sugars imported by S. from the Mauritius and Batavia. S. assigned his property to trustees for creditors before any sugars were bought in Batavia. D. having filed a bill praying a declaration that he had a lien on sugars sent to S. from Batavia, but omitting any mention of Mauritius sugars:—Held, that D. was precluded from afterwards insisting on any claim in respect of Mauritius sugars. Dean v. Byrnes, 2 Moore P. C. (N.S.) 92; 11 L. T. 97; 13 W. R. 299.

Held, also, that it being no part of the contract that S. should invest the moneys lent in any particular mode, and S. having in fact assigned his property to trustees for his creditors before the purchase, and so S.'s money not being used in purchasing the sugar from Batavia, D. had no lien upon the sugars. Ib.

Held, also, that the fact of S.'s trustees allowing S. to purchase Batavia sugars on their account did not affect them with any equities in favour of D. under his contract with S. Ib.

The plaintiffs were merchants in London and Melbourne. The defendant consigned goods to the Melbourne house, on an agreement that the advances made to him by the plaintiffs in London and Melbourne should be retained out of the proceeds of the goods, and that the surplus should be handed over to the defendant. The Melbourne house remitted to the defendant a sum as the balance, but omitted to retain the advances made in London:—Held, that the plaintiffs had merely a right of lien or of retainer, which they had abandoned by remitting the balance. Bligh v. Davies, 28 Beav. 211.

Constructive Delivery.]—A delivery to a master of a vessel, where the consignor has written to the consignee, apprising him that he has consigned to him, and requesting him, on the faith of such consignment, to accept bills (which he accordingly accepts and pays), is not such a constructive delivery to a consignee as will give him a lien against the assignees; it is not within the principle of the cases which decide that an equitable right will supply the deficiency of an actual delivery, in support of a well-founded lien not perfected by possession. Nichols v. Clent, 3 Price, 547.

The indorsing a bill of lading by a consignor to the consignee does not constitute a lien in favour of the latter for his advances to the consignor. Snaith v. Burridge, 4 Taunt. 684; 13 R. R. 731.

Expenses of Chartering.]—If the consignee of a cargo, by agreement with the owner, charters a ship, and expends the money necessary and proper in order to enable her to fetch the cargo, he is, without any special agreement to that effect, entitled to a lien on the proceeds of such cargo in his hands for the advances so made, and a person who is not the consignee has, under such circumstances, a similar lien on the proceeds of the cargo if he can arrest such proceeds before they come to the hands of the shipper of the cargo. Young v. Neill, 32 Beav. 529; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 976; 9 L. T. 9; 11 W. R. 1052.

2. VENDORS.

On Sale of Land.]—A lien for unpaid purchase-money is not a charge by way of mortgage, under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 69, where the purchaser dies intestate. Harding v. Harding, 41 L. J., Ch. 523; L. R. 13 Eq. 493; 26 L. T. 656.

When a landowner seeks to enforce his lien for unpaid purchase-money against a railway company, the court will order a sale of the land, but will not grant an injunction to restrain the company from running trains over the land. Lycett v. Stafford and Uttoxeter Ry., 41 L. J., Ch. 474; L. R. 13 Eq. 261; 25 L. T. 870.

—— On Land in Register County—Notice.]—A vendor of land situate in a register county, part of whose purchase-money remains unpaid, is under no obligation to obtain for the unpaid amount any written security which can be registered, but is entitled to rely simply on his equitable lien, which he can enforce against sub-purchasers who have notice of it, actual or constructive; and such a vendor will not, by registering the conveyance to his purchaser, if he retains the deed in his possession, lose his lien as against sub-purchasers from the original purchaser. Kettlewell v. Watson, 51 L. J., Ch. 281; 21 Ch. D. 685; 46 L. T. 83; 30 W. R. 402.

—— On Deeds.]—The unpaid vendor of real estate which has been conveyed to the purchaser has not, at law, in the absence of a special agreement, any lien on the title-deeds for his purchase-money. Goode v. Burton, 1 Ex. 189; 16 L. J., Ex. 309; 11 Jur. 851.

—— To Company — Consideration.]—It was agreed between a vendor and a trustee for a company intended to be formed that, as soon as the company should be formed and registered, and the agreement adopted by the directors, the vendor should sell, and the company should purchase, the lease, goodwill, plant, &c., of his manufactory of bricks, and that, on an assignment to the company being executed, the company should pay him out of its funds 8,000*l.* in manner thereinafter mentioned, namely, 6,000*l.* in cash, and 2,000*l.* in fully paid-up shares. The company having been formed, and the agreement adopted by the directors, the vendor assigned the property to the company by a deed which purported to be executed in consideration of 6,000*l.*, to be paid in manner thereinbefore stated, namely, 50 per cent. of all sums of money received by the company on the sale of shares, and 50 per cent. upon all money by way of capital borrowed by the company, until the payment so to be made to the vendor should amount to 6,000*l.* No money was ever received by sale of shares or borrowed, and the company proved abortive and was ordered to be wound up:—Held, that the vendor had no lien on the property, his lien being excluded by the nature of the contract. Brentwood Brick and Coal Co., In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 554; 4 Ch. D. 562; 36 L. T. 343; 25 W. R. 481—C. A.

—— No Indorsement of Receipt.]—When a purchase-deed contained a recital that the purchase-money had been paid, or accounted for, but there was no receipt for the purchase-money on the back of the deed:—Held, that the vendor, in respect of his lien for unpaid purchase-money, was entitled to priority over a mortgagee of the purchaser. Bowen v. Cobb, 19 W. R. 614—L. JJ.

And see Cases under VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Joint Consignors.]—A. being interested in a moiety of a cargo, and having entered into a contract with B. to let him have half his share, wrote to C. and E., the consignees, informing them, and authorising them to sell the cargo, and carry the proceeds to their separate accounts. The consignees acted upon this, and made advances to B., and B. also charged his interest in favour of E. It had been agreed between A. and B. that they should pay for the cargo by two bills, each to be paid by one of them. B. did not pay his bill: it did not appear whether A. had paid it or not:—Held, that A. had no lien on the proceeds of B.'s share, either as against him, or as against C. and D., or against E. Holroyd v. Griffiths, 3 Drew. 428.

Retaining Bill of Lading—Jus disponendi.]—When an unpaid vendor shipping goods under a contract of sale takes a bill of lading, making the goods deliverable to his order, and retains such bill of lading in his own or his agent's hands for his own protection, he does not reserve the vendor's lien only, in case of the purchasers making default in payment of the price, but reserves a right of disposing of the goods so long at least as the purchaser continues in default. Ogg v. Shuter, 45 L. J., C. P. 44; 1 C. P. D. 47; 33 L. T. 492; 24 W. R. 100—C. A.

Undertaking to Deliver.]—An undertaking by the vendor to deliver goods sold, addressed to the purchaser, does not amount to such a representation that the purchaser is entitled to delivery as to estop the vendor from asserting his right of lien against a sub-purchaser. Farmiloe v. Bain, 45 L. J., C. P. 264; 1 C. P. D. 445; 34 L. T. 324.

The defendant sold goods to B., and gave a document, undertaking "to deliver to your order twenty-five tons off your contract of this date," addressed to B.; before delivery B. became insolvent. The plaintiff, who had purchased the goods from B., sued the defendant in detinue:—Held, that the defendant was not estopped from asserting his lien on the goods against the plaintiff. Ib.

Priority of Delivery Orders—Custom.]—By the custom of the London Dry Goods Market, a broker who purchases for a principal, as broker, but without disclosing the name of the principal, is liable for the price of the goods in case the purchaser does not pay. On the 3rd March, 1876, C. sold to D., a broker, for undisclosed principals, eighteen casks of gum sandrac lying at the docks, and signed a delivery order in favour of D. The delivery order was indorsed by D. to B. & Co., his undisclosed principals, who deposited the same with the Imperial Bank as security for advances. On the 18th March, the bank lodged the order at the office of the Docks Company in Leadenhall Street, with a request for warrants, and notice of the order having been lodged was sent to the long room at the dock-house. On the same day D., having heard that B. & Co. had stopped payment, paid C. for the goods, and sent his clerk to the long room, who arrived there before notice of the delivery order having been lodged by the bank had been received, and he, in the name of C., applied for a warrant for the goods, which was made out and delivered to him. C. subsequently indorsed the warrant to D., and gave him a second delivery order. On an action by the bank for a declaration that they were entitled to the goods:—Held, that under the circumstances C.'s lien as an unpaid vendor passed to D., and that the warrant in favour of C. having been obtained before the delivery order had been entered at the warrant office at the docks, D. was entitled to the goods. Imperial Bank v. London and St. Katharine Docks, 46 L. J., Ch. 335 ; 5 Ch. D. 195 ; 36 L. T. 233.

Custom as to Delivery Warrants.]—By the usage of the iron trade, warrants for goods "deliverable (f. o. b.) to A. B., or their assigns, by indorsement thereon," are considered to pass to the holders for value free from any vendor's lien. Merchant Banking Co. of London v. Phœnix Bessemer Steel Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 418 ; 5 Ch. D. 205 ; 36 L. T. 395 ; 24 W. R. 457. See Gunn v. Bolckow & Co., infra.

A company, being manufacturers of steel rails, contracted with S. & Co., iron merchants, for the sale of a quantity of rails to be rolled at their works, and to be delivered at intervals, payment to be made as to three-fifths at three days' sight and as to two-fifths by buyers' acceptances at four months. On the completion of each portion of goods a warrant for the same in the above form was sent to S. & Co., with an invoice and drafts for the purchase-money, and the goods referred to in the warrant were stacked at the works. In the meantime S. & Co. pledged the several warrants, and indorsed the same to the plaintiffs. Before the contract was completed, when only part of the goods was paid for, S. & Co. became bankrupt, and their acceptances were dishonoured. At that time part of the goods had been dispatched in waggons sent by order of S. & Co., and was stored in a railway company's warehouse, addressed to the agents of S. & Co., and part remained stacked at the works :—Held, that, by the usage of the iron trade, as well as by the intention of the parties as shewn by their course of dealing, the plaintiffs, as holders for value of the warrants, were entitled to the goods free from any vendor's lien. Ib.

Held, also, that even had the vendors been able to claim a lien on the undelivered goods, the transit was at an end as regarded those stored in the warehouse, and their right was gone. Ib.

Held, also, that the contract was apportionable, and that the vendors could not in any event have claimed any lien on that portion of the goods which had been fully paid for. Ib.

Transfer in Warehouseman's Books.]—Goods remained in the possession of unpaid vendors, but the purchaser paid rent for them to the vendors as warehousemen, and the goods were transferred into the name of the purchaser in the books of the vendors :—Held, that as no actual delivery had been made, the vendors' lien revived upon the insolvency of the purchaser as against his assignees. Grice v. Richardson, 47 L. J., P. C. 48 ; 3 App. Cas. 319 ; 37 L. T. 677 ; 26 W. R. 358.

3. UNDER BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

Vendor's Lien—Wharfinger's Certificates.]—B. & Co. sold some iron rails to a company by a written contract, stipulating that payment should be made by buyers' acceptances of sellers' drafts against inspector's certificate of approval, and wharfinger's certificate of each 500 tons being stacked ready for shipment. As the wharfinger's certificates were delivered, the company accepted the drafts of B. & Co., according to the contract, which B. & Co. negotiated ; but the rails remained in B. & Co.'s possession. The plaintiff advanced money to the company on the security of some of the wharfinger's certificates, which were handed over to him with a written memorandum. The company became insolvent and their acceptances were consequently not paid. The plaintiff filed a bill against B. & Co. and the receiver of the estate of the company, claiming a lien on the rails in the hands of B. & Co. in priority to their lien as vendors. The bill alleged that according to the custom of the iron trade, the wharfinger's certificates were in fact warrants. The plaintiff having moved for an injunction to restrain B. & Co. from parting with the rails, or with the money which they might receive in respect of them, Bacon, V.-C., ordered B. & Co. to pay the value of the rails into court, to be kept in medio till the decision of the case :—Held, first, that the giving of the acceptances in pursuance of the contract was not an absolute payment, but conditional on the acceptances being met ; that upon the insolvency of the acceptors the vendors' lien on the goods revived ; and that the fact of the vendors having negotiated the bills made no difference. Gunn v. Bolckow, Vaughan & Co., 44 L. J., Ch. 732 ; L. R. 10 Ch. 491 ; 32 L. T. 781 ; 23 W. R. 739.

Held, secondly, that the wharfinger's certificates were not documents of title, and their delivery passed no right to the goods ; and that no custom of trade could give them the effect of warrants or documents of title as against the vendors. Ib.

Equitable Assignment to meet—Authority.]—Y., a merchant in Costa Rica, shipped coffee to M. & Co., London, and drew bills on M. & Co., requesting them to have the coffee sold for his account, and the proceeds passed to his credit. There was an agreement between Y. and E. & Co., of Panama, to share profits and losses on this transaction. The bills came into possession of the plaintiffs, and were dishonoured by M. & Co., Y. wrote to S., asking him to honour the drafts, and obtain the bills of lading of the coffee from M. & Co., by whom they were accordingly handed over to S. S. wrote to the plaintiffs, saying that he expected soon to get the delivery warrants of the coffee, and that he could dispose of the coffee as instructed by the sender. M. & Co. were creditors to a large extent of E. & Co., whose agent they affirmed Y. to be, and they caused an attachment to issue out of the mayor's court against the coffee. S. then sold the coffee and paid the proceeds into court, and the plaintiffs applied to have their bills paid thereout on the ground that the coffee had been specifically appropriated to the bills, and that S. had made an equitable assignment of a part of the coffee equal in amount to the bills :—Held, that S. had authority to make such equitable assignment ; that the plaintiffs had acquired a lien on the proceeds of sale of the coffee, and were therefore entitled to maintain their suit ; and that M. & Co. had no such interest as to entitle them to attach the proceeds. Ranken v. Alfaro, 46 L. J., Ch. 832 ; 5 Ch. D. 786 ; 36 L. T. 529—C. A.

Appropriation of Proceeds of Cargo.]—B. consigned to the defendants by the ship "Acacia" a cargo which had been purchased at the joint risk of himself and the defendants, and advised them of the particulars of bills which he had drawn against the cargo payable to his own order. The defendants replied, promising to protect the bills. B. indorsed to the plaintiffs three of these bills, which ran, "Pay to the order of myself the sum of 830*l.*, which place to account cargo per A." B. having stopped payment, the defendants refused to accept the bills; but after selling the cargo, offered to pay to the plaintiffs the surplus of the proceeds, after satisfying a balance due to them from B. on the general account between them. The plaintiffs refused to accept this, and filed a bill, claiming a lien for the full amount of the three bills:—Held, that they had no lien on the proceeds of the cargo. Robey's Perseverance Ironworks v. Ollier, L. R. 7 Ch. 695; 27 L. T. 362; 20 W. R. 956.

Payment by Instalments — Bankruptcy.]—A contract for the building of a ship provided that the purchase-money was to be paid by instalments, partly in cash, and partly by means of bills of exchange, to be paid and given at specified stages of the progress of the construction, the balance being paid on completion by a bill. The ship was from the time of paying or giving the first instalment to be the absolute property of the purchaser to the extent of his advances, subject nevertheless to the builder's lien for any unpaid instalments. Any bills given during construction were to be retired by the purchaser at completion and transfer. As the construction of the ship went on the vendor drew bills upon the purchaser, which he accepted, for the instalments of the purchase-money. After these bills had been negotiated, but before any of them became due, the purchaser took proceedings for liquidation, including his liability on the bills among his debts, and his creditors passed a resolution to accept a composition. The bill-holders refused to accept the amount of composition when tendered. The purchaser shortly after the resolution gave notice to the vendor to rescind the contract. Not long after this the vendor became bankrupt and the ship was completed by his trustee. The bill-holders having claimed a lien on the ship:—Held, that the principle of Waring, Ex parte (19 Ves. 345), was not applicable, and that the bill-holders had no lien on the ship. Lambton, Ex parte, Lindsay, In re, 44 L. J., Bk. 81; L. R. 10 Ch. 405; 32 L. T. 380; 23 W. R. 662.

Payment by Agent of Company.]—In pursuance of an agreement to that effect, the agent of a company, employed to sell their goods upon premises hired by the company for that purpose, accepted bills drawn upon him by the company in respect of goods consigned to him for sale. One of these bills had not reached maturity when the company was ordered to be wound up. The agent paid the bill when it became payable:—Held, that he had a lien on the company's goods in his hands for the amount he had so paid. Pavy's Patent Felted Fabric Co., In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 318; 1 Ch. D. 631; 24 W. R. 507.

Parties.]—The indorsee of a bill has a lien upon property deposited with the drawer as security. Perfect, Ex parte, 1 Mont. 25.

A holder of a bill has no lien on property deposited by the drawer with the acceptor to cover the liability of the latter in respect of his acceptance, but, on the bankruptcy of drawer and acceptor, the arrangement of property between the two estates may indirectly render such an equity available. Waring, Ex parte, 2 Rose, 182.

Goods pledged (expressly) to secure, by the produce of the sale, acceptors who have taken up and paid bills drawn on them by the owners are released from further charge as to other bills so taken up and paid subsequently, if the amount of the original sum paid on account of the owner has been repaid to them without resorting to a sale. Birdwood v. Raphael, 5 Price, 593.

4. Bailees.

Agisters.]—Generally speaking, a bailee has a lien on goods bailed to him in those cases only where an additional value has been conferred by him on the chattels, either directly by the exercise of personal labour and skill, or indirectly, by the intermediate use of any instrument over which he has control; and, therefore, an agister to whom cattle have been bailed, has, by the general law, no lien on them for the value of the pasturage consumed; and this holds whether they are milch cattle or not. Jackson v. Cummins, 5 M. & W. 342; 8 L. J., Ex. 265; 3 Jur. 436.

A farmer who has received sheep from an agister is liable in trover to the owner, on his claiming to detain them for a debt due to the agister, and not allowed to deduct from the amount of the credit the sum for feed which had been tendered by the owner and refused. Prentice v. Taylor, 1 F. & F. 469.

The plaintiff's cow was agisting in a field of the defendant, and he agreed that it should remain there until the payment of a debt due from him to the defendant, except only when taken out for the purpose of milking, and that, if it was not returned, defendant should be at liberty to take it wherever it was, and keep it till the debt was paid. The cow was taken away, and detained by the plaintiff. In an action for retaking it:—Held, that the agreement gave the defendant a lien, which was not lost by dispossession, and supported a plea that the cow was not the property of the plaintiff. Richards v. Symons, 8 Q. B. 90; 15 L. J., Q. B. 35; 10 Jur. 6.

Bankers—Deposit of Bills.]—Where a person, who is in reality the agent of another, deposits exchequer bills with his own bankers, without informing them whose property these bills are, the bankers may be held entitled to consider these bills as the depositor's property, and to hold them as security for any money due to them from him, if the mode of deposit or the circumstances attending it give them a lien on the bills as against him. Brandao v. Barnett, 12 C. & F. 787.

Pledgees.]—Goods arriving at Quebec were taken to the customs' examining warehouse, according to the regulations of the port. The goods were entered by the officer in charge, as consigned to M. & S. The goods remained subject to the lien for freight, and to the charges for customs' duties and storage. Till these several claims were discharged the officer in charge was bound not to part with the goods. Subsequently M. & S. obtained an advance from Y. & Co. on the security of these goods, and gave to them a request note, signed by M. and S., and directed to the officer in charge, requesting him to hold the goods "subject to the order" of Y. & Co., "they paying the duty and storage charge before removal." This note was sent to the officer in charge, who accepted it and made a corresponding entry in his book. Afterwards, the goods, while still lying at the customs' warehouse, were seized by a judgment creditor of M. & S. :—Held, that the seizure was bad, there having been a valid constructive delivery and transfer of the goods to Y. & Co., as pledgees. Young v. Lambert, 6 Moore, P. C. 406 ; 39 L. J., P. C. 21 ; L. R. 3 P. C. 142 ; 22 L. T. 499 ; 18 W. R. 497.

—— For what Charges.]—Where chattels are deposited with a party who claims a lien on them, after notice from the bailor of the sale of the chattels to a third party, the bailee cannot, as against the vendee, claim a further lien in respect of a debt incurred to him by the bailor after such notice, though the chattels remain in his books in the name of the bailor. Barry v. Longmore, 4 P. & D. 344 ; 12 A. & E. 639 ; 1 Arn. & H. 14.

Livery Stable-keeper and Trainer.]—A stable-keeper, by special agreement, may acquire a lien on horses for their keep ; and if the owner, to defeat such lien, gets them away by fraud the stable-keeper has a right to get possession of them, and for so doing he will not be answerable in trover ; for the lien is not put an end to by the parting with the possession under such circumstances. Wallace v. Woodgate, 1 Car. & P. 575 ; R. & M. 193.

—— For what Charges.] — A livery-stable keeper has a lien for the keep and exercise of a horse sent to him for the purpose of being trained. Bevan v. Waters, 3 Car. & P. 520 ; M. & M. 236.

A person to whom a horse is delivered to be stabled, taken care of, fed and kept, has no lien on him for the expense incurred in so doing. Judson v. Etheridge, 1 C. & M. 743 ; 3 Tyr. 954 ; 2 L. J., Ex. 300.

Semble, that the trainer of race-horses has a lien on them for his charges for exercising and training. Jacobs v. Latour, 2 M. & P. 201 ; 5 Bing. 130 ; 6 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 243.

A mare having been placed with a livery-stable keeper, who advanced money to the owner, it was agreed that she should remain as a security for the repayment of the sum advanced, and for the expenses of her keep :—Held, that the stable-keeper had a lien on the mare. Donatty v. Crowder, 11 Moore, 479 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 184.

A. sent a mare to B., a farmer, to be covered by a stallion belonging to him. The contract and its performance took place on a Sunday. B. afterwards detained the mare, and refused to deliver her up, unless paid as well the fees due on that occasion as a certain sum claimed upon a general account :—Held, first, that B. was entitled to a lien for the fees. Searfe v. Morgan, 4 M. & W. 270 ; 1 H. & H. 292 ; 7 L. J., Ex. 324 ; 2 Jur. 569.

Held, secondly, that even if such a contract was void within the 29 Car. 2, c. 7, s. 1, the contract having been executed, the lien attached. Ib.

A livery-stable keeper who employs, at the request of the owner of a horse, a veterinary surgeon to attend the horse whilst standing at livery has no lien on such horse for the charges of such veterinary surgeon. Orchard v. Rackstraw, 9 C. B. 698 ; 19 L. J., C. P. 303 ; 14 Jur. 605.

—— Destroyed by Agreement.]—The labour and skill expended by a trainer on race-horses intrusted to him for the purpose of being trained, is such as may on general principles give him a lien on the horses against the owner. But this right of lien may be destroyed by any agreement or usage consistent with the continuing right of possession by the trainer. Forth v. Simpson, 13 Q. B. 680 ; 18 L. J., Q. B. 263 ; 13 Jur. 1024.

An owner of race-horses entrusted them to A., for the purpose of having them trained to run at races generally. During the time the horses were with him, they were (according to the usage in such cases) sent, in charge of his servants, to run at such races as the owner selected. They were placed in stables hired by A. until the race, and were then ridden by jockeys selected and paid by the owner. The owner frequently selected one of A.'s servants as his jockey. After the race the horses were re-delivered to A.'s servants, and taken back by them to the stables :—Held, that, under these circumstances, A. had no lien on the horses. Ib.

Warehousekeepers.]—A custom for warehousekeepers in London to have a general lien on all goods for all moneys due from customers for all advances made or expenses incurred in the payment of duties or freight, or entering and landing of goods, is unreasonable. Leuckart v. Cooper, 3 Scott, 521 ; 2 Hodges, 150 ; 3 Bing. (N.C.) 99 ; 6 L. J., C. P. 131.

Wharfingers.]—Wharfingers have a general lien for the balance of their accounts. Naylor v. Mangles, 1 Esp. 109 ; 5 R. R. 722. S. P., Spears v. Hartley, 3 Esp. 81 ; 6 R. R. 814. And see Rushforth v. Hadfield, 6 East, 519 ; 7 East, 224 ; 8 R. R. 520.

A wharfinger has not a general lien in respect of labourage and warehouse room, except by agreement express or implied ; general continued and undisputed usage may be evidence of such agreement ; but where the right is disputed in the place where the wharfinger lives, he cannot set it up against a customer, unless he has previously given him notice that he will deal only upon those terms. Holderness v. Collinson, 1 M. & Ry. 55 ; 7 B. & C. 212 ; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 17 ; 31 R. R. 174.

A wharfinger's general lien on the goods of his customer in his possession for his balance in respect of freight and wharfage, due before the teste of an immediate extent, issued against such customer, being the crown's debtor, will prevail against the extent. Rex v. Humphrey, M'Clel. & Y. 173 ; 29 R. R. 783.

In an action to restrain the infringement of a trade mark, a wharfinger, who had received goods bearing the pirated trade mark in the ordinary course of business without any knowledge of the fraud, was made a co-defendant, and in his statement of defence disclaimed all interest in the matter in dispute, and submitted to act as the court should direct, on having his charges for warehouse rent and his costs of the action paid or provided for. At the trial of the action he contended at the bar that the plaintiff ought not to touch the goods for the purpose of removing the trade mark without first paying his charges :—Held, that the wharfinger was entitled to be paid his costs of the action by the plaintiff, and had a lien on the goods in his possession for his warehouse charges in priority to the lien (if any) which the plaintiff might have thereon for his costs. Moet v. Pickering, 47 L. J., Ch. 527; 8 Ch. D. 172; 38 L. T. 799; 26 W. R. 637—C. A.

—— Where Goods mixed.]—Where, after a fire at a wharfinger's, the salvage of oil belonging to various owners, the identity of which was lost, was retained in the warehouses under an arrangement with the agent of the owners, to pay charges upon the whole, and there was a distinct quantity of oil belonging to another owner, the identity of which was not lost, and which was not treated as salvage:—Held, that the wharfingers had no lien on this oil for the charges on the whole of the salvage. Grant v. Humphrey, 3 F. & F. 162.

—— Method of Payment.]—Where wharfage and other charges due on goods imported were, by the course of trade, paid by the importer at the Christmas following the importation, whether the goods were in the meantime removed or not; and goods were sold to S., and after Christmas the importer became bankrupt:—Held, that there was no lien on the goods for the wharfage as against S. Crawshay v. Homfray, 4 B. & Ald. 50; 22 R. R. 618. And see Richardson v. Goss, 3 Bos. & P. 119; 6 R. R. 727.

—— After Notice.]—Where goods deposited at a wharf are sold by the owner, and he gives notice thereof to the wharfinger, paying all charges up to that time, the wharfinger cannot claim a lien against him for subsequent charges in respect of such goods, on the ground that no delivery order was lodged and the notice was merely oral. Barry v. Longmore, 12 A. & E. 639; 4 P. & D. 344.

5. Artificers and Workmen.

What Goods.]—Everyone has by law a lien upon a specific deed or paper delivered to him to do any work or business thereon, but not on other muniments of the same party, unless the person claiming the lien is an attorney or a solicitor. Hollis v. Claridge, 4 Taunt. 807. See Sanderson v. Bell, 2 C. & M. 304; 4 Tyr. 244; 3 L. J., Ex. 66.

How Delivered.]—A workman having bestowed his labour on a chattel, in consideration of a price, the amount of which was fixed by an agreement with the owner, may detain such chattel until the price is paid, although it was delivered to the workman in different parcels and at different times, if the work to be done under the agreement is entire. Chase v. Westmore, 5 M. & S. 180; 2 Marsh. 346; 17 R. R. 301.

Where Improvement made.]—Generally speaking, if a chattel delivered to a party receives improvement from his labour and skill, he has a specific lien upon it for his remuneration, whether the contract for it is express or implied; provided there is nothing in the nature of the contract inconsistent with the existence of a lien. Scarfe v. Morgan, 4 M. & W. 270; 1 H. & H. 292; 7 L. J., Ex. 324; 2 Jur. 569.

—— Expenses of Preserving Property cannot be added.]—An artificer who, in the exercise of his right of lien, detains a chattel upon which he has expended his labour and materials, has no claim against the owner for taking care of the chattel while so detained. Somes v. British Empire Shipping Co., 8 H. L. Cas. 338; 30 L. J., Q. B. 229; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 761; 8 W. R. 707.

If an owner of a chattel (for instance, a ship) knew that he must pay for dock room while his ship was undergoing repairs, and if, while he was unable to pay for those repairs, and the ship was detained in exercise of the shipwright's lien, he received notice that he must pay dock room during the detention, such facts would not create an implied contract on his part to pay it. Ib.

A workman detaining a chattel in respect of a lien for work done thereon has no claim for warehouse charges during such detention. Bruce v. Everson, 1 Cab. & E. 18.

—— What constitutes Party with Possession.]—The labour and skill employed on a race-horse by a trainer are a good foundation for a lien; but if by usage or contract the owner may send the horse to run at any race he chooses, and may select the jockey, the trainer has no continuing right of possession, and consequently no lien. Forth v. Simpson, 13 Q. B. 680; 18 L. J., Q. B. 263.

—— Tender—Only Part of Work done.]—If A. delivers a chattel to B. under a contract by the latter to perform certain work thereon at a fixed price, and before such work is completed A. countermands the order and demands the chattel from B., at the same time tendering a sum sufficient to pay for the work actually done, he will be entitled to maintain trover therefor without tendering the contract price. Lilley v. Barnsley, 1 Car. & K. 344.

6. Particular Trades.

Calico Printers.]—Calico printers have a lien for a general balance on goods delivered to them to print. Weldon v. Gould, 3 Esp. 268; 6 R. R. 832. S. P., Webb v. Foæ, Peake's Add. Cas. 167; 4 R. R. 900.

So, where calico goods are delivered to a person to have them printed, and such person delivers them to a calico printer for that purpose, to whom he is indebted, the calico printer may hold these goods against the owner, by virtue of his lien. Ib.

Semble, that, by the custom of trade in Manchester, as between calico printers and engravers, the latter have no right of general lien for balances due to them from the former. Lilley v. Barnsley, 1 Car. & K. 344.

Conveyancer.]—A certificated conveyancer is not entitled to a lien upon deeds delivered to him, and "with and in respect of" which he has done business; the business not having been done upon the deeds, or their value thereby increased. Steadman v. Hockley, 15 M. & W. 553; 15 L. J., Ex. 332; 10 Jur. 819.

Dyers.]—A dyer has no lien upon an article delivered to him to be dyed for a general balance, but only for the particular price of dyeing that article. Bennett v. Johnson, 2 Chitt. 455; 3 Dougl. 387. S. P., Green v. Farmer, 4 Burr. 2214; 1 W. Bl. 651.

But in one case at nisi prius it was held that a dyer had a lien for a general balance. Savill v. Barchard, 4 Esp. 53.

A general lien established in the bleaching trade at Nottingham. Plaice v. Allcock, 4 F. & F. 1074.

The dyers of Halifax were held to have no lien for their general balance, and that they could not retain for the price of dyeing any other than the particular goods dyed, or at most only for the dyeing of such goods as were delivered to them at one and the same time, under one entire contract. Close v. Waterhouse, 6 East, 523, n.; 8 R. R. 524, n.

But an agreement entered into by some dyers, that they would not receive any more goods to be dyed, unless they might have a lien on those goods for their general balance, is good; and a person who, after notice of it, delivers goods to be dyed, must be taken to have assented to the terms of the agreement. Kirkham v. Shawcross, 6 Term Rep. 14; 3 R. R. 103.

Factor.]—A factor has a lien both for his expenditure on the goods in his possession, and his general balance. Cowell v. Simpson, 16 Ves. 280; 10 R. R. 181.

Fullers.]—Cloths were left by a bankrupt, before his bankruptcy, with a fuller to be dressed. A balance was then due from the bankrupt to him for work done on other cloths. The assignees having tendered him the sum due for work done on the cloths in his possession, and demanded them; on his refusal to deliver them up:—Held, that he had no right to detain them for his general balance; and that the assignees were entitled to recover in an action of trover. Rose v. Hart, 2 Moore, 547; 8 Taunt. 499; 20 R. R. 533.

Proprietors of a scribbling and fulling mill stipulated that all goods on hand should be subject to a lien for a general balance. Having received certain wool and cloth of C., to be scribbled and fulled, and certain oil and dyeing materials to be used by him on the wool, for which purpose he had access to the oil and dyes in a room of which the proprietors of the mill kept the key:—Held, that goods on hand meant the yarn or cloth sent to the mill, and that they had no lien for their general balance on the oil and dyeing materials. Cumpston v. Haigh, 2 Scott, 684; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 449; 1 Hodges, 373; 5 L. J., C. P. 99.

Millers.]—An agreement that a miller should be paid in a particular manner does not deprive him of his right of lien. Chase v. Westmore, 2 Marsh. 346; 17 R. R. 301. And see S. C., 5 M. & S. 180.

Packers.]—A packer has, by custom of trade, a general lien upon all the goods of a customer in his possession or in his hands for all moneys due to him from that customer, and not merely for money owing in respect of those particular goods. Witt, In re, Shubrook, Ex parte, 45 L. J., Bk. 118; 2 Ch. D. 489; 34 L. T. 785; 24 W. R. 891—C. A.

A packer may retain goods till he is paid the price of packing, where it is usual for the packers to lend money to the clothiers, and the cloths to be a pledge, not only for the work done in packing, but for the loan of money likewise; and the goods, notwithstanding the debtor has become bankrupt, shall not be taken from the packer till his whole debt is satisfied. Secus, when goods are delivered for a particular purpose; in this case there is a specific lien upon them for the price only of what is then done to those goods. Deeze, Ex parte, 1 Atk. 228.

Printers.]—A printer employed to print certain numbers, but not all consecutive numbers of an entire work, has a lien upon the copies not delivered for his general balance due for printing the whole of those numbers. Blake v. Nicholson, 3 M. & S. 167. See Ford v. Baynton, 1 D. P. C. 357.

But a stereotype printer has no lien on stereotype plates not manufactured by himself, but put into his hands to print from them. Bleaden v. Hancock, M. & M. 465; 4 Car. & P. 152.

If a party claims a lien on plates for his bill for printing from them, in order to establish it, he must shew a course of dealing so general and uniform that persons must be supposed to form their contracts on the tacit understanding that there is such a usage. Ib.

7. In other Cases.

Distrainers.]—A distrainer has no lien upon goods taken under a distress for rent and replevied, but is left to his remedy on the replevin bond. Bradyll v. Ball, 1 Bro. C. C. 427.

Bookseller.]—A bookseller under an agreement with an author to receive a share of the profits and interest on his advances in publishing a book has a lien on the copyright for his disbursements. Brook v. Wentworth, 3 Anst. 881.

Shipwright.]—A shipwright has a lien upon a ship for repairs. Franklin v. Hosier, 4 B. & Ald. 341; 23 R. R. 305.

But a shipwright in the river Thames has no lien on a ship taken into his dock to be repaired, without an express agreement for that purpose, because by the usage of the trade the credit is always given to the owner. Raitt v. Mitchell, 4 Camp. 146.

It is otherwise where the shipwright deals for ready money. Ib.

There is a lien on a ship for repairs done abroad without any hypothecation. Halkett, Ex parte, 3 Ves. & B. 135; 2 Rose, 194.

Shipowners.] — A firm of brokers having chartered a ship advertised her as about to sail, and invited shippers to send their goods by her. Under the charterparty the captain was to have an absolute lien on the cargo for freight, dead freight and demurrage. The plaintiff, who had no notice of the charterparty, dealing with the charterers only, sent some tea on board, to be carried at a rate of freight agreed upon between himself and the charterers. Afterwards the charterers were unable to fill the ship, and so to carry out their contract with the owner, and the ship accordingly did not sail. No bills of lading for the tea had been signed, and the captain refused to sign them unless they were expressly made subject to the charterparty. The shipowner claimed a lien on the tea, for the expenses incurred by him through his dealings with the charterers:—Held, that he had no such lien, the plaintiff having had no notice of the charterparty, and there being nothing to put him on inquiry; and the tea was ordered to be given up to the plaintiff, the intended carriage thereof having failed. Peek v. Larsen, 40 L. J., Ch. 763; L. R. 12 Eq. 378; 25 L. T. 580; 19 W. R. 1045.

On Insurance Policies for Premiums.]—The lien of a broker upon policies of insurance which he has effected, and on which he has paid the premiums, may be superseded by a special arrangement or contract, or by his particular mode of dealing with the parties for whom he has effected them. But where he has merely agreed to state monthly accounts and to receive monthly payments, but has never delivered up the policies until after actual payment made to him, his general right of lien is not superseded. And this is so though he has effected the policies through an intermediary, whom he knew to be an intermediary and not the principal, and who has received payment from the principal, but who has not paid the broker. Fisher v. Smith, 48 L. J., Ex. 411; 4 App. Cas. 1; 39 L. T. 430; 27 W. R. 113—H. L. (E.)

And see INSURANCE—SHIPPING.

For Outlay and Improvements.]—See LANDLORD AND TENANT—ESTATE.

By Company on Shares.]—A company by its articles had a lien on the shares of any member for moneys due to the company from him, and might sell the shares registered in the books of the company in the name of such debtor, and apply the proceeds in discharging such debt, and might refuse to register any transfer of shares whilst the member making the transfer was indebted to the company:—Held, that "due" meant "presently payable," and consequently, that the company was not entitled to refuse to register a transfer of shares, for the reason that it held bills of the member making the transfer which had not arrived at maturity. Stockton Malleable Iron Co., In re, Chapman, Ex parte, 45 L. J., Ch. 168; 2 Ch. D. 101.

The articles of association of the company provided that they should have a "first and paramount lien" upon all the shares of a shareholder for his debts. A firm largely indebted to them became bankrupt. One of the partners as a trustee had certain shares in the company registered in his name:—Held, that the company had a lien on these shares for the debt. New London and Brazilian Bank v. Brocklebank, 51 L. J., Ch, 711; 21 Ch. D. 302; 47 L. T. 3; 30 W. R. 737—C. A.

And see COMPANY.

Validity on Bankruptcy.]—See BANKRUPTCY.

Partners—Retiring Partner on Assets.]—An agreement for the dissolution of a partnership between two traders provided that the balance due to the retiring partner should be paid partly by an immediate cash payment, and partly by weekly instalments, and the continuing partner agreed to enter into a personal bond conditioned for carrying out the terms of the agreement:—Held, that the agreement was an executory one, and that, at any rate, till the cash payment had been made and the bond had been given, the assets of the business remained joint assets, and the retiring partner was, subject to the payment of the debts due to the joint creditors, entitled to a lien upon the assets in respect of what remained due to him under the agreement. Wood, Ex parte, Wright, In re, 10 Ch. D. 554; 39 L. T. 646; 27 W. R. 401—C. A.

—— Of Surviving Partner.]—One who was a member of a partnership firm, appointed one of his surviving co-partners and another person his executors:—Held, that the surviving partner was not deprived of his right to retain assets in his hands in satisfaction of the liability of the testator to the firm, by the fact that the amount of the liability had not been ascertained, no accounts of the partnership having been taken. Morris, In re, Morris v. Morris, 44 L. J., Ch. 178; L. R. 10 Ch. 68; 31 L. T. 491; 23 W. R. 120.

—— On Rescission for Fraud.]—The plaintiff was induced by the fraud of the defendant to purchase a share of his business, and to enter into partnership with him. Judgment being given for the rescission of the agreement, and the dissolution of the partnership:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled, in respect of the purchase-money which he had paid, to a lien on the surplus of the partnership assets after satisfying the partnership debts and liabilities, and that, in respect of any sums which he had paid or might pay in satisfaction of partnership debts, he was entitled to stand in the place of the partnership creditors to whom he made the payments. Mycock v. Beatson, 49 L. J., Ch. 127; 13 Ch. D. 384; 28 W. R. 319.

See also PARTNERSHIP.

Particular Fund.]—Order to pay money out of a particular fund gives the party a specific lien thereon. Smith v. Everett, 4 Bro. C. C. 64.

Protecting and Preserving Property—Services of Police.]—Where money, the property of a deceased person who died in the city of Dublin, and was left derelict, and the Dublin metropolitan police took possession of it, and retained it in their custody until administration was taken out:—Held, that the expenses of the police in doing so were a salvage claim, payable out of the assets. Pike, In re, Burke v. Burke, 23 L. R., Ir. 9.

Banker—Special Credit.]—A letter from a banker stating that a special credit for a specified amount has been open in favour of a particular person does not constitute an equitable assignment of, or impress a trust upon, funds in the banker's hands to that amount. Morgan v. Lariviere, 44 L. J., Ch. 457; L. R. 7 H. L. 423; 32 L. T. 41; 23 W. R. 537.

L. entered into a contract in England with the French government for a supply of a large number of cartridges, to be paid for through the ambassador upon the production of certificates of approval from the agents of the government. The contract specified the times and quantities of each delivery, and time was to be of the essence of the contract. Bankers in England, who had in their hands funds belonging to the French government, wrote to L. that a special credit for 40,000*l.* had been opened in his favour, and would be paid him on receipt of the certificates. Some cartridges were supplied and paid for, others were delivered, but the certificates were refused on the ground that the contract time had expired:—Held, that the letter did not amount to an equitable assignment of the 40,000*l.*, and L. had no claim on the bankers for the price of the parcels for which certificates had been refused, as the terms of the contract, which could not be varied by parol, had not been complied with. Ib.

On Property Unsettled.]—Immediately before a marriage the intended husband signed a memorandum agreeing that certain bonds (in the memorandum called stocks), which were part of the wife's property, should be transferred to her and her son by a former marriage in trust for her,

"neither party having power to dispose of the stocks without consent of both parties to such disposal." After the marriage the husband obtained possession of part of these bonds without the consent of the son, and disposed of them:—Held, that the husband was liable to make good the amount of the bonds so disposed of by him, and that the wife and her trustee were entitled to a lien for the amount upon all her other property which remained in specie, and that the amount must be settled. Hastie v. Hastie, 2 Ch. D. 304; 34 L. T. 747; 24 W. R. 564—C. A.

Lien of Clerk to Local Board on Documents.]—Where a solicitor had been appointed clerk to a local board, with a salary, for conducting the legal as well as the ordinary business of the board, it was held by Bacon, V.-C., upon an interlocutory motion in an action for mandamus to compel production of papers, that, whatever claim the clerk might have against the board for payment of costs in respect of professional services, he had no right, being in the relation of servant to the board, to refuse production of the legal papers or other documents claimed by the board as belonging to them:—But held, by the court of appeal, that as such an order would prejudice the clerk's lien it could not be made before the trial of the action without payment into court of a sum sufficient to meet the amount claimed by the clerk, upon which he was to have the same lien as upon the papers; and the court ordered that upon that being done the clerk should deliver up to the plaintiffs all books and papers claimed in the action. Newington Local Board v. Eldridge, 12 Ch. D. 349—C. A.

Of Market Clerk.]—A bookkeeper in Smithfield market must pay money which he receives for the sale of beasts to the vendor, and cannot retain it for the private debt of the salesman employed by the vendor. Goode v. Jones, Peake, 177.

Pledge of Chattels by Factor—Rights on Bankruptcy.]—A horsedealer sent a pair of horses to a customer in exchange for another pair, for which she had paid 170*l*., but which she had returned as not being according to warranty. He requested the customer to keep the second pair until he could supply a suitable pair. She accordingly used the horses until the horsedealer became bankrupt, when it was found that the horses belonged to a third person who had intrusted them to the bankrupt on such general terms that the county court judge had held that they were in the bankrupt's order and disposition at the time of the bankruptcy, with the consent of the true owner. The customer claimed a lien upon the horses:—Held, that the bankrupt could not create such a lien, and that they must be given up to the trustee. Sillence, In re, Roy, Ex parte. 47 L. J., Bk. 36; 7 Ch. D. 70; 37 L. T. 508; 26 W. R. 82.

Lessee.]—A lessee in possession is not entitled as against his mortgagee to a lien on policy moneys, for repairs done after a fire. Garden v. Ingram, 23 L. J., Ch. 478.

Joint Owners.]—A. and B. were joint owners of a house, and A. had laid out on it moneys which he had obtained from B.:—Held, that B. had no lien on the house for the amount. Kay v. Johnston, 21 Beav. 536.

Auctioneer's Charges.]—A mortgage deed was delivered to A., an auctioneer, for the purpose of obtaining payment of the principal and interest due thereon from the mortgagor, and A. made several applications for that purpose:—Held, that A. had no lien on the deed in respect of the charge for making those applications. Sanderson v. Bell, 2 C. & M. 304; 4 Tyr. 244; 3 L. J., Ex. 66.

See also AUCTION AND AUCTIONEER.

Goods in Bond.]—A. having two pipes of wine lying in a bonded warehouse in the name of B., who had given bond for the duties, sold them to C., and gave him a delivery order, and it was at the same time agreed that C. should pay the duties. When they became payable, B. was called upon and paid them, and took away the wine to his own cellar. A. repaid the amount of duties to B.; C. never required B. to transfer the wine to his name, but he afterwards took away one pipe, and was charged with and paid warehouse rent to B.; C. afterwards became bankrupt, and his assignees demanded the other pipe:—Held, that B., at A.'s request, was entitled to keep it till the duties were paid. Winks v. Hassall, 9 B. & C. 372; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 265.

As between Creditors.]—As between debtor and creditor the doctrine of lien is so equitable that it cannot be favoured too much; but as between one class of creditors and another, there is not the same reason for favour. Jacobs v. Latour, 5 Bing. 130; 2 M. & P. 201; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 243.

By Creditor against Executor.]—When a debtor gave authority by parol to his creditor to take certain goods, passing by delivery, and to sell them, and out of the proceeds to retain his debt:—Held, that the creditor, against the administrator of the debtor, had a lien on such goods to the extent of his claim. Gurnell v. Gardner, 4 Giff. 626; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1220; 9 L. T. 367; 12 W. R. 67.

For Costs.]—Where in an action for pirating a trade mark wharfingers hold the pirated goods, semble, that the plaintiff had no lien for his costs. Moet v. Pickering, 47 L. J., Ch. 527; 8 Ch. D. 312; 38 L. T. 799; 26 W. R. 637—C. A.

Equitable Lien—"Lying by."]—The equitable rule as to the effect of a person's lying by, and allowing another to expend money on his property, does not apply where the money is expended with knowledge of the real state of the title. Rennie v. Young, 2 De G. & J. 136; 27 L. J., Ch. 753.

An equitable owner of land erected a granary thereon: he afterwards allowed his two sons to use and occupy them, and they erected other buildings thereon at a great expense:—Held, that the sons had a lien on the premises for their outlay. Unity Joint Stock Mutual Banking Association v. King, 25 Beav. 72; 27 L. J., Ch. 585; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 470; 6 W. R. 264.
